Every American Indian should be a citizen, but I do not wish to convey the idea that that will release him from wardship.

What does that mean? It means that the Indians may be citizens, given the right to a voice and a vote in the biggest business enterprise on earth, the American Government, but they should still be kept as wards for the benefit of the guardian. I maintain exactly the opposite view. No man should be an American citizen unless he is released from wardship. He should be a free man, able to act on his own intelligence and his own conscience, without fear or favor for any bureau on earth. We have plenty of group and class consciousness now in America without building up the most dangerous of all—a group of voters who depend for their prosperity upon a single bureau in a single department in Washington.

Mr. Chairman, a hundred years ago or more, President Jefferson said to an Indian delegation:

My children, I shall rejoice to see the day when the red men, our neighbors, become truly one people with us, enjoying all the rights and privileges that we do, and living in peace and plenty as we do, without anyone to make them afraid, to injure their persons, or to take their property, without being punished for it according to fixed laws.

That was early in the nineteenth century. We have now passed the second decade of the twentieth century and we have made not an inch advance toward that time visioned by the Sage of Monticello. There has been a shameful neglect, but longer delay now in the light of the facts will be infamous indeed.

Without a flag to call his own, the Indian has fought for the starry banner of his guardian. They fought by thousands to preserve the Union and free the black man in the sixties, and then went back to slavery themselves. Ten thousand Indians fought with the American Army at Chateau-Thierry and the Argonne. Twenty-five million dollars was furnished by Indians for the purchase of Liberty bonds to save the country that withheld liberty from them.

The newspapers in June, 1918, told the story of a Sioux Indian who presented himself at the registration booth in the city hall of Philadelphia to register for the draft. He carried in his hand a suitcase. His fathers once owned a great part of the United States, but he carried all his inheritance in his suitcase. He was asked if he was a citizen. "No," he replied, "I am not a citizen." "You are an alien, then?" "No," he answered. "I was born in the United States." "What are you, then?" "I am an Indian. I have neither the rights of a citizen nor an alien. My father is a full-blood Sioux chief. I offer myself for military service." The registration board finally recorded him as "Big Face, born in the United States but not a citizen."

He was accepted in the Army and went overseas. He faced the German shells. He was good enough to fight for his country, but not good enough to be a part of it. Then when he returned he was met with the Hohenzollern rule of the Indian Bureau. He might show his honorable service in the Nation's war, but that does not pass current with the bureau. He must be passed upon by the Indian Bureau agents before he could be declared competent. His share in the tribal property could not be given him. Back he goes to the reservation so that he may forget in time his glorious part in helping to make the "world safe for democracy."

There are veteran American soldiers on almost every reservation treated as serfs by arbitrary officials, seeing the flag they fought for flying over the office of an Indian Bureau agent who refuses to declare them competent citizens even though they rendered the supreme service of citizenship in the fighting line. They took a fighting chance in the Great War. They should have a fighting chance for freedom. They helped to free the world from armed brutality; we should now free them from autocratic bureaucracy.

It is clear to every observer of the actual situation that the Indian Bureau will voluntarily relinquish its throttle hold on the Indians only when every dollar of their money is spent and their property has been dissipated. When the Indians have nothing left and when Congress refuses to appropriate further funds, the Indian Bureau will decide that it is time to release control and for their gigantic organization to go out of business.

It is infamous to wait until that far-off day. This is an American problem and should be met by Congress. There is a kind of savage irony in our habit of groaning over the wrongs of the Armenians by the Turks, the harrying of the Christians in Bulgaria and the Jews in Rumania and Russia, when our own hands are stained with the blood and plunder of the original Americans.

What can be done? Give the Indian simple justice. Emancipate him from the autocratic control of a money-wasting bureau. Take the crushing burdens of bureaucracy off his back and he will walk erect, an American. [Applause.]

There are 60,000,000 acres of land in these reservations. That is more than 160 acres for every man, woman, and child of all those now within the bureau control. The wealth remaining to them aside from the land would give every Indian family of five the sum of $10,000.

The allotment of the lands and the division of the money should be made at once. The property of minors and hopeless incompetents could be administered in the courts of the various States in the same manner as those of persons other than Indians.

The Indians should be declared citizens with the rights and duties of citizens. They should be encouraged to enter industrial pursuits and not compelled to reside on reservations which in the past have been reserved for barbarism.

Will some Indians suffer in the process? Yes; but they will be freemen, suffering only as freemen do in the struggle of life. The suffering will be infinitely less than under the present system, which imperils, dwarfs, undermines, and destroys the Indians' manhood as well.

Mr. Chairman, around old Liberty Bell, the most priceless possession in America, there is an inscription which is supposed to be the message of this Republic to the world. Our Indian policy has made it read, "Proclaim liberty throughout all the land to all the inhabitants thereof—except the Indians."

On the nickels coined in the United States mints is the portrayal of an American Indian, and just in front of his eyes is that great word of America, "liberty."

It is high time that this Congress undertake to announce the date when that shameful addition to the motto of Liberty Bell shall be removed, when liberty will not be simply before the eyes of the Indians but in their secure possession. [Applause.]

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, we ought to have an understanding with regard to the division of time that is going to the opposition. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SNYDER] is in favor of this bill. He is the chairman. The minority Member on this side, the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN], is likewise in favor of the bill.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman is not entitled to the floor unless recognized by the Chair.

Mr. BLANTON. I am raising a question of privilege under the rules of the House.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman can not do that in committee.

Mr. BLANTON. I ask for recognition against the bill, if the gentleman from Arizona is in favor of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman wish to speak in opposition to the bill?

Mr. BLANTON. I do.

The CHAIRMAN. Is the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN] opposed to the bill?

Mr. HAYDEN. I am not.

The CHAIRMAN. Is any member of the committee opposed to the bill?

Mr. HAYDEN. No.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the Chair thinks it is his duty to recognize the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

Mr. BLANTON. Then I will yield half of my time to the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN], if I may be permitted to do it.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I object to the time against the bill being yielded to those for the bill. I am against the bill, and the gentleman from Texas has time against the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas has the right to yield time.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SNYDER] should yield the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. HILL] some of his time.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HILL. The gentleman in charge of the bill is for the bill, and has charge of the time for the bill, and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] made the point just now that he should have charge of the time against the bill, because he is against the bill and no member of the committee is against the bill. I want some time against the bill, and I think I am entitled to get it from the side against the bill, and not from those for the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. That is entirely beyond the jurisdiction and control of the Chair. It is the Chair's duty to recognize one in opposition to the bill if he claims recognition. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from Texas, and it is in order for him to control the time.

Mr. HILL. And it is perfectly proper for him to decline to yield time to a Member against the bill?

The CHAIRMAN. It is for him to determine if it is perfectly proper to yield time.

Mr. HILL. That is the point I wanted to make.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, is it permissible under the rules for a gentleman to announce that he is opposed to the bill and seek recognition, and then yield some 50 minutes of his time to a Member who is in favor of the bill?

The CHAIRMAN. It is up to a Member's own conscience and responsibility to decide whether that is proper or not.

Mr. BLANTON. If the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] wants time against the bill, I will yield him such time as he wants. If the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. HILL] can not get time from the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNYDER], I intend to yield him some time.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield 59 minutes of his time?

Mr. BLANTON. I will yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] 10 or 15 minutes, if he desires; or anything within reason.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. The chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs would like to know now how the time is divided.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SNYDER] has used a portion of his hour and has reserved the remainder. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] has been recognized for one hour, and is entitled to use it or yield it, as he sees fit.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I am against this bill. It is a most important measure, in that it changes and holds for naught very important rules of this House. In so far as the Indian appropriation bill is concerned, in the future when this bill becomes the law every Member of this House will have taken from him his right to have a voice in such appropriations annually, except the five Congressmen who are on the subcommittee of the Appropriations Committee that frames such supply bill.

The facts which have been so earnestly presented before us by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLY] ought to be conclusive against this measure. How he can gather such information, and understand it, and then vote for this measure is beyond my comprehension. All of the great abuses which he mentioned in his argument could be increased many times under the provisions of this bill. Concerning any expenditure desired to be made by it, however needless, however wasteful, however extravagant, all on earth the Indian Bureau would have to do would be to bring in its estimates before this subcommittee of five Congressmen on the Appropriations Committee, win them over to its way of thinking, have them put such items in the Indian appropriation bill, and the bureau would get the money, for no Congressman could make a point of order against such items because this bill makes in order everything that the subcommittee of five may see fit to put in the bill. When you deprive the 435 Congressmen of their rights under the rules of the House to make points of order against and strike from the appropriation bill items of appropriation for which there is no authority of law, and by such a bill as this give blanket authority to the five Congressmen who compose the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations to put in the Indian appropriation bill all items of appropriation they may see fit to put in same, regardless of specific law authorizing them, you make rubber stamps and mummies out of all of the other 430 Members of the House of Representatives. You might as well abolish their positions and send them home and save this waste of their salaries paid out of the Treasury. I am surprised that the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. SNYDER], who is usually very jealous of his rights being taken from him, sponsoring such a vicious measure as this—

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON (continuing). Our friend from New York usually looks with scrutinizing care upon any measure that comes before this House that has even a tendency to take from him or his committee any power, authority, or privilege. I am greatly surprised that he has brought in a measure like this. If it applied to any other department of Government other than the Indian Bureau, I feel sure that he would never have brought it upon the floor of this House.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; I yield.

Mr. SNYDER. The gentleman is entirely wrong in the statement he is making. This bill neither appropriates nor authorizes an appropriation.

Mr. BLANTON. Well, let us see about that, Mr. Chairman. I did not say that this bill appropriates anything, and I do not say that it appropriates anything. It does not. But, Mr. Chairman, it does authorize appropriations without limit or restriction. Is it possible that the distinguished chairman of this committee, the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNYDER], so little understands the provisions of his own bill, a little short bill of only two pages, that he will make the point-blank assertion that "this bill does not authorize an appropriation"? Why, that is the very purpose of this bill. Therein lies its vice and danger. For it authorizes, without limit or restriction, the five Congressmen on the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations to put into the Indian appropriation bill any and every item of appropriation that they desire to put in it, and this I will prove to any fair-minded man on this floor in a few minutes.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from New York says that this bill "neither appropriates nor authorizes an appropriation." Let me read him the caption of his bill to convince him that it "authorizes an appropriation":

A bill authorizing appropriations and expenditures for the administration of Indian affairs, and for other purposes.

Does not the above caption state that this bill is to "authorize appropriations"? Under the present rules of the House the Committee on Appropriations can only place in the Indian appropriation bill those items of appropriation which have been authorized by specific laws. If the Committee on Appropriations attempts to exceed its authority by placing in the Indian appropriation bill any items of appropriation which have not been authorized by some specific law, then any Member of this House from the floor may exercise his prerogatives as a legislator and have the provision stricken from the bill by timely making a proper point of order against it. And through such rules the Treasury is protected. And it is this right that each and every Member of the House has constitutionally under the rules of the House to thus protect the Treasury that this vicious bill now proposed seeks to deprive all of us of, for this blanket bill, if passed, will constitute specific authority and specific law authorizing the Committee on Appropriations to place in future Indian appropriation bills any and every item of appropriation they have seen fit to put in it absolutely without any limit or restriction whatever.

Why, the bill provides:

That the Bureau of Indian Affairs, under the supervision of the Secretary of the Interior, in addition to the duties now required to be performed by existing law, shall direct, supervise, and expend such moneys as Congress may from time to time appropriate, authority for which is hereby granted, or that may be available from other sources, for the benefit, care, and assistance of the Indians throughout the United States for the following purposes:

General support and civilization, including education.

For relief of distress and conservation of health.

For industrial assistance and advancement and general administration of Indian property.

For extension, improvement, operation, and maintenance of existing Indian irrigation systems and for development of water supplies.

For the enlargement, extension, improvement, and repair of the buildings and grounds of existing plants and projects.

For the employment of inspectors, supervisors, superintendents, clerks, field matrons, farmers, physicians, Indian police, Indian judges, and other employees.

For the suppression of traffic in liquor, peyote, and other deleterious drugs.

For the purchase of horse-drawn and motor-propelled passenger carrying vehicles for official use.

And for general and incidental expenses in connection with the administration of Indian affairs.

Now, Mr. Chairman, in all fairness and frankness, could there be any provisions more general in character and containing less restriction and limitation? Note that the bill says:

Shall expend such moneys as Congress may from time to time appropriate, for which authority is hereby granted, or that may be available from other sources.

Now, the only way that Congress from time to time appropriates money for the Indian Bureau is through the regular Indian appropriation bill, except what may be given it through the deficiency bill, both of which come from the Committee on Appropriations. And note in the bill the expression in blanket form—which is specific blanket law, granting specific blanket authority to the Committee on Appropriations, whose subcommittee of five frames all Indian appropriation bills, to place in same any and all items of appropriation, without limit or restriction, that they may see fit to put in such bill. Because, Mr. Chairman, each and every one of these nine purposes for which appropriations in this bill are authorized to be made are general in character and will take in the whole earth and the deep blue sea thrown in for good measure. There is no limitation—

For which authority is hereby granted—

Mr. SNYDER. The gentleman is entirely wrong about that. All that this does in the world is to—

Mr. BLANTON. Make all items of appropriations absolutely impervious to and immune from points of order. That is all this bill does. But I decline to yield to the gentleman from New York, Mr. Chairman, because he has his own time and can defend his bill in his own time. But, as I said, the whole purpose of this bill is to make all items of appropriation immune and not subject to points of order under the general rules of this House. Now, let us take up and consider separately each one of these nine purposes specified in this bill for which blanket authority to appropriate without limit or restriction is given to the Committee on Appropriations:

(1) General support and civilization, including education.

Could anything be more general, and with less limit or restriction? It is all left to the judgment of the committee. Why, the committee could decide that for "general support" they would give each Indian $20,000 a year; and for "civilization" might decide that each Indian should be permitted to attend all sessions of Congress, so as to be benefited by its civilizing influences, and under "education," the committee might decide that a $10,000,000 Indian university should be established and built in Oklahoma and in each of the numerous States now sheltering Indians, and under the first purpose specified in this bill such committee would have authority to place all of the above-mentioned items of appropriation in the Indian appropriation bill, and not a single Member could raise a point of order against any of them, because this little innocent looking but vicious bill now under consideration will be specific law for it all. Now, take the second purpose specified, authorizing appropriations:

(2) For relief of distress and conservation of health.

Under this purpose, Mr. Chairman, the committee might decide that it was necessary to build a $10,000,000 Indian hospital in Oklahoma and likewise in each one of the numerous States harboring Indians, and under this bill would be authorized to place items of appropriation for same in the Indian appropriation bill, and not a Member of the House could protect the Treasury by making a point of order against it. And under the general purpose "For relief of distress and conservation of health," the committee would be authorized to place numerous, unheard-of items of appropriation in the Indian bill, and all of us Members would be helpless. Now, take the third purpose specified, for which appropriations are authorized:

(3) For industrial assistance and advancement and general administration of Indian property.

The Indian Bureau would not want anything more general than this purpose to authorize it spending barrels of money. It will have all its numerous experts, 6,000 white employees and 12,000 Indian employees, 18,000 employees in all, to rack their brains to think of just how much it can make estimates for under this purpose, which is wholly without limitation and restriction. Why, for "industrial assistance and advancement" the committee might decide to do almost anything that costs a lot of money, involving millions of dollars annually; and under the general term "general administration of Indian property," the bureau might convince the committee that it needed 100,000 additional employees, and if granted by the committee, all Members of Congress would be helpless, with their right to make points of order against it taken from them by this bill. Now, note the fourth purpose specified, for which appropriations are authorized:

(4) For extension, improvement, operation, and maintenance of existing Indian irrigation systems and for development of water supplies.

Why, Mr. Chairman, under this head the committee could place items in the Indian appropriation bill to spend millions of dollars building irrigation dams and systems all over Oklahoma and in every one of the numerous States now harboring Indians, and none of us could stop them with points of order. Now, note the fifth purpose specified, for which appropriations are authorized by this bill:

(5) For the enlargement, extension, improvement, and repair of the buildings and grounds of existing plants and projects.

Under this purpose specified generally in the bill, Mr. Chairman, the committee would be authorized to tear down every shack used by Indians and replace same with million-dollar plants, and under the term "projects" almost anything could be done in the way of spending money out of the Treasury. And do you, colleagues, want to be hog tied and hamstrung by this bill and made absolutely helpless, so that you can not function? I do not; and, therefore, I will not support it. Note the sixth purpose specified, for which appropriations are authorized by this bill:

(6) For the employment of inspectors, supervisors, superintendents, clerks, field matrons, farmers, physicians, Indian police, Indian judges, and other employees.

Note that the above is without limit or limitation. It has no restriction whatever. All the bureau has to do is to convince this subcommittee of five Congressmen that it needs 1,000 extra inspectors, 1,000 extra supervisors, 5,000 extra superintendents, 10,000 extra clerks, 1,000 extra field matrons, 10,000 extra farmers, 1,000 extra physicians, 1,000 extra Indian police, 100 extra Indian judges, and 100,000 extra unclassified employees and the subcommittee would put the necessary items of appropriation in the Indian appropriation bill, and there would be a perfunctory vote of some ayes and a few noes and the bill would pass, and the bureau would spend the money. But note the seventh purpose specified for which appropriations are authorized by this bill:

(7) For the suppression of traffic in liquor, peyote, and other deleterious drugs.

It does not even restrict it to the suppression of intoxicating liquor, but permits the bureau to ask for and get from the subcommittee of five Congressmen unlimited amounts of money to be spent in suppressing all liquor, pot liquor, and even common water. In this connection we have another bureau which is spending millions of dollars to suppress sales and use of intoxicating liquor, and it ought to look after the Indians and all, so that there may be no duplication of this expense. Yet if this bureau convinces the subcommittee of five that it should have several hundred thousand dollars to spend under this head, we other Members would be helpless and could not stop it by points of order, as this bill will be a specific blanket law authorizing such appropriations. Now, note the eighth purpose specified for which appropriations are authorized in this bill:

(8) For the purchase of horse-drawn and motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles for official use.

Are you, colleagues of mine, going to vote for a blanket authorization of that kind? It authorizes the committee to put in the Indian appropriation bill an appropriation to furnish 10,000 Pierce-Arrow limousines for the employees of the Indian Bureau, and this bill at the same time takes from each one of us our present power we have of stopping it by making a timely point of order. Remember that this bureau has 6,000 white employees and 12,000 Indian employees. All of them will want the same kind of an automobile. I want to keep my power of using properly the point of order. And I am not going to vote it away by voting for this vicious bill. But note the ninth purpose specified for which appropriations are authorized by this bill:

(9) And for general and incidental expenses in connection with the administration of Indian affairs.

Show this to your constituents and ask them if they want you to vote such blanket authority: "For general and incidental expenses"! "Incidental expenses"! Why, Mr. Chairman, whenever a bureau chief wants to have a lot of money turned over to him that he can waste and spend extravagantly he asks for it as "incidental expenses." I am not going to vote to make any such blanket authorizations. Whenever I vote for a law that is going to authorize appropriations to be made out of the Public Treasury I am going to know all about the matter and just how much money is to be taken out and exactly how it is going to be spent and by whom it is to be spent. As I said before, this is a general blanket authority for the Subcommittee on Appropriations to put in the Indian bill just any kind of a proposal to spend money that they see fit, and all of us, by voting away our power to make points of order, are thereby making ourselves worthless as legislators and taking away from ourselves the right to function properly.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; I yield.

Mr. ANDREWS. Would not a good title for this bill be "A bill to prevent the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs from raising points of order on the Indian appropriation bill"?

Mr. BLANTON. No. That is a facetious question. For it prevents each and every Member of the House from making points of order against such items of appropriation.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The gentleman criticizes the title of the bill, that it authorizes appropriations.

Mr. BLANTON. No; I never made that criticism of the bill. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SNYDER] said this bill does not authorize appropriations. I have read the title of the bill to show that the title itself was against the statement made by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The bill is really, is it not, a bill to give the Bureau of Indian Affairs, under the supervision of the Secretary of the Interior—and that means the chief of the Bureau of Indian Affairs—the absolute right in his discretion to spend all of this money?

Mr. BLANTON. To spend every single dollar that Congress will give him through the action of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Yes. Now, then, one moment. It says:

For the purchase of horse-drawn, motor-propelled, passenger-carrying vehicles for official use.

He can buy as many as he pleases?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; if they gave him the money. All on earth the Indian Bureau will have to do is to convince the subcommittee of five Congressmen that it needs 10,000 cars and it would get them.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. And there is no provision in this bill for any report by him as to the way he has spent the money, but he is required to make an annual estimate for the consideration of Congress but not a report of his expenditures.

Mr. BLANTON. I am glad that there is at least one gentleman on that side of the aisle that is now in power and that has the machinery of the Government in its charge who has a clear brain and who can see what the English language means in this bill, because the gentleman from Wisconsin has interpreted what this bill really means. What are you going to do? Are you going to just keep on passing this kind of blanket measure? Would you pass this kind of a measure with respect to any other bureau or department of the Government? I would not, and I am not going to vote for this kind of a measure, even for the Indians, and God knows I would do as much for the Indians as anybody else would.

I would do as much as any other American citizen to discharge the debt and obligation that we owe to the American Indians; but the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLY] has demonstrated that the Indian gets very little of the benefit of all these enormous sums that are spent for the Indian Bureau. Much of it is in overhead, and I want to state that we can stop that by points of order when they are not authorized by law. Here is a blanket provision that gives the subcommittee authority to put in Indian bills any amount of money that they see fit to expend, on any kind of a subject that comes under these general heads. As I said before, these general heads will take in every kind of subject of expenditure known under God's heaven and you can not stop them from it if they get their hands on the money.

Mr. HILL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield to the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. HILL. The expenses in 1920 were $15,000,000.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; and in 1887 they were $5,000,000, and they have been increased $10,000,000 in that length of time, when they should have been decreasing instead of increasing.

I yield to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. HILL] 10 minutes, and then reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, I should not speak against this bill unless at this time it raised one of the most important questions before our Government, the question of proper departmental reorganization. Our party is pledged to prompt and careful reorganization of the departments of the Government, and here is one of the bureaus of the Government—the Bureau of Indian Affairs—a byway bureau of the Government of which the great mass of the American people know absolutely nothing, which, in my opinion, should not be granted any additional power.

Mr. SNYDER. Will the gentleman yield right there? I should just like to say to the gentleman that this bill does not grant any additional powers to the bureau—no power that it does not now have.

Mr. MONDELL. Whereabouts in the bill does the gentleman find any additional power or authority given to the Bureau of Indian Affairs?

Mr. HILL. Among other places, in lines 14 and 15, page 2, for the purchase of horse-drawn and motor-propelled vehicles for official use.

Mr. MONDELL. All that does is to give the appropriating committee of Congress the right to appropriate for horse-drawn vehicles.

Mr. CARTER. The right to recommend an appropriation.

Mr. MONDELL. I mean the right to recommend appropriations—to report a bill appropriating for this purpose. It does not give the bureau any authority.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HILL. I would rather not.

Mr. MANN. Perhaps I can help the gentleman.

Mr. HILL. I would rather not yield now. If the Government at this time has any well-defined policy as to the Indians it is to break up the tribal government and fit them for individual citizenship as soon as possible. We spent $5,000,000 in 1887 and $15,000,000 in 1920 for the Bureau of Indian Affairs.

The census of 1860 showed 254,300 Indians in the United States. The census of 1910 showed an Indian population of 304,950. These Indians mostly live on Government reservations, which Secretary of the Interior Lane aptly designated as "little more than expanded and perhaps somewhat idealized orphan asylums." The importance of the present Indian problem may be seen from the fact that at present they have lands aggregating 109,150 square miles, or territory equal to that of Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Kentucky, and Virginia.

The Department of the Interior estimated in 1914 these holdings to be worth $600,000,000. Over two-thirds of this land is now held as individual farms, the unallotted or tribal lands being estimated as worth nearly $200,000,000 in 1914. I understand that situation has not materially changed since that time.

Secretary Lane, in his report for 1914, says:

If the oil and coal and timber lands belonging to the Indians were appraised at their full value, and if to this the value of their yieldings and personal property were added, it is estimated that the Indians would be found to have a wealth approximating $900,000,000.

In other words, applying the report of the Secretary of the Interior for 1914, each Indian in the United States at the present time would be worth on an average $3,000. In addition to these possessions—my authority is the report of the Secretary of the Interior for 1914—the Treasury of the United States has tribal funds approximating $50,000,000, while in the banks throughout the Nation the Government has deposited to the credit of individual Indians under its control something over $18,000,000.

The Secretary of the Interior says that the Osage Indians are the wealthiest people in the world. The department said in 1914 that the average wealth of the Osage Indian was $9,579.85. With their land holdings and their gas and oil royalties for an average family of four, the Osage Indian has an income of $2,700 in addition to the income from land.

Mr. CARTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HILL. Not now. I will yield to the gentleman later. Some families have an income of $12,000 a year. In view of the only Indian policy the United States has ever had, the policy of returning them to equal citizenship with other citizens, I believe that we should not at this time, especially in view of the pending departmental reorganization, do anything more to keep up the present system of $15,000,000 a year Indian control. Now, I will yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. CARTER. The gentleman said that the Osage wealth was $9,000 per capita. The Osages receive something like $10,000 a year.

Mr. SNYDER. More than that.

Mr. CARTER. Their wealth is immensely more than that.

Mr. HILL. That increases the difficulty, and I did not get the riches of the Osages high enough.

Mr. ELSTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HILL. I will.

Mr. ELSTON. The gentleman from Maryland does not wish to establish in the bureau any new power, but wishes it to remain as it is now?

Mr. HILL. I wish to see the present Indian Bureau abolished as quickly as it is possible.

Mr. ELSTON. In the meantime he wants the Indian Bureau without any due activity to function?

Mr. HILL. In the meantime I do not wish to see that functions increase.

Mr. ELSTON. Does not the gentleman wish to see it function in the matter of education?

Mr. HILL. I do not wish to see it function any further. I want to save $15,000,000 a year and put the Indian on an independent basis.

Mr. ELSTON. It can not function under authority of law unless we pass this bill. Does the gentleman from Maryland want to see the present hospitals abolished?

Mr. HILL. As quickly as possible.

Mr. ELSTON. Does the gentleman think they should be continued until they are abolished?

Mr. HILL. Yes.

Mr. ELSTON. How are they going to function unless authorized by Congress?

Mr. HILL. I am opposed to all these improvements, irrigation and building additional buildings.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Maryland has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. LINEBERGER].

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. LINEBERGER].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. LINEBERGER. Mr. Chairman, I shall not use all my time.

It is unfortunate that Members of the House who are as vitally interested in all legislation affecting ex-soldiers, and particularly the wounded and maimed of the World War, as are the ex-service men who are Members of this House and many other Members, should be forced by a combination of political and parliamentary circumstances to express their opinions on the conference report of House bill 6611, entitled "An act to establish in the Treasury Department, a veteran's bureau, and to improve the facilities and service of said veterans' bureau to amend and modify the war risk insurance act," by speaking out of order or through the medium of an extension of remarks.

The necessity for this method of expression rather than a free and fair discussion of the question on the floor of the House at the time the conference report was before us was necessitated by the fact that the distinguished gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SWEET], whose name the bill bears, moved the previous question and thereby precluded all discussion of what many of us believed to be very vital sections of this bill.

One provision of the conference report, and I will mention only one, is particularly obnoxious, not only to the ex-service men of this House, but to a vast majority of the Members who sympathize with a fair and sane treatment of the disabled. [Applause.]

I refer particularly to the refusal of the House conferees to concur in Senate amendment No. 56, which provides that:

If the disabled veteran is so helpless as to be in constant need of a nurse or attendant, such additional sum shall be paid, but not exceeding $50 per month, as the director may deem reasonable.

The law now provides $20 per month, and this proposed amendment inserted by the Senate would have increased the amount from $20 to a possible $50 per month.

We can not understand why our House conferees should have refused to concur in this amendment, thereby forcing a recession on the part of the Senate conferees. We feel that such an attitude on the part of our conferees is unfair to the totally and permanently disabled, and that it is not in consonance with the sentiment of the whole country to go the extreme limit in doing everything possible to provide the necessary comforts for those who have made all but the last sacrifice for their country.

The cry of economy has been raised. Any attempt to economize at the expense of the wounded and maimed veterans of this Nation is unfitting of the American Congress and a serious reflection upon the gratitude and worthiness of the American people. [Applause.]

Two Republicans, which included the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SWEET], the author of the bill, and his colleague from New York [Mr. PARKER], according to information which I consider to be reliable, were consistently in favor of the Senate amendment, but were voted down in conference.

I do not criticize my colleagues and I do not wish to be unfair, but I can not understand, and the helpless ex-service man can not understand, why the gentlemen who opposed the Senate amendment so uncompromisingly should be so overwhelmed with their sense of responsibility and economy as to insist on a recession that would save the Government possibly $30 a month on the comparatively few helpless veterans affected by the deceased amendment. The country demands economy, but not this kind of economy.

Perhaps they can explain it to their constituents.

I can not, nor would I attempt to do so. The ex-service men of my district, because I am of them and for them, know where I stand, as do the rest of my constituency.

I also desire to raise my voice in protest against the practice of bringing in a conference report, such as the one to which I have referred, wherein important changes have been made by the conferees, without permitting some discussion on the floor of this House of the merits or demerits of the agreements which have been made. [Applause.]

This bill came in from conference absolutely sewed up; and when the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SWEET] moved the previous question, all debate was prevented and the gag rule was on.

It seems to be the idea among the conferees that they can bring in these bills saturated with provisions, or a suppression of provisions, which are distasteful, oftentimes, to a majority of the Members of the House and then force a favorable vote on the part of the Members by precluding debate by what is really a mild but nevertheless effective means of intimidation and coercion. I am glad to know that there are at least a few Members of the House who will not stand for this sort of thing and who will vote against a bill, even though they favor its general provisions, as a protest against this practice.

It was in this consciousness and with this feeling that I have voted against the Sweet bill. I should not have done so had I felt that the bill would have failed to carry on account of my negative vote, but having been shut off from debate I have been forced to this attitude as the only means of protest against what I consider to be a flagrant betrayal of the needs of the disabled, helpless ex-service men in reducing the amount allowed for nurse hire from a possible $50 to $20 a month.

In this I have been joined by my colleague, comrade, and friend, Representative HAMILTON FISH, Jr., of New York. We feel that it will be a great deal easier for us to explain to the veterans of the country why we were forced to vote against this bill in protest than it will be for some of you gentlemen to explain to them why—in your zealotness to railroad this bill through along with the refusal of the conferees to concur with the Senate amendment to which I have referred—you forced us into the attitude we have taken, which is not one of opposition to the bill itself but of protest at the tactics and methods of some of the conferees.

The distinguished floor leader of the House [Mr. MONDELL] made a very fair and able speech, in which he referred to the $475,000,000 per year being paid out by the Government in behalf of the disabled veterans. I approved of many of the things he said, but I think our leader was most unfortunate in the choice of his words, and that his reference to the "generosity" on the part of the Government toward the wounded and disabled might have well been left unsaid.

He did not state that the disabled men have paid in large measure, by reason of the premiums they have paid on their insurance policies, and so forth, for the benefits they are receiving. For the information of the House it would have proven very desirable had he taken the time to go deeper into the matter and tell us how much further the Government would have had to extend its generosity (?) in order to have permitted the Senate amendment of a possible $50 per month to remain for the care of the helpless, instead of retaining the $20 per month as provided in the bill as passed.

I am a Republican through and through, and I yield to no man in this House in party loyalty, but it is for the very reason that I am a good Republican that I do not like to see my party permit certain members of the conference committee to force it into such a questionable attitude as it has been forced into by the blind adoption of this conference report. It is our duty to be for our party, but it is also our duty to see that our party is always right, so that we will not be called upon to be for our party "right or wrong." [Applause.]

My colleague [Mr. FISH] sounded a word of warning in an article appearing under his name in the Washington Herald of August 2, 1921. I believe, without passing on the merits or demerits of some of the statements which my colleague in his sincerity and independence has had the temerity to voice, that there is ample food for thought in the same. [Applause.] [Beginning of extension of remarks.] I hope that every Member of the House will take the time to read this article, as I have been subsequently prohibited from including the same in my remarks because of the objection made by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SANDERS]. Perhaps the gentleman "belongs to the union" for preventing, as far as possible, the House from reading or listening to views that do not agree with his own on this important subject. [End of extension of remarks.] There is an old saying that "he who runs may read." I presume the word "run" applies to a political race as well as to those who aspire to the marathon in the Olympic games. [Applause.]

Perhaps a greater desire on the part of the House membership to permit a free and fair discussion on matters such as the Sweet bill conference report would minimize the likelihood of Members being forced into the papers of the country to express their views on vital questions, whereas, without doubt, it would be much more desirable to have them discussed on the floor of the House and given to the country through the medium of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, which is the medium which the Congress has provided for such expression on the part of its membership. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the rest of my time to the gentleman from New York.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California yields back four minutes. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN] for one hour.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER].

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman and gentleman of the committee, in view of the turn that this debate has taken and the distance it has drifted afield, it might be well enough to call attention of gentlemen to what this bill really does. This bill does not undertake the enlargement or creation of a single activity which is not now in operation by the Indian Bureau. It simply provides for making certain appropriations in order for activities which have been carried along from year to year by appropriations of money for that year without any specific authorization for the work.

The Indian Bureau was established in 1832, then in the War Department. Its functions were very limited to start with. The only thing they undertook to do to begin with was to put the Indian on a reservation and hold him in restraint to prevent his encroaching on what was considered the white man's rights. Later on, the bureau was transferred to the Interior Department. Still later, a Board of Indian Commissioners was established, then inspectors, then certain agencies with agents, superintendents, clerks, and so forth. Later, schools were authorized with teachers and other employees. Then, again, certain other commissioners, special agents, and interpreters were authorized and various special acts, treaties, and agreements provided from time to time for appropriations for certain specific tribes.

But the difficulty is that no general authorization has been made for many of the Indian Bureau agencies. Like Topsy, "they just grew." An epidemic would break out on some certain reservation and without objection an item would be inserted in the current appropriation bill for its suppression and control. Next, certain Indians would be found wanting to farm but without necessary farming implements and stock, so an industrial item would be inserted and no point of order raised against that. Thus the system grew up, and these different agencies were established by the simple insertion of an appropriation in the annual appropriation act without the passage of any organic act authorizing them.

These appropriations were carried along from year to year so long as the Indian Committee had jurisdiction of appropriations without much friction. But when all appropriations were concentrated in the Committee on Appropriations then the fun began. Before this change the Indian Committee had both legislative and appropriating jurisdiction, and when that committee brought in these unauthorized items points of order were rarely insisted upon because no committee jurisdiction was transgressed and no other committee felt sufficiently aggrieved to kick up the row. When appropriation jurisdiction was taken away from the Indian Committee and the Appropriations Committee brought in their bill carrying these unauthorized propositions that constituted a clear invasion of committee jurisdiction, the Indian Committee rebelled and its membership—particularly the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNYDER] and myself—raised considerable fuss, resulting in the Indian bill being stripped until, when it reached the Senate, it somewhat resembled "September Morn." [Laughter.] It is true these items were nearly all restored in the Senate, brought back to the House and many of them voted on separately, but the House did not get to consider them under the 5-minute rule.

The purpose of this bill is to cure these defects, and that is all the bill does or undertakes to do.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. For instance, take the subsection on lines 16 and 17 on page 2—

And for general and incidental expenses in connection with the administration of Indian affairs.

That takes in everything.

Mr. CARTER. That takes in general incidental expenses. Yes; that covers a great many things.

Mr. LAYTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER. Yes.

Mr. LAYTON. I do not profess to know anything about the Indian question except as a general reader, and I assume that the gentleman does know particularly and personally something about it. What I want to know is, When will the time come when we can gradually let the tribes come into the body politic and develop themselves and comport themselves as any other foreign element may do? Is there going to be no end to the operations of the Indian Bureau? It is now nearly 100 years since the bureau was established:

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, that time will come when all Indians are made citizens of the United States, first. That is the first step. Another important step is to educate and civilize every Indian to the point where he is able to meet his white brother on equal terms.

Mr. LAYTON. That is not the basis of citizenship.

Mr. CARTER. My friend says that is not the basis of citizenship. If it is not, then I have no conception of what good citizenship is.

Mr. LAYTON. It is the theoretical basis of citizenship.

Mr. CARTER. It is easy to make assertions, but my friend's assertion is not backed up by any authorities on citizenship on the face of the earth, so far as I know. This thing of good citizenship that we are trying to bring the Indian to is to make him, if possible, the equal of the white man.

Mr. LAYTON rose.

Mr. CARTER. Oh, do not interrupt me now. I want to finish this statement. Of course, we do not expect to make every one the equal of my distinguished friend, but it is hoped that a few of them may even aspire to that. What I mean is that the Indians must be raised to the white man's plane of civilization.

Mr. LAYTON. I only just wanted to say in controverting the gentleman's statement, and rather in substantiation of my own, that there were something like 5,000,000 people admitted to citizenship and to voting in this country, and I am sure they did not have an educational qualification.

Mr. CARTER. We had a bill here last Congress granting citizenship to all Indians, and releasing a great many from governmental supervision, which was a long step. I do not know whether the gentleman voted for it or not, but he had an opportunity to do so. I would like to know whether the gentleman was present and voted for that bill or not.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER. Just a moment. I want to know whether the gentleman from Delaware voted for that bill?

Mr. LAYTON. I can not tell.

Mr. CARTER. That shows right there, Mr. Chairman, why there is no better solving of the Indian question. Here the gentleman complains against a wrong, against something that is going on, and says something else ought to be done, and when I ask him if he took advantage of an opportunity to rectify that wrong, he can not tell me.

Mr. LAYTON. The gentleman must not put words in my mouth. I had no complaint to make; I only ask the gentleman for a little information.

Mr. CARTER. The gentleman was complaining, and I think he complained justly.

Mr. LAYTON. But I am not complaining.

Mr. CARTER. The gentleman complains that the Indian question was not settled, and he said it had been going on for a hundred years.

Mr. LAYTON. Oh, no.

Mr. CARTER. The gentleman certainly said that it had been going on for a hundred years.

Mr. LAYTON. And it has.

Mr. CARTER. And that he would like to know when, if ever, this thing was going to come to an end.

Mr. LAYTON. In the gentleman's opinion.

Mr. CARTER. In my opinion, it will come to an end when gentlemen like the gentleman himself, a distinguished Congressman, give a little more consideration to the solving of the problem.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield now?

Mr. CARTER. Yes.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Just along that line, I voted for the citizenship bill, as the gentleman knows.

Mr. CARTER. I remember the gentleman did.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Is it possible under the reservation system of schools, of the sixth grade, to elevate the Indian child to the level of the white child?

Mr. CARTER. With some of them it is not, because some of them do not speak the English language.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Is not the fault with the reservation school system?

Mr. CARTER. That perhaps may be true.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman five minutes more.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I want now to talk about the bill. This bill will do something toward solving the Indian problem, because this will permit appropriations to be made somewhat more intelligently. It will permit appropriations to be made for the activities for which they should be made in order that the problem may be worked out.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER. If the gentleman will make it short.

Mr. ANDREWS. Will this bill do anything more than to prevent points of order on the Indian appropriation bill?

Mr. CARTER. Absolutely nothing else. It does not start a single additional agency in the Bureau of Indian Affairs, it does not enlarge their activities, and does not create any new activities. It does nothing more than protect the committee reporting the bill against the whims and peevishness of some Member attacking the bill. For instance, it might prevent my good friend from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] from reserving a point of order so as to get time to make a speech, and we all know how well he does love to make a speech. He makes some very good ones and I enjoy them very much, but I do not want him to be able to tear a bill to pieces just simply to relieve himself of a speech. My friend from Texas calls attention to the general and incidental expense item. It is broad, it is true, but it is the similar provision to that carried in several other bills. Another gentleman complained about the authorization of—

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER. In a moment. Complained about the authorization for the purchase of motor and other vehicles. There is not a man who ever visited an Indian reservation but who knows that the old cheap automobile they have on an Indian reservation is about the most serviceable thing they have there. It enables one man to cover more ground and do more real field work than three or four men without this conveyance.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. CARTER. Will the gentleman yield me one more minute?

Mr. HAYDEN. I yield the gentleman one minute.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. I understand that objections to items in the former bills practically tore that bill to pieces. Is there any recourse to the subject matter which was not taken care of—is there any recourse—

Mr. CARTER. Yes; the only recourse is this, so far as the House is concerned: The bill went to the Senate, and those items were added in the Senate and came back to the House. The House had recourse under this rule of a separate vote on each item if it so desired.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. But now the House would have no recourse?

Mr. CARTER. Oh, absolutely none save that. The man in charge of the Indian appropriation bill will be at the mercy of any one man in the House who wants to hold him up.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. I understand; but if this bill be passed, then the appropriation bill will go through without the House having the recourse of taking any item out—

Mr. CARTER. No; the House can take out any item it wants to by a majority vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. SNYDER. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL]. [Applause.]

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, for a long time the committees of the House, having both appropriating and legislative jurisdiction, failed to guard the items of their appropriation bills by legislation—I do not say this in criticism; I simply state it as a fact—with the result that in the last Congress, when the authority to appropriate was vested exclusively in the Committee on Appropriations and gentlemen became somewhat critical of the make-up of the bills by reason of that fact, we were made painfully aware that points of order could be successfully made against many items in a number of appropriation bills which had been reported formerly from those committees which had joint legislative and appropriating authority. The Indian bill left this House as full of holes as a skimmer, and the items which went out were not extraordinary, unusual, or debatable items. They were the usual ordinary essential items of the bill, items which everyone admitted must be in the bill if the Indian Service was to be cared for, items with regard to which the only question ordinarily would be as to the sum to be carried. It became very evident that if we were to continue under the new rule relative to appropriations, or if we were to return to the old practice in the matter of appropriation, in any case, the questions of points of order having been raised, it would be necessary to protect our appropriation bills in the matter of the usual ordinary, necessary, essential items. This is the first bill that has been presented to the House for that purpose. I am sure it was not the intent of the framers of this bill to unduly increase the jurisdiction of the Appropriation Committee. The bill was reported by the Indian Committee, so we must assume that committee intended to protect its legislative authority in framing the bill.

The committee did, on the other hand, endeavor to draft a bill broadening the fundamental law of the bureau sufficiently to make in order the usual essential items on an Indian appropriation bill. As we come to the various paragraphs of the bill there may be found ground for difference of opinion as to whether they are, some of them, at least, a little too narrow or a little too broad. When the bill was first introduced I called the attention of the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNYDER], to the fact that one paragraph in the bill was, in my opinion, too broad. It took from the Indian Committee jurisdiction which it should retain and gave it to the Appropriations Committee. The bill, as originally introduced, authorized appropriations for "hospitals or other buildings," and under a liberal interpretation of that provision it would have been possible for the Appropriations Committee to have reported an item for a new hospital, and I am not so sure whether or no under the language "and other buildings" the committee could not have reported items for new Indian schools or for new institutions of any sort properly coming under the jurisdiction of the Indian Bureau.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman from New York give me three minutes more?

Mr. SNYDER. I really have not got it.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN] give it to me?

Mr. HAYDEN. I will yield one minute to the gentleman.

Mr. MONDELL. At my suggestion that paragraph was so modified that it authorizes the Appropriations Committee to provide for "the enlargement, improvement, and repair of buildings and grounds of existing plants and projects." I think that language will probably meet with the approval of the House, although suggestions may be made as to its further modification. That paragraph and all the other paragraphs were drawn for the purpose of giving authority to appropriate for those things which the appropriating committees have ordinarily appropriated for without any question, and yet not going far enough to impinge upon, to lessen, to reduce the proper jurisdiction and authority of the Indian Committee. Whatever gentlemen may think as to the language of any particular one of the paragraphs in this bill, it is highly important that legislation along these lines be enacted into law before we report our next appropriation bill.

Mr. HILL. Will the gentleman yield for just one question?

Mr. MONDELL. If I have time.

Mr. HILL. Then it would not be inconsistent for one who opposed this bureau and wanted it abolished as soon as possible to vote for this bill?

Mr. MONDELL. Not necessarily.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON].

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Chairman, Mr. Thomas B. Reed, at one time Speaker of this House, made the remark that in proportion to the amount contained in it the Indian appropriation bill carried more of waste and of graft than any other branch of public expenditure.

In the session of 1902-3 I gave very considerable attention to the whole system and made elaborate remarks in the month of January. I am conscious that much of my information is out of date, but I reached certain conclusions at that time which are equally correct now, as I believe. In the first place, this country has been generous to a fault in the treatment of the red man. In the next place, its policy, prompted in great measure by that generosity, has been demoralizing to the Indian, destroying initiative and interfering with his wholesome progress, and at the same time has been characterized by extravagance on the part of the white man and the creation of relations which are not best for either.

I wish especially to set forth the large appropriations which we have in recent years been making for the Indian tribes of this country. The number of the Indians, according to the census of 1920, was 336,000; to speak exactly, perhaps, 336,331. The appropriations from year to year have varied from $10,000,000 to $11,000,000, averaging per capita about $32 for every Indian dwelling within the limits of the continental United States. If equal appropriations per capita had been devoted to purposes of general development, aside from the Army and Navy, preparation for war, and cost of prior wars, it would mean that $3,500,000,000 would have been appropriated by the Federal Government for the building of roads, for rivers and harbors, and for other improvements—things that add to the welfare of the people. Now, it is unnecessary for me to say that this is five or six times as great an amount as we did appropriate for such purposes. And I may call attention to the fact that for the first 42 years of the life of this Government, from 1789 to 1832, we appropriated only about $8,900,000 for the support and maintenance of the Indian tribes, and that notwithstanding numerous treaties with them which involved compensation. Thus, there stands out as a most notable fact the very large amounts we have been expending for the Indian tribes.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Was that the amount expended for 72 years?

Mr. BURTON. Forty-two years—from 1789 to 1832.

Are the Indians so bad off? In considering this question it is necessary to take into account that they have been located on reservations where the land is very poor in some cases and on others very rich, not only for agricultural purposes but more especially in minerals. The total value of Indian property, as estimated last year, both tribal and individual, was stated by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs as $761,000,000. But we must add to that a careful estimate of the value of the oil lands of the Osage Indians, $700,000,000, and of the Five Civilized Tribes, $850,000,000, making a total value of Indian property of $2,311,000,000. So that the average wealth of the Indians of this country is about $7,000 apiece. The condition of the Osages seems almost fabulous. The 2,100 members are entitled to an income from oil and gas and other sources to the amount of $10,000 apiece. And yet when I made some remarks on this floor in the year 1903 the Federal Government was paying for their schools, was paying for their every expense. But I have been very glad to see that there has been very substantial reforms made since that time.

Now, this system of coddling the Indian and pampering him and keeping him everlastingly in leading strings has prevented his taking the place that he naturally would take in the citizenship of this country. I am not one of those who for a minute approves of that saying that "the best Indian is a dead Indian." When I was a boy at school I did not accept the boys' superstition that there were Indians in the moon. They have great capacity, physical strength, and intellectual powers as well. In this late war 150 medals were granted to them. At one time I was present at Muskogee, the residence of the lady Member of this House, attending church in the afternoon, and the clergyman was a half-breed Indian. A call that I received from a leading citizen was from a half-breed Indian, also, and there were full-blood Indians all around in that neighborhood who were making progress and doing well.

But what are you doing? Keeping him on the reservation. And you have built up a system of bureaucracy the object of which is to maintain those reservations, to maintain the tribal relations, and the indirect, if not the direct, effect of it is to prevent growth in the civilization of the American Indian.

There is no people on the globe that ever attained a high grade of civilization or strength, except they were left to work out their problems for themselves; and just so long as the Indian is kept in this tutelage it means that his future if not black will be unprogressive.

Now, I do not know what can be done in regard to this Indian Bureau. We can not scrap it; we can not abolish these schools. We can not take any of the radical steps that have been advised by many, but we can change our policy, and I am very glad to note that there have been material changes made since 1903, when I last examined this question. In the first place, those tribes which have such large amounts are setting apart a portion of their income. I mentioned at that time that they were paid 5 per cent on all the Indian funds on deposit in the Federal Treasury, while we were issuing bonds at 2 per cent. Those were the halcyon days with respect to the issue of bonds of the United States at a low rate. We give them a preferential status in courts, and the United States has always been just, or has tried to be just, to the Indians.

Mr. CONNELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURTON. Yes.

Mr. CONNELL. Is it true that the wealth of the Indian is a great deal higher than the wealth of the average white man in this country?

Mr. BURTON. It is. At different times I have given a good deal of attention to the question of the aggregate wealth of this country and other countries. All estimates are more or less fanciful. The wealth of Great Britain at the beginning of the Great War was set down at $80,000,000,000; that of Germany, $80,000,000,000; France, $60,000,000,000; the United States about $225,000,000,000, which would be somewhat in excess of $2,000 per capita. There is no question but that the average wealth of the Indians of this country, $7,000 apiece, is much in excess of that of the white inhabitants, but, as I said before, it is very unequally divided.

Now, I trust that the schools and other bureaus have done better work than they formerly did. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, to insert some documents and somewhat enlarge my remarks for lack of time. I may also desire to insert an extract from a report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BURTON. This report for the year 1901 contained this statement:

WELL-MEANT MISTAKES.

In the last annual report some attention was given to the obstacles in the way of the Indian toward independence and self-support, and three of the most important were pointed out and made the subject of discussion. It was shown that the indiscriminate issue of rations was an effectual barrier to civilization; that the periodical distribution of large sums of money was demoralizing in the extreme, and that the general leasing of allotments instead of benefiting the Indians, as originally intended, only contributed to their demoralization.

Further observation and reflection leads to the unwelcome conviction that another obstacle may be added to these already named, and that is education. It is to be distinctly understood that it is not meant by this to condemn education in the abstract—far from it; its advantages are too many and too apparent to need any demonstration here.

Neither is it meant as a criticism upon the conduct or management of any particular school or schools now in operation. What is meant is that the present Indian educational system, taken as a whole, is not calculated to produce the results so earnestly claimed for it and so hopefully anticipated when it was begun.

No doubt this idea will be received with some surprise, and expressions of dissent will doubtless spring at once to the lips of many of those engaged or interested in Indian work. Nevertheless, a brief view of the plan in vogue will, it is believed, convince the most skeptical that the idea is correct.

There are in operation at the present time 113 boarding schools, with an average attendance of something over 16,000 pupils, ranging from 5 to 21 years old. These pupils are gathered from the cabin, the wigwag, and the tepee. Partly by cajolery and partly by threats, partly by bribery and partly by fraud, partly by persuasion and partly by force, they are induced to leave their homes and their kindred to enter these schools and take upon themselves the outward semblance of civilized life. They are chosen not on account of any particular merit of their own, not by reason of mental fitness, but solely because they have Indian blood in their veins. Without regard to their worldly condition, without any previous training, without any preparation whatever, they are transported to the schools—sometimes thousands of miles away—without the slightest expense or trouble to themselves or their people.

The Indian youth finds himself at once, as if by magic, translated from a state of poverty to one of affluence. He is well fed and clothed and lodged. Books and all the accessories of learning are given him and teachers provided to instruct him. He is educated in the industrial arts on the one hand, and not only in the rudiments but in the liberal arts on the other. Beyond "the three R's" he is instructed in geography, grammar, and history; he is taught drawing, algebra and geometry, music, and astronomy, and receives lessons in physiology, botany, and entomology. Matrons wait on him while he is well and physicians and nurses attend him when he is sick. A steam laundry does his washing and the latest modern appliances do his cooking. A library affords him relaxation for his leisure hours, athletic sports and the gymnasium furnish him exercise and recreation, while music entertains him in the evening. He has hot and cold baths and steam heat and electric light and all the modern conveniences. All of the necessities of life are given him and many of the luxuries. All of this without money and without price or the contribution of a single effort of his own or of his people. His wants are all supplied almost for the wish. The child of the wigwag becomes a modern Aladdin, who has only to rub the Government lamp to gratify his desires.

Here he remains until his education is finished, when he is returned to his home—which by contrast must seem squalid indeed—to the parents whom his education must make it difficult to honor, and left to make his way against the ignorance and bigotry of his tribe. Is it any wonder he fails? Is it surprising if he lapses into barbarism? Not having earned his education, it is not appreciated; having made no sacrifice to obtain it, it is not valued. It is looked upon as a right and not as a privilege; it is accepted as a favor to the Government and not to the recipient, and the almost inevitable tendency is to encourage dependence, foster pride, and create a spirit of arrogance and selfishness. The testimony on this point of those closely connected with the Indian employees of the service would, it is believed, be interesting.

It is not denied that some good flows from this system. It would be singular if there did not after all the effort that has been made and the money that has been lavished.

In the last 20 years fully $45,000,000 have been spent by the Government alone for the education of Indian pupils, and it is a liberal estimate to put the number of those so educated at not over 20,000. If the present rate is continued for another 20 years it will take over $70,000,000 more.

But while it is not denied that the system has produced some good results, it is seriously questioned whether it is calculated to accomplish the great end in view, which is not so much the education of the individual as the lifting up of the race.

It is contended, and with reason, that with the same effect and much less expenditure applied locally or to the family circle far greater and much more beneficial results could have been obtained and the tribes would have been in a much more advanced stage of civilization than at present.

On the other hand, it is said that the stream of returning pupils carries with it the refining influence of the schools and operates to elevate the people. Doubtless this is true of individual cases and it may have some faint influence on the tribes. But will it ever sufficiently leaven the entire mass? It is doubtful. It may be possible in time to purify a fountain by cleansing its turbid waters as they pour forth and then returning them to their original source. But experience is against it. For centuries pure fresh-water streams have poured their floods into the Great Salt Lake, and its waters are salt still.

What, then, shall be done? And this inquiry brings into prominence at once the whole Indian question.

It may be well first to take a glance at what has been done. For about a generation the Government has been taking a very active interest in the welfare of the Indian. In that time he has been located on reservations and fed and clothed; he has been supplied lavishly with utensils and means to earn his living, with materials for his dwelling and articles to furnish it; his children have been educated and money has been paid him; farmers and mechanics have been supplied him, and he has received aid in a multitude of different ways. In the last 33 years over $240,000,000 have been spent upon an Indian population not exceeding 180,000, enough, if equitably divided, to build each one a house suitable to his condition and furnish it throughout, to fence his land and build him a barn, to buy him a wagon and team and harness, to furnish him plows and the other implements necessary to cultivate the ground, and to give him something besides to embellish and beautify his home. It is not pretended that this amount is exact, but it is sufficiently so for the purposes of this discussion.

What is his condition to-day? He is still on his reservation; he is still being fed; his children are still being educated, and money is still being paid him; he is still dependent upon the Government for existence; mechanics wait on him and farmers still aid him; he is little, if any, nearer the goal of independence than he was 30 years ago, and if the present policy is continued he will get little, if any, nearer in 30 years to come. It is not denied that under this, as under the school system, there has been some progress, but it has not been commensurate with the money spent and effort made.

The commissioner stated further that it would seem a rather sad commentary on the ration system to see Indians driving regularly to the agency in buggies and carriages to receive a gratuitous division of supplies from the Indian agent to keep them from starving.

As it appeared at that time, the proportion of those who were self-supporting in the tribes where the schools were most highly developed in the 10-year period very materially diminished. The percentages of the Shoshones subsisting by civilized labor at the beginning of the period was 25 per cent; at the end of the period it had decreased to 12 per cent. At the Pottawatomie Agency, Kans., the percentage had decreased from 75 to 25 per cent, and at the Umatilla Agency, Oreg., it had decreased from 100 to 30 per cent.

I omitted to mention the care of the Indians in the maintenance of hospitals. There are 19 of these. In the last appropriation bill the amount appropriated for the Sacs and Foxes in Iowa was $40,000, yet the total number of Indians in the State of Iowa is only 345.

I call attention to an extract from the report of the superintendent of schools showing the ideas that prevailed in regard to the teaching of the Indians. Gentlemen, you would think this was a joke, but it is a part of an official report. This lady was laying out a plan for her subordinates for a 6-year course:

For the first year do not restrain the natural curiosity of the child and his tendency to ask questions.

I think we may pass that up as a chestnut.

In the second year they should have some light work to do, such as shelling corn for the fowls. In the third year they are advanced enough to drive the cattle. In the fourth year such progress can be made that the pupil can be told of the necessity of keeping the place free from weeds. In the fifth year they should be taught the meaning of capillary attraction.

My, what a loss it is in our educational system that we did not bring that out in time!

In the sixth year it should be shown that the number of dogs maintained does not add to the revenue of the family.

That is the result of the six years' instruction, to teach the Indian that his favorite dog, that is to bear him company in the future state, does not add to the economy of the family. [Laughter.]

I really think this instruction to teachers must have been intended to confirm those two lines of Alexander Pope in regard to the Indian—

His soul proud science never taught to stray
Far as the solar walk or milky way.

Certainly this instruction would not enable the Indian to go that far.

Now, in the first place, I think this whole system is wrong; that, as is always true in long-established bureaucracies, a cluster of leeches has gotten on the body politic; 6,000 white employees, 1 for every 50 Indians, and I understand from time to time it is increased periodically by 12,000 Indians.

I do most decidedly approve the report of the Committee on Indian Affairs, made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNYDER] and some of his colleagues on the 18th of December last. I have not very much pride about it, but it very closely coincides with some suggestions that I made 18 years ago, and it goes still further and accomplishes much more. One thing recommended is to do away with duplication. It seems they have at Muskogee about 150 persons, and they have about 150 in the Indian Department here whose work is overlapping. The next point he makes is that—

All Indian children of any quantum of Indian blood who have received an education in Indian or other schools to the standard of the seventh grade, and who have become 21 years of age, male or female, should be made citizens and at the age of 23 be given certificates of competency and have turned over to them anything due them from the Government and then be required to work out their own salvation. Inasmuch as it has been proven beyond the question of a doubt that a very large per cent of the Indians sent to Indian schools return to their tribal government, it is believed that this recommendation would return to the country considerably more of benefit and profit for the money spent and also tend to force the Indian to make something of himself.

That makes them separate units in our citizenship. It leads to the granting of citizenship to them, and that is the only future for the Indians. If they are kept on the reservation, if they are kept in these tribal relations, they will never emerge from a condition which is a reminiscence of their savage state. That can not be done in a year. Maybe it can not be done in 10 years, but it is the only course to pursue in regard to them.

Mr. YATES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURTON. Yes.

Mr. YATES. What, in the gentleman's opinion, should be the first step toward the independence of the Indians?

Mr. BURTON. As soon as they have sufficient capacity and competency give them the so-called certificate of competency and put them on their own mettle, on their own resources, and let the Government stop operating toward them as a nurse would operate toward a child.

Mr. CONNELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURTON. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. CONNELL. Is it not true that the average Indians in Oklahoma now have fine homes?

Is it not also true that the Indians in Oklahoma, notwithstanding the fact that they have elegant homes, prefer to sleep in tents in the rear of their residences? So it would appear that while we are appropriating millions for the support of the Indians, as a matter of fact, they are better cared for than any other division of our population.

Mr. BURTON. Many of them have.

Mr. CONNELL. And fences around them and flowers in their front yards?

Mr. BURTON. I am not aware of that. Many of them have fine homes. Of course, it is very hard for any race to break away from its early traditions. It is true, however, that the Indian is a very prominent and helpful element in the citizenship of Oklahoma.

Mr. EVANS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURTON. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. EVANS. When a certificate of competency is issued, should there not be some proceeding by which the competent Indian is entirely separated from tribal interests?

Mr. BURTON. I should think so.

Mr. EVANS. And unless that is done is not the certificate of competency an evil rather than a good in most instances, if he continues his tribal relations?

Mr. BURTON. In the tribe he does not have the separate position as a citizen that is necessary for his independence and development.

Then another point that was recommended in this report is the sale of the surplus Indian lands. There is one reservation belonging to the Navajos which contains 5,380,000 acres. It is true that most of it is very poor land, but what is the sense in leaving any such enormous reservation in the control of one Indian tribe?

Then it is suggested that attendance on schools be made compulsory. It appears that there are about 23,000 Indian children who are being educated at an expense of $4,992,000 last year, or an average of $230 apiece. These schools can not be in good shape, can not be well managed. The total amount expended in this whole country for 15,500,000 pupils is about $760,000,000 a year, a little less than $50 apiece, as against more than $200 apiece for the Indian children.

Now, the whole sum and substance of this, I repeat again, is that they must be taught self-reliance, to act for themselves. "If a man will not work, neither shall he eat." Industry and independence are the two words which afford hope for the Indian's future. It should be a lesson to us all that we have done a little too much of the same coddling toward different elements in our own white population. It is a good idea for us who love independence to let the citizen work out his own destiny. There is a great deal in that expression of Jeremy Bentham applied on a larger scale to the business of the country:

All that commerce and industry ask of the State is that which Diogenes asked of Alexander: "Get out of my sunshine!"

[Applause.]

I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. SNYDER. Will the gentleman from Texas use some of his time?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to use five minutes and will ask the Chair to call me down at the end of that time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will notify the gentleman at the end of five minutes.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. ANDREWS] asked the gentleman from Oklahoma if it were not a fact that the only purpose of this bill was to make the Indian appropriation bill impervious to points of order? The gentleman from Oklahoma, of course, answered yes, and that was the fact. Therefore he would assume that the bill ought to be passed. For that very reason I assume that the bill ought not to be passed. There is no question but what that is its purpose. The gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] has admitted it. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SNYDER] has admitted it. The bill itself admits it. The report admits it. Everything about it admits it, that it is to make the Indian appropriation bill impervious to points of order. Now, to what will that lead? Do you know that the backbone of the safety of our Treasury on the floor of this House is in the point of order? The rules of the House have seen fit to so prescribe. And what are the present rules in that respect? The Committee on Appropriations can bring in no bill on the floor of the House with any item of appropriation in it that is not authorized by some law, and when it violates this rule such item is made subject to a point of order which can be raised by any Member of the House if he knows how and when to raise it. That is the rule. When the Committee on Appropriations brings in a bill on this floor no Member, not even the chairman of the committee, if you please, can get up and propose to insert one single item into that bill that is not authorized by some existing law, and when it is made it is subject to a point of order, and if a point of order is made at the proper time that item will go out of the bill. Is not that a protection to the people? Is not that a protection to the Treasury? Do your people want you to do away with that protection? Do your constituents want you to sign away that protection which safeguards the money in the Treasury? My people do not want me to do it, and I am not going to do it.

For extension, improvement, operation, and maintenance of existing Indian irrigation systems and for development of water supplies.

As I said before, the Committee on Appropriations can report an item for the building of a $10,000,000 dam if they want to, and if they bring in a bill for it they will come very near passing it. They can go to any kind of expense—

Mr. CARTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. In a moment. I want to get this clearly before my colleagues. The distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLY] very ably, correctly, and clearly showed you that under one section of forestry they have 28 subsections, with all kinds of employees in each subsection now on the pay roll of the Government.

Mr. CARTER. Will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has used five minutes.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I will yield myself one minute more in order to yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER].

Mr. CARTER. The gentleman spoke about irrigation projects and said that this would authorize the appropriation of $10,000,000. Let me call the gentleman's attention to the fact that this does not extend the improvement or operation of the existing irrigation system. There is not an existing irrigation system to-day but what is limited by the very first appropriation that authorized the irrigation projects. So it could not exceed the amount authorized under the original act.

Mr. BLANTON. That would be true if this bill did not do away with those limitations. That is the vice of this bill. It does away with the limits and safeguards heretofore provided, and makes any amount of money the Appropriation Committee sees fit to give them properly expendable by the bureau. That is the trouble with this wild piece of blanket legislation, that it leaves us helpless and without any guide or compass. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time, and I yield 13 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES].

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, the all-absorbing topic of to-day is the question of taxation. At the corner grocery store, in the busy marts of trade, in the factory, in the field, on the farm, and in the mammoth mercantile establishments, is heard the constant recurring cry, When is Congress going to revise the revenue law?

As a matter of fact, we are still operating and doing business with the same or substantially the same revenue laws that were passed under the stress of war times. These laws were passed at a time when the world was aflame, when the dogs of war had been unleashed, and stretching from Belgium to the Adriatic was a thousand-mile line tipped with fire.

From every community in America strong young men with eager eyes were hastening to that conflict. It was necessary to raise money in tremendous amounts and without delay. Millions of the most virile young men of America were going 3,000 miles to fight. It took billions to equip and supply them. It mattered little that business might be interfered with. We had to get money wherever it was available and regardless of how it might hurt. The big thing was to supply the soldiers and save civilization. What did business amount to in an hour like that? Business could be revived at a later date. But the armies of freedom were compelled to strike at once and with driving power or everything, including business, would be lost. It would have been suicide to stop to iron out all the inequities of the bill and to deliberate in order to have exact justice dealt out in a revenue law. While we were thus lingering the war might have been lost.

As it was necessary to raise an army on a scale never before dreamed, and to equip it at an expense never before thought of, so it was necessary to draft a revenue bill on a basis never before heard of. The revenue law was passed on May 23, 1917, just 47 days after the declaration of war. It was passed by a vote of 329 ayes and 76 noes, Democrats and Republicans alike, be it said to their credit, joining in passing that bill to supply the Army. The measure went to the Senate and after considerable discussion and some delay passed the Senate with scarcely a dissenting vote. On October 1, 1917, the House without a roll call approved the final conference report. Provision was thus made for supplying the American Army across the seas.

No one party can claim the credit for the passage of that measure. It was an American measure. Whatever defects and whatever demerits the bill possessed must be shared by Democrats and Republicans alike who voted for it in those stirring times.

On the other hand, whatever glory came from the passage of the bill must be shared by Democrats and Republicans alike acting as Americans, everyone realized that the measure was not perfect, everyone realized that grave inequities were embodied in its provisions, but everyone knew it would get the money, and that it was the best that could be had in the limited time permitted for its consideration.

On September 20, 1918, the second revenue measure was passed by the House of Representatives, the vote being 349 ayes and not a single no, all parties again joining in the essential war measure and all parties being entitled to whatever credit was to be had from its passage.

This is the true history of the war-time revenue legislation. Thanks to the cooperation of the American people and the unity of the American citizens, the war was won and the armistice was signed on November 11, 1918. Great rejoicing prevailed in America and all over the world at the successful termination of the greatest war in all history, and men again turned with a sigh of relief from the implements of war to the arts of peace.

Just before the signing of the armistice the American people saw fit to displace the party then in power and to give the Republican Party control of both the House and the Senate. With the return of peace everyone realized almost instinctively that one of the big problems that faced the country was that of readjusting the inequities of war-time revenue legislation. Everyone realized its justness and necessity as a war-time policy, but every thinking man realized that the burdens must be adjusted to suit the demands of peace. No one realized the necessity of relief and surcease from the burden of war-time legislation more than the great man who then occupied the exalted position of Chief Executive of this Nation, President Woodrow Wilson. Immediately upon the reconvening of the new Republican Congress, he urgently recommended that that Congress take up the question of a revision of the war-time revenue legislation. On May 20, 1920, in his first message to the new Republican Congress he recommended that these changes be made. I want to read some things that he said with reference to Federal taxation at that time:

And credit and enterprise alike will be quickened by timely and helpful legislation with regard to taxation. I hope that the Congress will find it possible to undertake an early reconsideration of Federal taxes, in order to make our system of taxation more simple and easy of administration and the taxes themselves as little burdensome as they can be made and yet suffice to support the Government and meet all its obligations.

The main thing we shall have to care for is that our taxation shall rest as lightly as possible on the productive resources of the country, that its rates shall be stable, and that it shall be constant in its revenue-yielding power. We have found the main sources from which it must be drawn. I take it for granted that its mainstays will henceforth be the income tax, the excess-profits tax, and the estate tax. All these can so be adjusted to yield constant and adequate returns and yet not constitute a too grievous burden on the taxpayer. I think you will find that further changes can be made to advantage both in rates of the tax and in the method of its collection. The excess-profits tax need not long be maintained at the rates which were necessary while the enormous expenses of the war had to be borne; but it should be made the basis of a permanent system which will reach undue profits without discouraging the enterprise and activity of our business men.

Many of the minor taxes provided for in the revenue legislation of 1917 and 1918, though no doubt made necessary by the pressing necessities of the war time, can hardly find sufficient justification under the easier circumstances of peace, and can now happily be got rid of. Among these, I hope you will agree, are the excises upon various manufacturers and the taxes upon retail sales. They are unequal in the incidence of different industries and on different individuals. Their collection is difficult and expensive. Those which are levied upon articles sold at retail are largely evaded by the readjustment of retail prices.

During all of the time that has elapsed since the signing of the armistice and since the delivery of that message, the Republicans have been in continuous power in both ends of the Capitol. During all of that time from practically every hamlet in the United States has come the constant cry for relief from the undue burdens of war-time taxation. Yet on this 4th day of August, 1921, we are still operating under the same old war-time taxation that existed during the emergency when all of the nations of the earth, including America, were going through a trial by fire.

Whatever of blame is to be had for the failure to revise the war-time revenue laws must rest where it belongs, at the feet of the Republican Party. They have had the power; they have had the authority. The Democratic executive—which was the only branch of the Government that was left in the hands of the Democrats—recommended that the question be immediately taken up and that adjustments be made at the earliest possible moment. But throughout the long weary months that widened into years, the American people have been crying for relief, and all that has been heard is the empty echo of that fruitless cry, while the Republican leaders have sat supinely by and watched business go to the wall. They have seen what was a flourishing and prosperous country under Democratic control crash into what amounts almost to a panic under Republican rule. They have taken up their time during that period in discussing minor matters, and have ignored the main question. They have gone off after incidental issues, they have even endeavored to escape responsibility. They have hoped that the American people would lose sight of the fact that the Republicans have had control of both the House and the Senate, and would charge the condition up to the Democratic Party. They went all over the country and undertook to fool the American people last fall with that kind of a cry. They made the promise that if they were put into power they would relieve the people of these burdens of taxation. The only branch of the Government that was left in the hands of the Democrats was the executive, and a Democratic President at the first opportunity urgently requested the new Congress to revise the tax laws, but the Republicans saw fit to engage in other and minor matters and to neglect the one great problem that faces the American people.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman two minutes more.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, the Republican Party has been in power, and now through their official organ, the Washington Post—and one might well call it the official hand-organ, because all you have to do is to turn the handle and it produces the music; it misses a note occasionally, but music such as it is, it delivers—through their official organ, I say, they are trying to escape the responsibility, because here in an editorial which appeared in that paper the day before yesterday they say it is cruel to make the American people believe that they can grant this relief. Let me read just a part of that editorial:

It would be most acceptable news for the public to learn that taxes were to be reduced $500,000,000 a year, or approximately upon an average of $5 per capita, but it would be unfair to the point of cruelty to deceive the people into expecting such a decrease if there is no possibility of its realization.

With the heavy fixed charges which now lie against the Treasury the fiscal officers of the Government can see no way, even if all the economy measures undertaken prove effective, to reduce their estimates to a great extent.

Mr. BURTNESS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES of Texas. I can not yield in the time that I have.

Mr. BLANTON. I yield my colleague five minutes, if he wants more time.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Very well, I yield.

Mr. BURTNESS. Has the gentleman any constructive suggestions to make as to how to improve the situation?

Mr. JONES of Texas. I have just finished reading you some very constructive suggestions from the pen of Woodrow Wilson, and I commend them again to your careful perusal. But, as a matter of fact, one would think from the speeches that were made during the Republican campaign that they did not need any suggestion; that all they needed was the privilege of attending to the matter. I made some suggestions here some few months ago in a 15 or 20 minute speech, and a number of other Democrats have made them, but you fellows do not seem inclined to follow them. I should be very glad to make a lot of suggestions if you will follow them. The trouble with you gentlemen is that you went all over this country and preached and won the election upon the vain and fruitless promise that you could give relief for everything, and then the first thing you did when you got in power was to begin to side-step and to avoid meeting the issue squarely. I will tell you one place where I think you could have relieved it very much. I think the President, who has the power, could have called a disarmament conference two or three months ago to meet at an early date. I can see no necessity for the long delay. The delay has been so great that other nations have been talking about earlier conferences. If we had acted at once and in earnest appropriations for the Navy, and even for the Army, for the ensuing year might have been reduced.

Even at this new session, instead of taking up the revision of the revenue laws, in which every American was interested and which would be of real advantage to every American citizen, the Republican Party, grown rusty with tradition, began to tinker with the tariff. There was a time when most of the revenues necessary to operate the Government were raised by the indirect system of taxation known as the tariff, but even the most ardent believer in the tariff realizes that not more than 15 per cent of the essential revenues of the Government can now be obtained from tariff laws. How silly, how foolish, then, to take up months of this new session in revising the tariff laws, which at most can not produce more than one-sixth of the revenues of the Government, and which, therefore, is relatively far less important than the measure which is to raise at least five-sixths of the essential moneys for the operation of the governmental affairs of the United States.

During all these months—aye, during the two and one-half years that have passed—the one great problem that has stood at the door of every American home has been the injustice of war-time taxation legislation effective in peace-time conditions, and yet, turning a deaf ear to the pleading of the American citizens, the Republicans have seen fit by passing the highest protective tariff bill in the history of the Nation to impose an additional burden on the people of this land.

The American people asked for bread and they gave them a stone; they asked for tax revision and they gave them a tariff law; they asked for relief from the high cost of living and, with honeyed words as to what they proposed to do along that line, they slipped a dagger into their backs in the form of an added burden in the high cost of living. The truth is that you were intoxicated by the victory last fall [cries of "Oh, no, no; not since prohibition!"]; that victory is about the only form of intoxication you have a chance to indulge in at the present time, and at least you acted as if you were intoxicated, because you neglected the very issues that you "went to bat on" last fall.

True to the historic traditions of the old party, you have fed the American people on promises. The elephant has always been a slow-moving animal, but the leaders this time have made him even slower by keeping him chained to a stob and preventing him making any progress whatever.

The people of the United States have been long suffering and kind to the Republican Party. They have kept that party in power during these three years on the naked promise that the people would be given relief. They have been slow to anger. The American people have always been slow to anger, but the Nation, like the man—that is, slow to anger—is mighty in wrath once that wrath has been aroused, and I confidently predict that when the American people fully realize the true facts in connection with this all-important subject they will rise in righteous wrath and sweep the Republicans from power and will again trust the affairs of their Government to the party that has always stood for the rights of the people—the Democratic Party of the United States. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Now, as a matter of fact, it is an important question even though you do not change the tax law much. There are men all over the United States who for the past two and a half years have been laboring under suspense and under an uncertainty that is almost as bad as the tax itself, of not knowing what the next thing would be, of not knowing how to lay out their credits, of not knowing how to manage their businesses, because there has been the continuous promise that on to-morrow, next week, a little later we are going to revise all these absurd taxes and give you a new tax bill. If you had come in on the basis of truth and fairness at the beginning and told the people frankly that there is money that must be paid, you would have stood in a better place in reference to them. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, may I ask how the time stands?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has nine minutes remaining.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the other gentleman use some time?

Mr. SNYDER. I would like for the gentleman from Texas to use the balance of his time.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Utah [Mr. LEATHERWOOD].

Mr. LEATHERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, in the limited time allotted to me here I may speak somewhat disconnectedly. The history of the Indian affairs of this country for the last 75 years contains many pages which do not reflect any particular credit upon my Government and your Government in the management of those affairs, yet I do not advert to that fact in order to further criticize but only to illustrate one or two things which it may be possible by our experience in the past to correct. At the outset I am in favor of this pending legislation. I do not believe that the time has arrived, even though there may be mismanagement in the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for striking down that agency of the Government. I do not believe that reform should come in any such manner. If there are wrongs to be righted, let us right them more gently. Now, at the very outset there are three fundamental things which, I think, are necessary before we may emancipate the Indian. Those things are provided for in the present activities of the department, and we are simply trying to add some permanency to them by the pending legislation. We must educate the Indian. We must teach him how to take care of himself, and how to be healthy; but we have not finished when we have done that, gentlemen. A man may be healthy; an Indian may be healthy; he may be educated; and yet not fit for the Government to cease its guardianship over him. In addition to those things, we must teach him self-reliance and the ability to do for himself. I have been somewhat surprised at the statement made here by some gentlemen who would seem to infer that because great wealth is centralized in certain portions or certain localities occupied by the Indians that that might be a reason for doing away with the Bureau of Indian Affairs. Indians are like white men, some are rich and some are poor, some are lazy and some are industrious. In the main the wealthy Indians of this country are centralized in the five tribes largely. The rest of the Indians that have been pushed out into the Rocky Mountain region in the intermountain States have very little of the great wealth now held by the Indians as a whole in this country. Now, I must reach the exact point which I desire to emphasize, and it is this:

I believe that one of the fundamental mistakes which the Government has been making in handling this question has been that the greed of the white man has caused him to drive sharp bargains in dealing with the Indian, and I am not proud of the way the white man has dealt with them. In the main, I think my Government has tried to be fair with the Indian, but I think, gentlemen, we have perpetrated many wrongs against him. Even if you will take the treaties and examine them you will find that in order to drive a sharp bargain we have agreed to do the very things which have made it impossible to emancipate the Indian. Instead of putting him where he can make a living, where it is economically possible for him to make a living, we have given him gratuities, we have fed him, we have given him blankets, we have clothed him, instead of putting him in a position where it would be possible for him by his own industry to live independently apart from the guardianship of the Government. That, gentlemen, is one point I want to emphasize in the consideration of this Indian legislation. Let us deal fairly with the Indians. I read last evening with considerable interest a report for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, in reference to one particular tribe of Indians with which I happen to be very familiar, the Bannock Indians. If you will read that report it is, indeed, a discouraging statement of fact in many respects, yet this tribe is advancing and will soon be ready for emancipation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LEATHERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, in order that I may complete that which I had hoped to develop, may I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Utah asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the Record. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I make the same request.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas makes the same request. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY].

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, we were told in the House months ago that it was very important that the peace resolution be adopted at "once." In fact, we were told that immediately upon the inauguration of the present administration the first thing to which it would address its attention would be the conclusion of peace with Germany. It waited for months and then took up the peace resolution. The peace resolution passed this body under whip and spur and was signed by the President on the 2d day of July. It is now the 4th day of August, and the Attorney General of the United States has not yet been able, in answer to the administration, to decide whether or not it is necessary to issue a proclamation of peace. And so the Attorney General is lockjawed on the question as to whether or not it is necessary, under this legislation—the peace resolution—whether we are at peace already with Germany or whether it will be necessary for the President to issue a proclamation to that effect. So what are we to do? The question is, Are we at peace or are we not? I want to call the attention of the committee, however, to the fact that when this matter was before this body I sought to point out that one of the results that the passage of the peace resolution would accomplish would be to imperil the custody of the United States of alien enemy property. That property should be retained until American claims are settled.

I want to call the attention of gentlemen on the Republican side of this House to a communication in the New York Times of last Monday, August 1. The headlines read:

Germans open fight to get $350,000,000 seized during the war.
Otto Heins, former president of Bosch magneto, leads campaign for property.

I quote from this article. This is what Mr. Andrews, the attorney for Mr. Heins has to say:

The Germans expect their property back under the treaty with Prussia, still in existence, providing that in case of war the property of private citizens of either country shall be held inviolate during the war and not confiscated. Every German expects every dollar returned. The thing is that $10,000,000 property should not be sold for $4,000,000.

The whole tenor of this article, gentlemen, is to the effect that Mr. Andrews, a New York attorney representing Mr. Heins, who was formerly associated with one of the German companies, the Bosch Magneto Co., is seeking to organize a determined drive and a campaign to go into the courts and recover all the property still in the hands of the Alien Property Custodian. He states that he has been in touch with prominent members of the Republican administration and prominent Republican politicians, and that he has the sympathy and support of some of them. And the New York Times of Tuesday, I believe it is, carries an interview with Senator CALDER, of New York, who announces that he, at least in part, sympathizes with Heins. The Washington Post of Monday carries this statement:

Complete and formal peace by treaty between the United States and Germany is imminent.

Surely the administration is not going to conclude peace by a separate treaty, if we are already at peace. How can you conclude a treaty of peace when you are already at peace with Germany? Did not it take the first time? We were told when the peace resolution was under consideration that it would bring us peace, and that the technical state of war would no longer disturb our people. But now we are going to have a treaty of peace. Some of us were bold enough even then to suggest to the administration and its representatives on this floor that we could only have formal peace by a treaty, according to the constitutional method, but it has taken the Republican administration until this time to come to the conclusion that really a treaty is at last necessary.

I quote further:

To-day is the seventh anniversary of the beginning of the World War by Germany. When a treaty between Germany and this country has been signed and ratified the war will officially come to an end, as all of her former enemies have made peace through the treaty of Versailles.

That is from the Washington Post.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. HAYDEN. I yield two more minutes to the gentleman.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. That is from the Washington Post, and we know that it is authoritative, because the Post is close to the sources of influence and inspiration.

What else do we find in the New York Times? It also states that the Harding administration never did believe in the peace resolution. Here is what it says:

The Harding administration had no liking for the peace resolution. It used its influence to have it amended and was instrumental in preventing its adoption for a long period. The President was ultimately understood to have reached the conclusion that as Congress desired to enact this legislation, it might as well do so.

And I want to call attention furthermore to the fact that the attorney for the German interests bases one of his claims on the fact that the Foreign Affairs Committee of this House refused to adopt an amendment to the resolution, proposed by the Alien Property Custodian, which sought to ratify sales made by the custodian. I have here a letter from the Alien Property Custodian under the present administration and a copy of the amendment which he drafted, and which he, Mr. Miller, appointee of President Harding, asked the Committee on Foreign Affairs to incorporate in the resolution, by which sales of alien property would have been ratified, and which your committee absolutely refused to put into its resolution.

Mr. TEMPLE. If the sales had been legally made, there would be no use in ratifying them. If they had not been legally made, they ought not to have been ratified.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Will the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] yield me a minute in which to answer the question?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield to the gentleman two minutes.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I will say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, in answer to that question, that if there was any doubt about it, it could have been removed by the amendment urged by Mr. Miller, present custodian. Here is what the amendment of the Alien Property Custodian provided:

The words "and sales" are intended so as to insure the ratification and confirmation of all sales made pursuant to law.

So, if a sale had not been made pursuant to the law, under the amendment the Alien Property Custodian tried to get you gentlemen to put into this resolution it would not have been validated or confirmed. If a sale had been unlawfully made, in law it is no sale.

Mr. TEMPLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Yes; I yield.

Mr. TEMPLE. If the sales were made pursuant to law, what further law was necessary to ratify them?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Oh, the gentleman, of course—

Mr. TEMPLE. Does not the gentleman know that cases are now pending in the courts to determine whether certain sales were made in accordance with law, and we do not want to ratify sales that were in doubt and take the matter out of the courts? [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. The gentleman begs the question. This amendment provides only that those sales made in accordance with law were to be ratified and those not were not to be ratified. The gentleman voted in the committee against putting that in the resolution, and as the result of his action and that of his committee and of this House this country is now going to be flooded by a campaign, not only in the public prints but in the courts, to take back the German property and take it out of the possession of this Government before American citizens are paid for their claims, because you passed this foolish peace resolution.

Mr. TEMPLE. I voted in the committee and will vote in the House against ratifying any fraudulent action.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. BURTON). The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS] five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, in my time I desire to read a communication from Frank L. Ogburn, adjutant of John W. Low Post, No. 53, American Legion, as follows:

JOHN W. LOW POST, No. 53, AMERICAN LEGION,
Dallas, Tex., July 18, 1921.

Hon. HATTON W. SUMNERS,
Member of Congress, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SUMNERS: I am directed by the members of the John W. Low Post, No. 53, of the American Legion at Dallas, Tex., to forward to you a copy of a resolution recently passed by this post with reference to certain utterances of the Hon. George Harvey, our ambassador to the Court of St. James.

The post directs me to ask you that you call to the attention of the House of Representatives, and, if consistent with the rules of the House, to have incorporated in the permanent records, this resolution as our protest against these utterances.

Very respectfully, yours,

FRANK L. OGBURN,

Adjutant John W. Low Post, No. 53, American Legion.

Mr. Chairman, I ask that the resolution be read in my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it resolved by the John W. Low Post, No. 53, of the American Legion, at Dallas, Tex., That we protest to the Congress, to the President of the United States, and to the country against the utterances made by Hon. George Harvey, ambassador to the Court of St. James, at the Pilgrim's Society dinner, on May 19, 1921, and particularly resent and challenge that portion of his address in which he attempted to belittle the part played by the Americans in the World War, and to slander the spirit and high purpose which inspired the American soldiers and sailors who fought in that war, and the American people who encouraged and sustained them in their sacrifice and achievements.

We protest that it is not true that only self-interest and fear prompted the action of the people of the United States and the soldiers and sailors who defended the flag and all that it stands for in the world. We denounce as shameful, unpatriotic, and unworthy from an American, and especially one who is the accredited representative and spokesman of the American Nation at the court of another great nation, such a statement as made by Mr. Harvey, in which he says:

"Even to this day at rare intervals an ebullient sophomoric seeks to applaud and win a smile by shouting 'we won the war.' Far more prevalent until recently was the impression—and this was and still is in a measure sincere—that we went into the war to rescue humanity from all kinds of menacing perils.

"Not a few remain convinced that we sent our young soldiers across the sea to save this Kingdom and France and Italy. This is not the fact. We sent them solely to save the United States of America, and most reluctantly and laggarly at that.

"We were not too proud to fight, whatever that means. We were afraid not to fight. This is the real truth of the matter, and so we came along toward the end and helped you and your allies to shorten the war. That is all we did and all that we claim to have done."

We are certain, because we know, that we and our American comrades in arms, in common with the American people, fought for greater and nobler ideals and motives than those stated by Mr. Harvey. We respectfully submit that aside from any question as to the attempt of Mr. Harvey to discredit his own Nation and its soldiers and sailors in the eyes of the world, that any citizen of America, during that period of sacrifice and world service, who failed so utterly to share in the impulses, the purposes, and the courage unmixed with fear, which was common to the masses of the American people, as Mr. Harvey, by his utterances shows himself to have failed, is unfit to represent in any capacity the American people, much less to represent them in a high diplomatic position. His utterances ought to be repudiated by the only method by which that repudiation can be made complete—by his recall: Therefore be it Resolved by the John W. Low Post, No. 53, of the American Legion, at Dallas, Tex., That the Government of the United States for which we fought, and for the honor, good name, and ideals of which we are willing to fight again, be petitioned to recall the Hon. George Harvey and to send in his place some man who is 100 per cent American, whose own courage and share in the sentiments of the American people will enable him, without any instructions from Washington, to reflect that courage and sentiment in the discharge of his diplomatic duties and in his public utterances.

ROYALL R. WATKINS,
LESLIE KEARNEY,
FRANK L. OGBURN,
Resolution Committee.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the remainder of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas yields back one minute.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. Nine minutes.

Mr. SNYDER. Will the Chair please advise us how the time stands now?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] has 7 minutes. The gentleman from Arizona has 9 minutes, and the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNYDER] has 11 minutes.

Mr. SNYDER. As to the gentleman from Texas I did not hear.

Mr. BLANTON. I have 7 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] has 7 minutes.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I can not by silence give approval to attacks upon the Indian Service by those who never saw an Indian reservation and who base their charges either upon half truths or anticipated information. It is very easy to cite special instances which, if unexplained, would make the uninformed believe that the Indians have no friends and are always the victims of tyranny and oppression by those appointed to guard their welfare. Neither is it fair to say that a white man can never get justice at the hands of the Indian Bureau when his interests are in conflict with the desires of the Indians, although there is more truth in this charge than in the other.

The personnel of the Indian Bureau contains the usual proportion of job holders and drones such as are found in other branches of the Government, but some years of experience qualifies me to say that as a whole there is no body of Federal employees with higher ideals or a more sincere desire to render good service. Nowhere else are there to be found better examples of men and women who with the true missionary spirit have devoted their lives to the advancement of the dependent and uncivilized people over whose affairs they have been given supervision. I do not deny that occasional wrongs have been done, but more often the fault has been an overzealous care to see that the Indian shall get the best of any bargain that is made.

It is interesting to note how the opponents of the Indian Bureau have changed front in recent years. The old cries of fraud and graft and of robbing the Indians of their heritage have been largely abandoned. We are now told that the Indians are oversupervised, that their initiative is being destroyed, and the suggestion is made that the tribal property which has been so carefully conserved should be immediately divided. It is undoubtedly possible to prove this last contention by pointing to individual instances, but for the great majority of Indians, who are not yet civilized, the adoption of such a policy would make them paupers within a decade. The truth lies between these two extremes, and for that reason we will have an Indian problem, and an Indian Bureau at work solving it, for many years to come.

It has been well said that the first step in the direction of releasing the Indians from supervision by the Bureau of Indian Affairs is to declare that all of them shall be American citizens. I must confess that when such a proposal was first submitted to the Committee on Indian Affairs that I, representing a State where there are over 40,000 full-blood Indians, many of whom can not speak the English language, all of whom are in the tribal relation, hesitated to give such legislation my approval. But the longer I study the question the more I am convinced that it is fundamentally right to grant this privilege to them. The Indians are native born in the United States. They were here before we were, and they should enjoy all the privileges that Congress can consistently give them.

The bill introduced in the last Congress by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNYDER], the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, confers citizenship on all Indians, but allows them to retain their interest in all tribal property until a proper distribution of that property can be made. I am satisfied, so far as the Indians of the Southwest are concerned—and there are a little over 60,000 of them in Arizona and New Mexico—that a generation, at least, and perhaps two or more generations, must elapse before their tribal property can be distributed and all of such Indians be declared competent to manage their own affairs.

It is not within reason to expect that Indians who within the lifetime of most of us were engaged in warfare against the United States, who had to be conquered by the Regular Army and by force be placed upon reservations on account of their savage and murderous acts, could within such a comparatively short time do everything that a civilized white man can do, particularly in a business way. But such of them as are fit for American citizenship should have its benefits. Such of them as are incompetent to manage their own affairs should be retained under the restrictions and the supervision of the Indian Bureau.

It must be remembered that citizenship does not necessarily mean the right to vote. Women were always citizens of the United States, yet the election laws of a number of States did not allow them to vote even after they were enfranchised by a constitutional amendment. The same would be true of the Indians. In my State in order to vote a person must be able to read and write and to understand the Constitution of the United States.

Any Indian who has learned to read and write at an Indian school, and can show that he understands the nature of the organic law of the land, would be permitted to vote in Arizona whenever he abandons the tribal relation and becomes an American citizen. There are relatively few of them who can meet these requirements, but I will be the last to deny any man the right of suffrage if he is qualified to exercise it. Whenever the Indians are qualified I am more willing that they should vote than some foreigner who has no better knowledge of our language and our ways and who carries in his heart a greater love for the country of his birth than for America.

I heartily agree that a greater effort should be made to expedite the separation of qualified Indians from their tribes and allow them to become citizens of the United States. The only practical method of doing that, and at the same time doing justice, is through the appointment of competency commissions. Such commissions should take up the cases of individual Indians and, having satisfied themselves that they should become citizens, can recommend appropriate action to the Secretary of the Interior, and then such Indians shall be relieved of restrictions and be permitted to control their own property.

I am confident that a well-qualified competency commission could go through the tribes in the Southwest and within a month or two decide which Indians are fit to become citizens. Take the Navajo Indian Reservation in northern Arizona for example. The competency commission could quickly ascertain by general observation that there are very few Navajo Indians who are prepared to take up the duties and obligations of citizenship. But if it were reported through the Indian agent, or otherwise, that a certain Indian possessed a large number of sheep, that he had a very respectable balance in the bank, that he was a good business man, and that he owned automobiles, and had demonstrated by the conduct of his business that he was perfectly competent to cope with the white man in a business way, that kind of an Indian could be readily pointed out to the commission, and they could determine whether he ought to become a citizen or not.

I am well aware that in certain parts of the country there are Indians who are perfectly competent but who do not want to become citizens because thereby the burden of taxation will be imposed upon them. Indians are not taxed, as Members know, and it is therefore to their financial advantage to remain as members of a tribe. In cases of that kind the competency commission would undoubtedly be obliged to thoroughly investigate the facts. If an Indian applies for citizenship, as would happen in a number of cases, there would also be necessity for a careful investigation, to find out whether he really wanted to become a citizen or simply wanted to wastefully dispose of his property. Some discretion must therefore be reposed in the competency commissions. But, after all, we must presume that men of common sense, who will understand the general situation and look into particular cases as well, will be appointed to do this work. As I have said, it will not take long to find all the competent Indians in the Southwest. There are at least 60,000 Indians in Arizona and New Mexico who ought to remain under restrictions, who ought to have the benefit of supervision by the Bureau of Indian Affairs for a generation if not longer.

Since the Indian Bureau must be retained we should make it as efficient as possible, having always in mind that its ultimate object is not to perpetuate itself but to gradually decrease its activities as the Indians cease to be wards of the Government. Within the bureau there should be a greater recognition of the fact that in many instances the interests of the Indians and their white neighbors are identical and that only by proper co-operation can both races enjoy the fullest measure of prosperity. Since the Indian is free to travel over the white man's roads, he should do his fair share of road building on the reservations. Where there is more land within a reservation than is needed for farming and grazing allotments the surplus should be surveyed and sold to white people who are seeking homes. All of the mineral resources of every reservation should be opened to development under a proper leasing system to the mutual advantage of the Indians and those interested in mining. These are some examples of what must be accomplished if the orderly development of the Western States where the Indians reside is not to be unduly retarded.

Mr. Chairman, I stated at the beginning of the session to-day that I reluctantly supported the bill that we now have before us for consideration. Frankness compels me to say that I was not favorably impressed with the measure the first time I read it. It then seemed to me that its purpose was to allow the Committee on Indian Affairs to appear, make its bow, and thereafter disappear from the legislative scene of action by thus abdication all of its authority in favor of the Committee on Appropriations. I have examined the terms of the bill in the meantime, and find that the grant of power to the Appropriations Committee is carefully guarded. What it actually amounts to is to authorize by law the making of the usual annual appropriations to carry on the work of the Indian Service, and nothing more.

Since the jurisdiction has been transferred from the Committee on Indian Affairs to the Committee on Appropriations to report the Indian appropriation bill, I see no good reason why there should not be authority of law for the usual and ordinary items contained therein. That committee can hereafter consider and report the Indian bill to the House, and the House discuss and vote upon the items on their merits. Failure to pass this measure means that any gentleman so inclined may make points of order, and item after item can be thus stricken from the appropriation bill. Of course, when it passes the House and goes over to the Senate the items will all be reinserted; but the consideration will be given to them there, and not by this body.

That is the reason, I suspect, why the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] objects to the passage of this bill, because he knows it will take from him the right to make points of order. I realize that that right is very dear to his heart. But in spite of the fact that he has stricken numerous items, yea, hundreds of them, out of the appropriation bills, if the same bills were examined in the form in which they were finally approved by the President it would be found that in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred the identical items of appropriation have been reinserted in the Senate, so that in the end his making of points of order here against appropriations which are necessary to maintain the public service merely occupies the time of the House and accomplishes no other result.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYDEN. With pleasure.

Mr. ANDREWS. The passage of this bill, as I understand it, would place the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs under bond when the next Indian appropriation bill comes in here?

Mr. HAYDEN. No bond of any kind is necessary. In my opinion the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs rendered an excellent service to the House and to the country by his action in connection with the last Indian appropriation bill. If he had not taken that course we would probably not be considering the bill that is before us to-day. By making points of order he pointed out that the Committee on Appropriations had no authority of law for many of its actions. He forcibly directed the attention of the House to that fact and to the necessity for legislation of this kind, as could not have been done in any other manner.

The first class of items that are made in order by this bill relate to the general support and civilization, including the education, of Indians. The physical support of Indians has practically ceased. There was a time some years ago when rations were issued to large numbers of Indians, both able-bodied and otherwise. This was done upon the theory that it was cheaper to feed them than to fight them. Now only the aged and infirm Indians receive such support, and the amounts allotted for that purpose are comparatively small. The item of civilization of Indians includes the maintenance of agencies, the pay of employees, and so on, and aggregates a relatively large sum.

Appropriations for education, to my mind, are most important, because without teachers and schoolhouses no race of people can become fit for self-government. Last year we appropriated $1,700,000 for the support of Indian day and industrial schools, not to mention the nonreservation boarding schools which were specifically provided for. Of course, there should be authority of law to appropriate money for the education of the Indians.

For the relief of distress and conservation of health there was appropriated last year $375,000. That item was stricken out in the House but was reinserted by the Senate and written into the law. It is utterly useless to attempt to educate a child and expect it to grow up to a life of usefulness without good health. The Indian health service has performed a wonderful work in the last few years, with the result that the health and sanitary conditions on the reservations have greatly improved.

"For industrial assistance and advancement and general administration of Indian property" there was appropriated last year $400,000, which is an entirely proper kind of aid if the Indians are, as we consider them legally to be, wards of the Government.

The provision relating to the "extension, improvement, operation, and maintenance of existing Indian irrigation systems and for development of water supplies" is necessary. This provision does not authorize the installation of any new Indian irrigation system. All new projects will have to be authorized, as heretofore, by an enabling act reported out of the Committee on Indian Affairs and passed by the House and Senate. But as to the existing irrigation system, certainly there should be authority of law to carry them on and make necessary improvements and extensions. The same is true of "the enlargement, extension, improvement, and repair of the buildings and grounds of existing plants and projects."

There can be no reason why an established Indian school should not be maintained and why adequate school rooms and dormitories should not be provided. Yet in the last Congress when the committee reported out appropriations for improvements of that kind they immediately went out on points of order and had to be restored by the Senate.

The next provision is "for the employment of inspectors, supervisors, superintendents, clerks, field matrons, farmers, physicians, Indian police, Indian judges, and other employees."

That is a blanket authority which will authorize the Committee on Appropriations, after a hearing, to make the necessary appropriations for the personnel of the Indian Service. When the several items come into the House we can discuss them on their merits, and raise or lower the appropriations as the majority of the Members may see fit. If that authority is not granted there will be no discussion or votes in the House at all. Such appropriations will all go out on points of order and all the authority to make them will be transferred to the other end of the Capitol.

The same is true of the item "For the purchase of horse-drawn and motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles for official use." About $200,000 of applicable appropriations is usually made available each year for this purpose. Only $125,000 is annually appropriated for the "General and incidental expenses in connection with the administration of Indian affairs," so that this authorization is not the great menace to the Treasury which some Members would have us believe.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYDEN. I yield to my friend from Indiana.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. I notice that there is a provision "for the suppression of traffic in liquor, peyote, and other deleterious drugs."

In view of the fact that we have now Federal prohibition officers I was wondering why the whole matter should not be turned over to them, and why there should be a separate department for the suppression of the liquor traffic under the Bureau of Indian Affairs?

Mr. HAYDEN. That question has been seriously considered by the Committee on Indian Affairs in the last three Congresses. At one time we reported the Indian bill without any appropriation for this purpose. At another time we reported out a greatly reduced appropriation, but each time the House by a vote reversed the action of the committee and insisted that this special fund should be maintained for the suppression of the liquor traffic among Indians. There is a chief special officer with a number of deputies whose duty it is to enforce the special laws that have been enacted to prevent Indians from obtaining liquor. We have gradually reduced the amount of this appropriation, and my judgment is that in the course of time the whole of it can be wiped out and this duty transferred to the service that enforces the general prohibition law; but in the opinion of the House after considerable debate it was decided not to do that.

If this service is to be continued to any extent, there ought to be authority of law to make the necessary appropriations. The same is true with reference to the suppression of the traffic in peyote and other deleterious drugs. I do not believe that anyone who has seriously studied the subject will deny that the Indians as wards of the Government should be protected against the use of peyote and other like drugs.

Mr. GENSMAN. Has the gentleman ever seen a peyote religious ceremony?

Mr. HAYDEN. I have not seen the ceremony itself.

Mr. GENSMAN. Then, the gentleman admits he does not know anything about it except what he has read?

Mr. HAYDEN. I have seen an alleged peyote church in Oklahoma, and I have listened to intelligent and well-qualified witnesses who stated the facts which proved the evil effects which follow the use of peyote. And I will say further to the gentleman from Oklahoma that every authority in the United States, every organization that has at heart the best interest of the Indians, has pronounced against the use of peyote. There is a Board of Indian Commissioners, consisting of 10 men, appointed by the President, whose sole and only duty is to look out for the welfare of the Indians. After a thorough investigation they have recommended that the use of peyote be prohibited. The Board of Catholic Indian Missions are on record against it. The National Women's Christian Temperance Union, whose attention was first directed to this question by reports of the use of peyote by American soldiers stationed on the Rio Grande during the Mexican border troubles, has urged that legislation be passed to suppress its sale. The same is true of every other organization in the country that has examined into the facts. With such universal disapproval, I believe that Congress is fully justified in appropriating money for the suppression of the traffic in peyote and other deleterious drugs among the Indians. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Arizona has expired.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, under the permission granted I shall extend my remarks by printing in the RECORD some of the letters that I have received in support of legislation to prohibit the sale and use of peyote. The first is from the attorney of the Anti-Saloon League, transmitting a letter that he had received from "Pussyfoot" Johnson, who was at one time the chief special officer for the suppression of the liquor traffic among Indians:

THE ANTI-SALOON LEAGUE OF AMERICA,
Washington, D. C., April 12, 1918.

Hon. CARL HAYDEN,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. HAYDEN: I inclose herewith copy of letter which I received from Mr. Johnson to-day, who was formerly connected with the Indian Commissioner's office. It is self-explanatory. If you want any of the peyote as samples, I will gladly give you some of them. It is evidently an easy way to get a cheap drunk.

Yours, cordially,

W. B. WHEELER,
Attorney and General Counsel for Anti-Saloon League of America.

WESTERVILLE, OHIO, April 10, 1918.

Hon. WAYNE B. WHEELER,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR WHEELER: Reference is made to that part of your letter of April 8 regarding peyote. There is a little cactus growing on rocky ledges in certain parts of southwestern Texas and northern Mexico known as peyote. It is about the size and shape of a small carrot. Its head just sticks above the surface. After the spring rains a little purple flower develops. This as the season progresses develops into a little brown fuzz resembling a caterpillar. Peyote is the Nahuatl Indian name for caterpillar, and it applies to this plant as a sort of nickname. But in the absence of any other name than that of the Latin scientific name peyote has come to be recognized as the name for this plant. The definition for peyote and mescal in the Standard dictionary and New Webster is faulty and misleading. I explained the thing to Frank Vizetelly, and he will straighten the thing out in the next edition of the Standard.

About 30 years ago the Carizzo Indians, a small tribe, now obsolete, had their stamping ground in the lower Rio Grande. They had some mystic dances in which they chewed the dried tops of these peyote plants. These dried tops at a distance look like large black buttons. In this way locally they have been referred to as mescal buttons or mescal beans. Mescal is another Nahuatl word which got into the Mexican and from that into the English, and very nearly corresponds to our word "dope." It is applied to most any southwestern plant that is poisonous or narcotic or anything that will make one wild like the Mexican marahuana. Properly and specifically, however, mescal is the name for the product secured from pulque, the juice of the maguay, or century plant.

Some of these Indians wandered as far north to what is now Oklahoma, and there began explaining to the Indians these mystic peyote rites. This resulted in a committee of these Indians going to Laredo, Tex., in search of these same mystic plants. They found that the Mexicans of the lower class were accustomed to use these same things when green as medicine. They would bind them on their heads for headache or apply them to almost any part of their body where there was a pain. Arrangements were made by the Indians with Villegas & Co., of Laredo, dealers in Mexican products, to supply peyote. In this way traffic sprang up. Villegas & Co. supplied the Indians and in turn got their supply from the vicinity of the inland town of Los Ojuelos, about 40 miles southeast of Laredo. The traffic reached such proportion in 1909 that the gathering of these peyote was almost the entire occupation of the people of this village. They would cut the tops off, dry them, and turn them into the two local stores at $2.50 per thousand, and take their pay in trade. The two merchants in turn would send them to Villegas & Co. at $2.50 per thousand, taking their pay in trade. Villegas would sell them to the Indians in cash at $3 per thousand. Locally these dried peyotes practically passed as money.

Villegas & Co. very skillfully preserved the secret. The Indians did not know where they came from, except that they got them from Villegas & Co. The ignorant Mexicans did not know what they were for and knew nothing except they were purchased by Villegas & Co. Villegas & Co., as a sort of blind, would refer to them locally as Japanese beans. And the impression was out in the trade at Laredo that they were used by the Japanese for some medical purpose.

These peyotes are narcotic in character. They are generally chewed, although they are sometimes steeped and the tea therefrom drunk. They produce visions very much like opium and they have a distinct effect on the nerves somewhat like cocaine. I have known of several Indians being killed by eating them to excess.

Around these peyote a sort of religious cult was developed, churches were organized, and preachers appointed, and even some church buildings were erected. The principal of the cult is Alfred Hensley, of Winnebago, Nebr. Black Dog, of the Osages, and Quanah Parker, of the Comanches, were prominent in the cult. The peyote was used by the Indians for communion. They would eat a few peyotes and take one in their hand and pray to it, or rather pray to God through the medium of the peyote. The vision produced by eating the peyote was the answer to their prayers. The effect generally of these practices was demoralizing and degrading. The cult spread rapidly. From 1905 complaints from Indian field officials became so numerous that I was directed by the Indian Bureau to suppress it if possible. Investigation revealed the situation as I have explained it, and that the sole source of supply was Villegas & Co. and another house which was an offshoot of the Villegas establishment. I held a conference with these two establishments, with the result that they agreed to cooperate with me in suppressing this business if I would dispose of the peyotes that they had on the market. Accordingly I purchased all the peyotes held by these two establishments. Also purchased all the peyotes at Los Ojuelos that had been gathered. For this I expended something over $400 for these purchases and burned the entire supply. When the Indians after that sent in remittances for peyote their money would be returned and their letter sent to me. I would then get after the Indians.

I succeeded in keeping the Mexican peyote gatherers in order, through the cooperation of the Mexican consul at Laredo. A few peyotes had floated across the border from the vicinity of Muisquiz through Eagle Pass through a trader at that place. My representation to the trader was such that he agreed to quit and did quit. I made an agreement with the customs officials at Eagle Pass whereby it became practically impossible to get any quantity across the border there. By these methods I annihilated the whole peyote business and for nearly a year there was no peyote to be had. I succeeded in this without any law, but by following these "rabbit-foot" practices. Finally politics got into the situation in the department and my work was ruined. The traffic was reopened and it is now making plenty of trouble among the numerous tribes of Indians. It is alleged by the peyote chiefs that peyote is good because it weans them away from whisky. It does often wean them away from whisky, just as a man often quits whisky when he begins to use opium, cocaine, or morphine. Peyote, however, in my judgment is equally as bad or worse than whisky.

Yours, cordially,

W. E. JOHNSON.

NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION,

HON. CARL HAYDEN, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. HAYDEN: We of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union are deeply interested in the passage of your bill concerning the manufacture and use of peyote and are hopeful of its passage.

Is there anything the National W. C. T. U. can do to help bring it to a fulfillment, for not only is the Indian harmed but our boys on the border are becoming addicted to its use more and more, and we are very desirous of having this temptation removed right speedily?

With every good wish for the success of this bill and a keen desire to help, I am,

Respectfully,

MARGARET DYE ELLIS,
Superintendent Department of Legislation.

MY DEAR MR. HAYDEN: The inclosed letter from the president of the National Congress of Mothers and Parent-Teacher Associations, I am sending to you for your information. I am earnestly hoping that your bill (H. R. 2614) will soon be enacted into law.

Thanking you for your good work in behalf of Indian welfare,

MISS GERTRUDE BONNIN,

MY DEAR MISS BONNIN: Your letter in regard to the menace of peyote was presented to the board of managers of the National Congress of Mothers. A resolution was passed instructing the national legislative committee to take up the matter with Congress. Mrs. Kate Waller Barrett is chairman, and I am sure that you will have the cooperation of our legislation department on such measures as will abolish this menace.

Cordially, yours,

TO THE HON. CARL HAYDEN,

DEAR SIR: At a meeting of the New York City Indian Association held on January 20, 1919, the following resolution was unanimously adopted:

Whereas we are informed, and believe, that the use of the drug peyote is increasing among many tribes of Indians and causing moral and physical harm to large numbers of the Indian race, as well as resulting in economic loss by unfitting the users for their daily avocations; therefore

Resolved, That we approve the bill prohibiting traffic in peyote introduced in Congress by Representative HAYDEN and known as H. R. 2614, and we urge its speedy passage and strict enforcement.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA CONGREGATIONAL CONFERENCE,
Los Angeles, Calif., June 28, 1919.

HON. CARL HAYDEN,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I inclose herewith copy of resolution adopted unanimously by the Southern California Congregational Conference at its annual meeting at Whittier, May 13, 1919.

I hope that you will present this resolution to Congress in support of your bill in behalf of the Indians.

With kind regards and all good wishes, I am,

Yours, sincerely,

(Signed) GEORGE F. KENNGOTT,
Superintendent and Registrar.

We urge upon Congress the passage of the bill introduced by Hon. CARL HAYDEN in the House of Representatives (H. R. 2614) "embodying provisions for further protecting the Indians from the curse of intoxicants, which includes the inhibition of the use and importation of peyote and similar narcotics by Indians over whom or whose property the Government through its departments exercises guardianship or supervision.

BOARD OF INDIAN COMMISSIONERS,
Washington, D. C., February 26, 1918.

HON. CARL HAYDEN,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. HAYDEN: Referring to peyote, the Board of Indian Commissioners is formally on record against the use of peyote by Indians, as will be seen by the following resolutions which have been adopted:

"Voted: That the Board of Indian Commissioners favor legislation or executive action extending all restrictions applicable to the use of and traffic in intoxicating liquors so that such restrictions shall apply also to the use of and traffic in mescal or peyote."

Adopted at the annual meeting, March 7, 1912.

"Resolved, That the Board of Indian Commissioners reiterates its recommendation of March 7, 1912, in regard to the use of and traffic in mescal (peyote); that it urges the Indian Office to make careful inquiry as to the spread of the mescal habit; and that it favors in every way legislation and executive action looking to the total elimination of the evil."

Adopted at the annual meeting, January 13, 1913.

"Upon motion of Commissioner Dockweiler, it was unanimously voted that the board should address a special communication to the Secretary of the Interior, recommending the submission to Congress of a bill prohibiting the importation of peyote into the United States, prohibiting its introduction, use, or sale on any Indian reservation, or the manufacture or sale of any product thereof. It was also voted that the communication to the Secretary of the Interior should refer especially to the discussion of this subject at the thirty-second Lake Mohonk conference, and that Commissioner Dockweiler present the subject in person to the Secretary of the Interior."

"Upon motion of Commissioner Dockweiler, it was voted unanimously to be the sense of the board that the next Indian bill should include peyote among the intoxicants to be suppressed."

Adopted at the Lake Mohonk meeting, October 14, 1914.

Faithfully, yours,

MALCOLM McDOWELL, Secretary.

UNITED STATES INDIAN SERVICE,
TRUXTON CANYON INDIAN SCHOOL,
Valentine, Ariz., April 16, 1917.

HON. CARL HAYDEN, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. HAYDEN: I am just in receipt of a copy of House bill 2614, amending sections 2139 and 2140 to include intoxicants used especially by Indians, and further limiting introduction, etc.

About nine years ago the writer tested the effects of peyote by placing himself under its influence. This was while he was in charge of the Cheyenne and Arapahoe Agency in Oklahoma. After the experiment he wrote in detail his experiences while under its influence. A copy of this was sent to the Indian Office, and may be found there I presume. I thought it possible that this might be of some value in discussion of the subject before the committee.

I tried the experiment of placing myself under the influence of this substance, and, while the results are very different from alcoholic intoxication, they are very marked and very bad. I was under the spell of peyote for several hours, and, while the sensation is very pleasurable while it lasts, the after effects are not pleasant.

There has always been very decided opposition to legislation against peyote on the part of Indian users. It is a dangerous and very harmful intoxicant.

Very respectfully,

CHARLES E. SHELL,
Superintendent.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, in just a few minutes we are going to vote on this very important measure, which does away with important rules of the House, and we have only 52 Congressmen here on the floor to decide that question. The balance, I presume, are at the double-header ball game. If there is a roll call, as many of them as have returned will be running in here from their offices without knowing anything about what they are voting on, and so this important measure will be decided.

My friend from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN] asks what good is the point of order if, when we make it and prevent appropriations from coming into a bill in the House, the Senate can put it back and it gets into the bill after all, as he intimates it will. Now, if they all got back, which is not the case, still we would have one advantage, I will say to my friend, because whenever an amendment is put on by the Senate without authority of law every Member of the House has a right to vote on it here in the House when it comes back under the conference report. But they are not all put back. Let me call my friend's attention to the fact that when one of our colleagues in the days of Densmore, when he was spending money recklessly from the Treasury on the so-called United States Employment Service without any benefit to the American people, offered an amendment upon the floor to one of the supply bills proposing to appropriate more than $10,000,000 to turn over to him to be wasted, that proposition was defeated in the House on my point of order.

I made a point of order against that amendment and it was stricken out of the bill and it was never put back. Almost immediately the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GALLIVAN] offered another amendment and claimed it was authorized by the enacting clause creating the department, and it proposed to spend $10,000,000 on this department. I made a point of order against it and it went out. The gentleman from New York [Mr. LONDON] then took a spiel at it and offered an amendment on the floor to appropriate $10,000,000 for the United States Employment Service under Densmore, and I made a point of order against it and it went out. Then the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DECKER] offered another amendment to put $10,000,000 into the bill for the United States Employment Service, to be spent under John B. Densmore, and I made a point of order to that and it went out, because there was no law authorizing it.

It is true that a few hundred thousand dollars was put back by the Senate, but $10,000,000 was saved to the Treasury. I want to call the attention of the gentleman from Arizona to the fact that when we granted the third bonus to the civilian employees of the Government there was a provision in the bill to pay $240 bonus to all civilian employees drawing not over $2,500 per annum. It was the third bonus we paid. You will remember that you have paid them one bonus of $120 and four of $240 each. Everyone knows now that the gentleman from California [Mr. NOLAN] had prepared to offer from the floor, if no point of order was made against the section, an amendment to increase the bonus to $480. The labor papers published here in Washington asserted that they had enough votes promised on the floor of the House to carry that $480 bonus. I do not know whether they had or not, but when they say they have, they usually have them, because when the gentleman from California [Mr. NOLAN] gets up here and forces a roll call he usually gets enough votes to carry the measure that he is fighting for. I made a point of order against the paragraph and had it stricken out, which kept him from offering his $480 amendment. Then the labor papers in this country from one side to the other condemned me because I had kept 200,000 civilian employees from getting a $480 bonus, because if it had gone on they would have passed it in the Senate and incidentally, although I had kept $50,000,000 in the Treasury, unions condemned me from one side of the United States to the other.

I want to say to my good friend from Arizona that a short time ago I made points of order against one bill which was sustained by the Chairman, of eminent parliamentary ability, that struck out nearly $2,000,000 from the bill, and it is these items, the most of which the Senate put back, that my friend from Arizona referred to.

Mr. HAYDEN. They were all put back.

Mr. BLANTON. Practically all of them, but I want to tell the gentleman that the House of Representatives had the right and exercised it of voting on the items by a roll call and going on record.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. In a few minutes. I want to finish my statement. Do you know what can be done under this bill? Who is it that says the Indian Bureau has been wasteful and extravagant; who says it has been full of graft in the past? Let me repeat what the distinguished ex-Senator, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] has just said, "that Mr. Speaker Reed said that this Indian Bureau had been the most wasteful bureau, and more full of graft, than any other bureau in the Government," and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLY] showed you that that was true, and other gentlemen have shown you that that is true. It has been the most extravagant bureau in the Government for years past. Let me tell you something: You cut off the right of every Member in this House from exercising his constitutional prerogative under the rules of this House to make points of order against items of appropriation, for which there is no law, when you pass this bill and they can bring in any kind of an item here they want to and you have got to swallow it and let it become the law of this country. [Applause.]

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to myself. Mr. Chairman, this bill, if it becomes law, will have absolutely no different effect upon the Indians or the Bureau of Indian Affairs from that which exists to-day under present laws. It will have no effect upon the Congress except the fact that when an item which should be appropriated for is brought before the House it will not be subject to the objection of some Member who desires to make a speech and who has no interest in any particular item other than that his desire may be gratified.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNYDER. Yes.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. In other words, if this bill is passed, the entire membership will decide on the appropriation instead of one lone Member.

Mr. SNYDER. That is a proper statement of it.

Mr. HILL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNYDER. I will.

Mr. HILL. Does the gentleman think that those of us who are opposed to the Bureau of Indian Affairs can vote for this bill and get a better crack at it next time?

Mr. SNYDER. I will say that any Member of the House who has had opportunity to make careful study of the Bureau of Indian Affairs would be justified in wishing the bureau might be put out of business, but the men who have made a complete study of the Indian Service have come to the conclusion that it is the only way that the Indian affairs can be wound up.

Mr. HILL. Then, if we are against the Bureau of Indian Affairs and want it closed up, we can still vote for this bill?

Mr. SNYDER. Absolutely. There is nothing in the bill that affects the Indian Bureau. I have in my hand the appropriation bill of last session, and more than 90 per cent of the items of appropriation in that bill were subject to a point of order, and more than 70 per cent of the total appropriation was subject to a point of order. Why?

Away back in 1832 the first Indian Commissioner was appointed, the bureau being then under the War Department. In 1849 the Interior Department was organized, and the Bureau of Indian Affairs was set up without any substantive law except that which created the Indian Commissioner in 1832. During all of that period this service for the Indian has been from year to year increased in size and volume until to-day there has grown around that little stump which was started with the idea of civilizing the Indians more than 100 different bureau activities in the service, including hospitals, schools, forestry, education, and a thousand and one different items. In fact, every single item of Government activity is included in the Indian service, except a branch of the Army and Navy. There has never been a time when these various activities were added to the bureau under a substantive law, and thus make it possible that appropriations should be made from year to year without being subject to points of order, as is the case in other departments, and under other bureau services. It may seem strange to some of the membership that I am here advocating the passage of this bill because of the fact that I raised most of the points of order upon it when it was under consideration in the House. But I want to say I have but one desire as a Member of this body, and that is to expedite good legislation. I do not care to be a party to impeding proper legislation, and I do not care what committee has the making of the appropriation. I want it arranged so that the legislation regarding these appropriations can be carried on in this House and not in the body at the other end of the Capitol. Last year nearly 90 per cent of items carried in the Indian appropriation bill were stricken out on points of order and went over to the Senate, where they were added to the bill, and it was brought back here. All the average Member knew about the legislation was what he gathered from the debate when the conference report was under consideration. That is wrong. This House ought to have the right to say what appropriations shall be made for this service, and if this present bill is enacted it will have that right. Otherwise anyone, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] or myself, or anyone else, can absolutely mutilate the Indian appropriation bill every time it comes into the House and force the legislation into the other branch of the legislative body. Therefore in behalf of good order and good legislation I hope this bill will pass, so that either the Indian appropriation committee or the present appropriating committee will be given the right to authorize appropriations for the various activities in this bureau without being subject to points of order and in a regular and orderly way.

The report that the committee has made on the bill covers the question entirely. It is proposed to offer a few amendments, which are simply corrective, without any idea of at all changing the policy of the bill, when we reach consideration of it under the five-minute rule, but the committee has no idea of putting into the bill anything more than to do just what the report says it wants to do. The report follows:

The Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7848) entitled "A bill authorizing appropriations and expenditures for the administration of Indian affairs, and for other purposes," having considered the same, report it back to the House without amendment, with the recommendation that the bill do pass.

This is a bill to make in order appropriations for bureaus that have been added to the Indian Service since the bureau was inaugurated in 1838, which have thus become integral parts of the service, nearly all of which have been appropriated for from year to year and which will continue, in all probability, as long as the bureau exists. Therefore the committee has deemed it wise to present a bill which will make in order these appropriations which have hitherto been subject to a point of order.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNYDER. Yes.

Mr. DOWELL. Then, as I understand the gentleman, this bill does not authorize anything not already included in the Indian appropriation act.

Mr. SNYDER. It does not authorize the bureau to do a single additional thing.

Mr. DOWELL. It does not authorize anything that is not appropriated for under the present law.

Mr. SNYDER. Absolutely not. It includes only those things that have become integral parts of the service.

Mr. DOWELL. And that are now a part of the service.

Mr. SNYDER. Yes. The argument of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON], with reference to his striking out $10,000,000 of this, that, and the other thing, is simply foreign to the consideration of this bill, because of the fact that he could do the same thing on any other appropriation bill if any new item were brought in. The integrity of the committee as a legislative body is wholly guarded in this bill.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. And the Committee on Indian Affairs, instead of giving up its jurisdiction, is exercising its legislative jurisdiction when reporting this particular bill? If there is anything objectionable that ought not to be authorized, the Committee of the Whole House or the House itself can reject it.

Mr. SNYDER. Absolutely. The Committee on Indian Affairs is living in hope that some day that committee may regain the power which it has lost, and if it does, then it wants the right to do the things in making the appropriation bill that this bill would permit it to do in case it becomes a law.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNYDER. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman said that the committee could not do anything more under this bill if it becomes a law than is now contained in the appropriation act. Under the automobile clause, if the appropriation committee wanted to do so, it could bring in a provision to give a Pierce Arrow limousine to each one of the 18,000 employees of the bureau, if it wanted to.

Mr. SNYDER. The gentleman is wrong in two particulars. In the first place, the committee could only bring in the request for appropriation; it could not make it. In the second place, there are not 18,000 employees in the service, or anything like that number.

Mr. BLANTON. Are there not 6,000 white and 12,000 Indians?

Mr. SNYDER. There are 6,000 employees in the Indian Service.

Mr. BLANTON. And 12,000 Indians.

Mr. SNYDER. The gentleman from Oklahoma, who was with us on our investigating tour last summer, knows the value of automobiles, and we have furnished the service automobiles for years, and this does not change the situation at all. It simply fixes it so, when the House desires to appropriate $200,000 for the purpose of needed vehicles, it can do so if it wishes, and not lay itself liable to an objection and have it go out on a point of order, and then go over to the Senate to achieve its desire.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNYDER. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. The gentleman, I am sure, wants to be correct in his statement as to the number of employees. The report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs for 1920 shows 6,000 employees paid all the time and 12,000 and more Indian employees in the service.

Mr. SNYDER. I think the gentleman makes a mistake in including both in that item. I think the 6,000 statutory employees are included in the 12,000.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. No; 12,000 Indian employees.

Mr. SNYDER. That is not the way I understand it.

Mr. ANDREWS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SNYDER. I will.

Mr. ANDREWS. Was the raising of points of order on the last appropriation bill to demonstrate the necessity for this legislation now in order to clear the way?

Mr. SNYDER. No. I will say to the gentleman that at the time these points were raised there was no such legislation as this contemplated so far as I am concerned. I did not think about it at the time. However, I will say this much: After I had had time to think over what happened and the possibilities of what might happen in the future unless this thing was corrected, I concluded that it was time to frame legislation which would not permit that possibility to again arise.

Mr. LAYTON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SNYDER. Yes.

Mr. LAYTON. The gentleman is evidently a student of Indian affairs. I would like to ask him, for the information of the House and of the country at large, does he see any prospect in sight whereby this very expensive proposition that has grown up will begin to atrophy?

Mr. SNYDER. I can answer that question in this way: If the House would accept the recommendations of the committee which made an investigation last year and prepared a bill and brought it into this body—and some members of that committee nearly worked themselves to death to get it before the House—if that measure and the recommendations of that committee who made the careful investigation referred to were adopted, we might begin to see an end to the Indian Service. But as it exists to-day it seems there will never be an end to it. This is one section, which is section 2 of the recommendation:

2. All Indian children of any quantum of Indian blood who have received an education in Indian or other schools to the standard of the seventh grade, and who have become 21 years of age, male or female, should be made citizens, and at the age of 23 be given certificates of competency and have turned over to them anything due them from the Government and then be required to work out their own salvation. Inasmuch as it has been proven beyond the question of a doubt that a very large per cent of the Indians sent to Indian schools return to their tribal government, it is believed that this recommendation would return to the country considerably more of benefit and profit for the money spent and also tend to force the Indian to make something of himself.

Mr. LAYTON. So that is a mere recommendation and is not yet the law?

Mr. SNYDER. It is not yet the law. If that and the eight other recommendations made by this committee were adopted, within a period of 10 years it would furnish the Indian Service with a revolving fund which would support itself and would produce greater results from the schools. Now we do not get 2 scholars out of 100 out into the economic walks of life. In fact, we do not get 2 out of 100 who go back to the tribes and amount to anything more than they did before they went there, and most of the money we spend on the education to-day is lost.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. To discuss the pending bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the three hours has expired.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. I did not understand there was any unanimous-consent agreement reached in reference to close of general debate. I think I am entitled to an hour; but I may relieve the committee by saying that if I am entitled to the hour I do not intend to use it, but I do want to use a little time if I am entitled to recognition.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, I understood that at the expiration of the three hours we were going to proceed under the five-minute rule.

The CHAIRMAN. There was no agreement to that effect, the Chair is informed.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, would it not be possible to conduct further discussion of this bill under the five-minute rule?

The CHAIRMAN. Of course, the reading of the bill would begin immediately if general debate had been closed, but there having been no agreement in regard to the termination of the time for general debate the bill is still open for general debate.

Mr. CARTER. It would not be in order to move to close debate?

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent might be asked or anyone might move that the committee rise for that purpose.

Mr. CARTER. I understand, but I did not understand—

The CHAIRMAN. If there is no discussion of the bill, the Clerk will read the bill. However, the gentleman from Indiana has been recognized.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I desire to discuss the bill—

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask unanimous consent that general debate be closed at the expiration of the remarks of the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that is not proper in committee.

The CHAIRMAN. That request can not be made unless the gentleman from Indiana yields for that purpose.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. I do not think if I did yield for that purpose it would be proper to close general debate in committee.

Mr. SNYDER. Then I shall move to rise after the gentleman has concluded his remarks.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I just want these few minutes to discuss the proposed measure, which I think is a very beneficial measure, and I should like to send to the Clerk's desk and have read for the information of the committee an amendment which I desire to offer.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will read the amendment proposed to be offered for the information of the committee.

There was no objection.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I would like, if I may, to have the attention of the chairman of the committee, Mr. SNYDER, in discussing this matter.

Section 2, Mr. Chairman, provides the annual estimate shall be submitted for the consideration of Congress as provided by section 5 of the legislative act approved March 3, 1901. That is found in the Thirty-first Statutes at Large, page 1009. Section 5, referred to in section 2 of this bill, has been repealed by implication by the passage of the budget law, and the section of the budget law which repeals it by implication reads as follows. It is section 215:

The head of each department and establishment shall revise the departmental estimates and submit them to the bureau on or before September 15 of each year.

Mr. SNYDER. I would like to say to the gentleman that the committee has an amendment prepared to strike out section 2.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. That will be very fine. I yield back the balance of my time, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that general debate be now closed and that we take up the bill under the five-minute rule.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that general debate on the bill be now closed. Is there objection?

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I think we ought to have a quorum. I make the point of no quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois make the point of no quorum?

Mr. CANNON. I doubt if there is a quorum present. Possibly there may be.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the gentleman from Illinois makes the point that there is no quorum of the committee present.

Mr. CANNON. I think so. I doubt if there are 100 Members here.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred Members are present, a quorum. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Bureau of Indian Affairs, under the supervision of the Secretary of the Interior, in addition to the duties now required to be performed by existing law, shall direct, supervise, and expend such moneys as Congress may from time to time appropriate, authority for which is hereby granted, or that may be available from other sources, for the benefit, care, and assistance of the Indians throughout the United States for the following purposes:

General support and civilization, including education.

For relief of distress and conservation of health.

For industrial assistance and advancement and general administration of Indian property.

For extension, improvement, operation, and maintenance of existing Indian irrigation systems and for development of water supplies.

For the enlargement, extension, improvement, and repair of the buildings and grounds of existing plants and projects.

For the employment of inspectors, supervisors, superintendents, clerks, field matrons, farmers, physicians, Indian police, Indian judges, and other employees.

For the suppression of traffic in liquor, peyote, and other deleterious drugs.

For the purchase of horse-drawn and motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles for official use.

And for general and incidental expenses in connection with the administration of Indian affairs.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment:

Amendment offered by Mr. SNYDER: Page 1, line 4, after the word "Interior," strike out all of lines 4 and 5 to and including the word "law" in line 5.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, all that I desire to say in regard to that is, that it has been shown to my satisfaction by various Members of the House that that language means nothing, and therefore it is superfluous and should be stricken from the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, I offer another amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers another amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. SNYDER: Page 1, line 7, after the word "appropriate" strike out all of lines 7 and 8 up to and including the word "sources," so that the paragraph will read:

"Shall direct, supervise, and expend such moneys as Congress may from time to time appropriate for the benefit, care, and assistance of the Indians throughout the United States for the following purposes."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, I offer another committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers another committee amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 2, line 12, after the word "liquor" strike out the balance of the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, all I desire to say in regard to that amendment is that there never has been an appropriation made for the suppression of peyote or deleterious drugs so far as the Committee on Indian Affairs is concerned. There has been a bill passed by this House within a year or two in regard to this matter and it never has become a law. And since there is no such authorization and since there has been no appropriation for it, it was thought wise this morning by the committee, at a meeting at which there was a majority present, and after full discussion, that the matter should be left out until such time as there was occasion for an appropriation.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. SNYDER. I will.

Mr. BLANTON. Does not the gentleman think that if this paragraph, lines 12 and 13, is going to mean anything he must put the word "intoxicating" before the word "liquor"?

Mr. SNYDER. If I had my way, I would strike it all out.

Mr. BLANTON. It will mean nothing if you do not put "intoxicating" preceding the word "liquor." It is intoxicating liquor that there is a traffic in. It is not just liquor.

Mr. SNYDER. Most of the bootlegging liquor we get nowadays is intoxicating enough.

Mr. TILLMAN. If I understand, it leaves the word "liquor" in and cuts out "peyote and other deleterious drugs"?

Mr. SNYDER. The reason for that is that there has never been an appropriation for the suppression of peyote. There have been some of us opposed to appropriating money for the further regulation of the liquor traffic among the Indians, due to the fact that we are now appropriating several million dollars for the enforcement of the Volstead Act and the eighteenth amendment under another bureau. And it seemed to the committee this morning, after a careful discussion and a vote, that it was wise to not attempt to legislate for something that did not exist. And so I offer this as a committee amendment.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I rise to offer a privileged amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. TILLMAN] is recognized in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. HILL. I rise to offer a privileged perfecting amendment. Does not that come ahead of the other?

Mr. TILLMAN. I think the Chair recognized me.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. HILL] will be recognized later.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. Chairman, there might be some reason for the chairman's position, that the entire provision might well be stricken out, including intoxicating liquors, for the reason that we have another department which is supposed to enforce the laws against intoxicating liquors, but no good reason why liquor should be left in and peyote excluded. But I want to discuss the question of peyote. For six years I was a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs, and during that time a very exhaustive investigation was had by a special subcommittee with reference to this drug, peyote. I served as chairman of that committee, the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNYDER] and the gentleman from Oklahoma, Mr. Hastings, and possibly others, were members.

Mr. LAYTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TILLMAN. Yes.

Mr. LAYTON. What is peyote?

Mr. TILLMAN. I will explain. The gentleman is a physician, and will understand a great deal better than a layman would what peyote is. Peyote is a variety of cactus. I hold in my hand a peyote button, sometimes called a mescal button, or bean. It was discovered in Mexico when the conquering Spaniards came under Cortez. The Aztecs were using it. "Peyote" is an Aztec derivative. It has an effect upon the user similar to opium and other deleterious drugs, and the Indians now are extensively using it. They have a religious ceremony at which they use peyote. This is the button that grows on the top of the cactus. They swallow this in the form of pills, or they boil it and then drink the tea, and it has in the end a very weakening but at first a very happy effect upon the user.

Mr. GENSMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TILLMAN. Yes.

Mr. GENSMAN. Will the gentleman state whether or not he has ever attended one of those gatherings where that ceremony was indulged in?

Mr. TILLMAN. The gentleman asked that question of another speaker. I have not. Has the gentleman?

Mr. GENSMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. TILLMAN. I have lived near the Indians all my life. My district joins Oklahoma. I am the Indians' friend, and I will repeat to this body the testimony of many men and women under oath, physicians, scientists, druggists, and numerous others who have attended these ceremonies time and again, who know what they are, and who have denounced them in the most vigorous terms.

I will say to the gentleman from Delaware [Mr. LAYTON], an eminent medical practitioner, and other physicians in this body, that this drug is dangerous in the extreme, is a poison, a narcotic, worse in its effects than opium or cocaine. A physician from Anadarko, Okla., Dr. Chambers, a Cherokee Indian, says of peyote:

Peyote is on the increase and will continue to be so long as we have no backing. I have studied the Indians that use it very carefully and can not find that it does them the least bit of good. On the other hand, it is very harmful in many ways:

1. It lowers their vitality and their power of resistance to any exposure they may have to undergo.
2. In using it the Indians are always in a hot tent, breathing foul air, etc.
3. Peyote has first a stimulating and later a depressing effect on the heart.
4. I know of a number of cases of sexual intercourse of Indians while under the influence of the drug.
5. I know of nine babies dying because of the administering to them of peyote by some medicine man.

The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. GENSMAN] refers to a religious ceremony in the use of peyote. This so-called ceremony is farcical, of course. Men and women get in a hot tent. They breathe the foul air and sit there all night. Peyote is the god they are worshiping. They drink this drug and sometimes commit all sorts of abuses, sexual crimes often, witnesses say. Peyote first has a stimulating and then a depressing effect of the heart.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TILLMAN. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The gentleman repeatedly stated that it produced a very happy effect.

Mr. TILLMAN. Yes. I will explain that in a moment.

Mr. BLANTON. He has already explained it.

Mr. TILLMAN. So does opium produce a happy effect.

I read from a letter received by me from Dr. Ketcham, director of the Bureau of Catholic Indian Missions:

THE BUREAU OF CATHOLIC INDIAN MISSIONS,
Washington, D. C., February 26, 1918.

Hon. JOHN N. TILLMAN,

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. TILLMAN: As your subcommittee has been considering the question of peyote, I beg to submit the following in support of the effort looking to its legal suppression:

1. The unanimous testimony of all the Catholic missionaries to the Indians, and, I believe, the testimony of the missionaries of other religious organizations working among the Indians, is to the effect that the use of peyote results in great mental, moral, and physical injury to the Indian people. I inclose herewith a letter from Rev. Francis C. Elast, who has had occasion to observe the effect of peyote eating among the Kickapoos of Kansas. During a period of many years missionaries have been writing in this strain to this office, and I have duly forwarded their letters to the honorable Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and since 1909 have repeatedly endeavored to induce the Indian Office to take a stand against the importation and use of peyote.

2. I have also received letters from the Indians begging that something be done to prevent the introduction of peyote among their people. Letters of this kind came to me especially from various Sioux reservations and satisfied me that not only the missionaries but even those Indians who wish to advance their people are convinced of the baneful effects of this drug. I also received one letter from an Indian of the Arapaho Tribe in Wyoming who had been addicted to peyote telling me of the injury its use had done him and pleading with me to warn others who were in danger of being led into the same habit, which interested persons have endeavored to propagate and protect under the guise of religion.

3. With the exception of certain Indians who use peyote, I have never yet heard the habit defended or advocated by any persons actually living in the Indian country. I am inclosing herewith a statement of Dr. Claude S. Chambers, United States physician stationed at Anadarko, Okla., which I recently submitted to the Board of Indian Commissioners, of which I am a member. I call attention to the fact that the Kiowa Agency is one which is held up as an example by those who advocate the use of peyote. Dr. Chambers himself is a member of the Cherokee Tribe. He has practiced medicine for a number of years among various tribes of Indians, and I am convinced that if he were not sure of his ground his inclination would be to humor the Indians and let them have their way.

4. The Board of Indian Commissioners has continuously advocated legislation for the suppression of peyote. I am inclosing herewith resolutions adopted by the board to this effect, beginning March 7, 1912. Previous to that year the board devoted a great deal of time to the investigation of the subject, and before it both the advocates and the antagonists of peyote put forth their respective claims. Since that time the individual members of the board have, as occasion offered, been gathering information relative to peyote eating and the peyote "cult."

5. I personally have had a number of conferences with Indians who advocate peyote, particularly with representatives of the Kiowa Agency tribes and with the Quapaws. I have spent hours with them discussing the question and trying to view it from every possible angle. My personal friendship for these tribes in particular and for the Indian people in general would incline me to indulge them in anything not harmful to them from which they derive, or imagine they derive, consolation and benefit; but having carefully studied the question for many years, my very friendship for them compels me to oppose the use of peyote and to express the hope that the Government of the United States may intervene to suppress the noxious traffic and habit.

Respectfully submitted.

WILLIAM H. KETCHAM, Director.

The Indian Office is against this evil. The missionaries are against it. All the churches are against it. The societies in the East and elsewhere who are laboring for the uplift of the Indian are against it.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TILLMAN. Yes.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Is there any criminal law against the use of peyote?

Mr. TILLMAN. Out where it is well known—in Utah, Colorado, and Nevada—they have stringent State statutes against the use of it.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. But we have no Federal law against it?

Mr. TILLMAN. No; there is no Federal law prohibiting it. We are the guardians of these Indians. They are our wards. Every man who loves them—and I love them—wants to take from them this deleterious drug.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas has expired.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more. This is an important amendment, and I presume the only one that will be discussed at any length.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TILLMAN. Here is the effect it has. Dr. Havelock Ellis, an eminent physician, says his first symptom was that of immense strength and wonderful intellectual power. I think that is true also of all such drugs. He experimented with it on himself. After a period of elation he suffered great depression.

Now, listen; this is what makes it attractive and dangerous. I quote from the testimony of Dr. Ellis:

A pale shadow seemed to hover over the book I read. Visions came slowly, then rapidly. First, a vast field of golden jewels studded with red, crimson, and green stones—a wonderful perfume—a dull, rich glow and brilliant points—rare flowers and iridescent fibrous wings, as of butterflies—then a hollow revolving cylinder lined with marvelous mother-of-pearl—profuse and various images—living arabesques. Then I saw waves of light, shadows flushed with violet. Once I visioned "floating white drapery" and "feathery forms."

No wonder they like it. That is what it does for them at first; the reaction that follows is not so pleasant.

Mr. LONDON. I wonder how much he consumed directly before testifying. [Laughter.]

Mr. TILLMAN. The same quantity the Indians consume during their so-called religious ceremonies. [Laughter.]

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Where does the gentleman say this drug can be obtained?

Mr. TILLMAN. Down in Mexico, on both sides of the Rio Grande, and in a few other sections where cacti abound.

Mr. CARTER. The gentleman will recall that I was also a member of this investigating committee.

Mr. TILLMAN. Yes.

Mr. CARTER. And we spent a great deal of time preparing an exhaustive report.

Mr. TILLMAN. Yes.

Mr. CARTER. I fail to remember the party who wrote that beautiful dream that the gentleman is just telling us about. I would like to ask the gentleman his authority for that statement.

Mr. TILLMAN. It is Dr. Havelock Ellis. He took it himself. He is speaking by the card. His testimony is set out at length in the hearings that I hold in my hand.

Mr. SNYDER. That was the information that was brought to us by Dr. Wiley, was it not?

Mr. TILLMAN. I think so; but he quoted Dr. Ellis. Here is what Dr. Richardson, of Denver, says:

As far as its results on the human economy are concerned, from a pathological standpoint, alcohol is altogether the safest and least harmful. The alcoholic subject may by a careful system of dietetics be made to escape physical and mental weakness, but the mesal fiend can not.

It is a vicious thing. We had before us a number of Indians who belong to this peyote cult. They did not want to give up this stimulant; but, as I say, every real friend of the Indian does want him deprived of the right to debauch himself and his family by the use of this drug.

Mr. LAYTON. From the description the gentleman has read, given by the physician who experimented on himself, I should say that the drug is somewhat after the order of hashish.

Mr. TILLMAN. Yes; it is sometimes called hashish, but erroneously so; but it has the hashish kick.

Mr. LAYTON. You will recollect that De Quincy wrote an article on that subject while under the influence of it.

Mr. TILLMAN. I do, Doctor; and it is a very interesting article.

Mr. LAYTON. And there is also a little booklet by Prof. Horatio C. Wood, of the University of Pennsylvania, who took hashish and wrote his symptoms while under the influence of it.

Mr. TILLMAN. Yes; that is true.

Mr. PARRISH. I should like to ask the gentleman from Arkansas how the traffic in this drug can be suppressed without a Federal law?

Mr. TILLMAN. It is impossible to do that, and we are trying to get such an act through Congress, the bill having been introduced by the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN].

Mr. PARRISH. Does the Committee on Indian Affairs intend to bring in a law which will deal with it?

Mr. TILLMAN. The history of this proposed legislation is that after the conclusion of the hearings before our committee a bill was reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs which passed this House unanimously. It never has been considered by the Senate, but it passed the House last May without a dissenting vote. Now, I appeal to the members of the committee. This is a serious subject. This drug is debauching the Indians all over the country. They are forming these so-called peyote cults everywhere. It has the effect of making them forget the Christian religion, and that is one of the reasons, no doubt, why most of the ministers and uplift people are against its use. The greater reason, however, is that it is destroying them, as I have pointed out.

I would curtail no man's religious privileges, but the claim, stoutly maintained, that these night orgies in a small tent polluted with foul air should not be outlawed because of the religious character of the ceremonies should receive scant credit, although picturesque and eloquent Indian orators before the subcommittee pleaded persuasively for the "peyote religion," and insisted that it would be an unwarranted interference with their "constitutional" rights to curtail the worship of the peyote god. They quote scripture to prove a biblical justification of this alleged sacrament. In view of the fact that many reputable witnesses testify that many of these peyote feasts are attended with unrestrained libertinism, this particular claim urged by Indian orators with great force might be met with the much-quoted question:

What plea so tainted and corrupt but being seasoned with a gracious voice obscures the show of evil; what damned error but some sober brow will bless it and approve it with a text!

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas has expired.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I rise to offer a perfecting amendment. The chairman of the committee has moved to strike out the words "peyote and other deleterious drugs," in lines 12 and 13. I move to amend by striking out of lines 12 and 13 the following words:

For the suppression of traffic in liquor, peyote, and other deleterious drugs.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will suggest that that is not a perfecting amendment. That is a separate amendment, which will be voted on after the other one is disposed of.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, I want to urge with all the earnestness in my being that the amendment offered be not adopted by the committee. [Applause.] I was a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs when this question was investigated by a subcommittee. Not being a member of the subcommittee, I did not have the immediate first-hand information that a few of the members had, but as a member of the full committee we considered the question most seriously, and I want to tell you that the peyote habit is a habit that is akin to the opium or morphine habit, that is working its havoc in our country and other countries.

Mr. HILL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENCH. Yes.

Mr. HILL. Would it not be better, then, to put it under the jurisdiction of the Harrison Drug Act and treat it as a drug and not treat it in an Indian bill?

Mr. FRENCH. We may consider that later; but peyote is something that is peculiar to the Indians. As has been said, it had its origin down in Mexico and along the Mexican border; but to-day, especially since the stopping of the sources from which the Indians can obtain liquor, Indians and whites who are engaged in the peyote business find it profitable to buy these peyote buttons and sell them for profit to the Indians farther north.

Mr. SNYDER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FRENCH. Yes.

Mr. SNYDER. Is it not a fact that whether this stays in the bill or goes out it does not have any effect upon any money that is to be spent for the suppression or regulation of peyote? The only thing is that if this goes out it leaves legislation referring to it that may come up later subject to a point of order.

Mr. FRENCH. Yes; that is true; and for that reason we ought not to leave it necessary to have the fight over and over again with the convening of each session of Congress and the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill. The fact of the business is that not only is the drug damnable but since the abolition of the liquor business, and thus the opportunity to purchase liquor as the Indians were in the habit of purchasing it, the peyote drug habit is increasing and is extending itself northward among the Indians, even almost to the Canadian line. The gentleman stated the fact when he said that most of those who are familiar with the question, as doctors or religious or welfare workers, are earnestly opposed to the peyote habit among the Indians. He might have stated further that many of the better Indians themselves are opposed to it, and their representatives came before our committee and spoke with an earnestness that I never saw manifested by Indians in urging any other cause, begging the committee to make it possible for their people to be saved from the peyote habit that was being extended among them.

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENCH. I will.

Mr. TILLMAN. Who is Mrs. Gertrude Bonnin?

Mr. FRENCH. Mrs. Bonnin was one of the witnesses to whom I referred. She herself is a member of the Sioux Tribe of Indians. I have understood that she is a kin of the late Sitting Bull. At any rate, she is one of the prominent, outstanding Indian women of our country.

Mr. TILLMAN. Is she not married to an American officer?

Mr. FRENCH. She is married to an American officer who saw service in the World War, and she is one of the outstanding Indian women in this country in every cause that means for the betterment of her people.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENCH. I will.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. I agree with the gentleman's idea that the traffic should be suppressed, but there is no criminal law against it in the United States.

Mr. FRENCH. There is no criminal law.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. How are you going to suppress it by the Federal Government; if there is no criminal law on the subject, how can you suppress it?

Mr. FRENCH. I think there will be a criminal law shortly. A bill is pending that I believe will pass Congress.

Mr. EVANS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENCH. Yes.

Mr. EVANS. Is not there a bill pending before the Indian Affairs Committee making it a crime to deal in peyote?

Mr. HAYDEN. The bill passed the other House and is pending before the Indian Committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Idaho has expired.

Mr. GENSMAN. Mr. Chairman, I recognize the temper of the House at this time and of the Members; but, gentlemen, I come from a country that only 20 years ago was entirely inhabited by the Indians, except for a few Indian traders. I have been in a peyote church merely as a casual observer, having stepped in to see what they were doing. I want to say to you that I never have seen anything going on there that could be criticized in reference to the peyote religion. History tells us that back in Europe, along the Ural Mountains, we had a tribe of people who began to punish the members of their tribe on account of their religious belief. Those people were turned out into the interior and afterwards their offspring conquered Rome. Now, gentlemen, we have had a very vivid illustration of the persecution of men and women on account of their religious belief right here at home. We are but a very short distance from the place on the Atlantic coast where the Pilgrim Fathers landed, and they landed on the shores of America because of the fact that the country from which they came persecuted them on account of their religious belief.

Now, you have heard the gentleman from Arkansas, who never saw a peyote tent, a peyote tepee, or a peyote church; he knows nothing about it but what he may have read in the statement of some doctor or self-styled scientist. He tells you that these Indians go into a hot tent and have ceremonies under insanitary conditions and surroundings. Why, gentlemen, far be it from me to compare my religion with theirs, but I do not think the gentleman from Arkansas is right about it. We find occasionally the white man's churches not entirely ventilated. Gentlemen, in the short time I have to talk to you on this subject I want to say to you that I am acquainted with a great number of Indians whose ancestors brought their religion with them from the time of Cortez in Mexico, and they are just as proud and enjoy their religion just as much as you enjoy yours.

I say to you that that is the old, old way of proselytism. The Indian's peyote religion is just as sacred to him as your religion is to you. There are men on the floor of the House to-day who know something about the peyote religion at first hand, men whom you absolutely respect, men who are a credit to this House, men who, I am glad to say, and I wish I might say it of myself, have Indian blood circulating in their veins. They will not tell you, gentlemen, that the peyote religion is not a thing for them. They will not tell you that the Indians ought to be deprived of it; that remains for some fellow from Arkansas.

Mr. CHANDLER of Oklahoma. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GENSMAN. Certainly.

Mr. CHANDLER of Oklahoma. I would like to ask the gentleman if the Protestants do not say that the Catholic religion is wrong, and the Catholics say that the Protestant religion is wrong.

Mr. GENSMAN. Yes; and you find the Catholics trying to proselyte the Methodists and the Methodists trying to proselyte the Baptists, and the Dutch Reformed Church trying to proselyte the Indians from their church. I tell you that, as far as I am concerned, all religions are good. I wish that I had more of it myself. [Laughter.]

Mr. LAYTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GENSMAN. Not just now; I will yield later.

I want to say to you that we would all be better if we had more religion in our nature, and whatever religion you have, it is sacred to you, and it is as sacred to the Indian as to anyone else, and I believe from talking to them and seeing them in their performances—

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. CHANDLER of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CHALMERS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. GENSMAN. Yes; in a moment.

Mr. LAYTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman now yield?

Mr. GENSMAN. Yes.

Mr. LAYTON. I am a little bit mixed. Is peyote a religion, or is it a drug they get from the top of the cactus plant?

Mr. GENSMAN. I will tell the gentleman what peyote is. Peyote is a little root about the size of a radish, and is not the mescal and is not a part of the cactus plant. It is of the cactus family, but it grows in the ground in the arid country, coming up a very little bit above the ground. The Indian cuts the top of it off and uses that in their religious ceremonies. I have no doubt if the gentleman took enough of these peyote beans and boiled them down and drank the fluid he would have certain hallucinations—at least some doctors think he would, and I am not denying that; but at the same time—and far be it from me to compare the religion of the Indians to the religion of the white man—could not the gentleman take enough of the red wine used in the sacraments in the white man's church, so that he would get stewed? [Laughter.] I do not say that sacrilegiously, and I want the Members of the House to so understand it.

Mr. CHALMERS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GENSMAN. Yes.

Mr. CHALMERS. And even though the peyote is injurious physically, if it be used in a religious rite, is it the gentleman's opinion that it ought not to be interfered with?

Mr. GENSMAN. It is my opinion that any religion that comes from the bottom of the heart of a man is good. If he believes in it and feels that it is the proper way to worship, he can go into a tent or a little shack of any kind or a church and there offer himself up to his Maker and worship his Creator according to the dictates of his heart and conscience, I say to you that I think it is good.

Mr. CHALMERS. I would remind the gentleman that some mothers conscientiously and religiously believe that they are doing the right thing when they sacrifice their offspring to the alligators, religiously.

Mr. HERRICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me for a question or two?

Mr. GENSMAN. Yes.

Mr. HERRICK. I want to ask the gentleman a few questions. First, has not the gentleman lots of Indians in his district?

Mr. GENSMAN. I have a few.

Mr. HERRICK. Well, does the gentleman expect his Indians to read this speech at the next election, or does he expect to read it to them? [Laughter.]

Mr. GENSMAN. I just want to answer that. The Indians in my district are not registered and have no opportunity of registering, and will not have an opportunity of voting at the next election. [Applause.]

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GENSMAN. Yes.

Mr. TILLMAN. If it were not for this peyote button that they eat and use, there would not be any religious ceremonies at all?

Mr. GENSMAN. As to that, I am not as familiar with the religion as I might be, but I do know that right up here before the Indian Committee and before the President of the United States, Mr. Harding, I presented 20 Indians, two-thirds of whom were members of the peyote church, and I believe some of you gentlemen saw those Indians walking about the streets and will agree with me that they are perfect specimens of humanity, as perfect as I ever saw in my life, and they all belonged to the peyote religion. As to the workings of the religion, I know as little about it as I do about Mohammedanism, but I do know that I have often on a morning gone by their tents and I have seen the Indians after they have been in there worshipping, and I never yet saw one of them intoxicated or acting in a disorderly fashion around or near a church tepee. They did not act or look as if there was anything wrong with them, and they were as strong physically and as wide awake as I am at this minute. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has again expired.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. As a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs I listened to extended hearings on the question of the use of peyote and became fully convinced that it is a deleterious drug, the use of which should be prohibited. There is not an organization in the United States interested in the uplift of the Indians—and all of them have investigated the matter—that is not opposed to the use of this drug. Every superintendent of an Indian reservation where the Indians under his charge use this drug advises against it. Every physician in the Indian Service condemns it. The Board of Indian Commissioners have reported against it. A bill to prohibit the use of peyote passed this House in a former Congress and a similar bill is pending before the Committee on Indian Affairs that will undoubtedly pass the House when brought to a vote.

What is the situation to-day? For the first time since 1832, when the Indian Bureau was established, we are passing a general enabling act giving authority to make appropriations for the Indian Service. It may be another 89 years before a bill of that kind is again before the House. Now is the opportune time to authorize appropriations for the suppression of the use of this drug. Congress can hereafter pass the necessary legislation to prohibit the use of peyote, but let us squarely meet the issue that is presented to-day and vote for that which is conceded to be in the best interest of the Indians.

Dr. Harvey W. Wiley, former Director of the Bureau of Chemistry, thoroughly investigated this matter personally. One of his assistants, Mr. Elwell, took this drug and was observed by Dr. Wiley and by other members of the Bureau of Chemistry. Let me read briefly from the hearings before the Committee on Indian Affairs, which show what the doctor said about the effect of peyote on this young man:

He was constantly talking and saying, "Oh, how beautiful; oh, how splendid, how magnificent." I was particularly struck with this expression. I knew something of his views and that he was a great admirer of Robert G. Ingersoll. One of the things he said was, "Oh, I wish I could talk with Ingersoll just for a minute; I could convince him that there is a heaven; I see it. I see the angels in the streets of gold." Of course, the heaven which he saw was the heaven that had been described to him. The Indians probably see a heaven of a different kind, the chase, or something of the kind. He saw visions that were perfectly entrancing, as translated from his remarks and descriptions of them.

Mr. CLARKE of New York. Was that a he-man or a pacifist?

Mr. HAYDEN. I do not think that anyone who knew Dr. Wiley would charge him with being a pacifist.

Mr. CLARKE of New York. I was not speaking of Dr. Wiley, but of the assistant, who made the test.

Mr. HAYDEN. When I first introduced the bill to prohibit the use of peyote by the Indians Dr. Wiley sent me this statement:

The protection of the Indians against the intoxication produced by the peyote or mescal button is a matter of supreme importance. Not only does it affect the obligations which the Government has toward its wards, but also particularly does it affect the physical, mental, and moral welfare of the Indians. I might add to this also their financial welfare. Intoxication produced by these bodies is of the most seductive character. My own experience in the study of a case of intoxication showed me how beautiful and delightful are the mental impressions of the victim. No wonder that they are anxious to repeat the dose, and no wonder that the habit becomes so speedily fixed and spreads so rapidly.

Everyone interested in our own relation to the Indians and their welfare should join in this propaganda to prohibit the importation of these mescal buttons, or peyote, among the Indian tribes. I believe that practically all of it is brought in from Mexico. It would therefore be easy to prevent its coming through the regular channels of trade. It would require great diligence, however, to prevent its being smuggled over the border.

Legislation should be directed toward preventing the importation of this drug but also toward arranging for its confiscation when found in this country. Incalculable good will arise from restrictive legislation of this kind.

The idea of making an intoxicating drug the basis of a religion is preposterous. One might as well use the sacrament as an excuse for drinking a gallon of wine to become intoxicated. This talk of religion is all a subterfuge. It is a bold attempt to perpetuate, under the guise of religion, the use of a drug that ought to be prohibited. We should act to-day by approving this bill without amendment and then pass a bill as soon as possible prohibiting the use of peyote.

Mr. SNYDER. I want to say to the gentleman that he knows that when we went through this investigation it was finally determined by all of us that while peyote might do some good it might do more damage than it did good, and we tried very hard—I did, at least, because I guess everybody here would agree that I would be about the last man to take the joy out of life of anybody, much less the Indian, and if there is a little joy left in this I would say let the Indian get it as long as he could—but we finally determined it was a wise thing to do to get rid of this, and there is nothing in this bill that deals with the merits at all.

Mr. HAYDEN. The gentleman from New York is technically correct. There is now no law upon the statute books prohibiting the use of peyote, but there will be that kind of a law if we can ever bring the question to a vote on the floor of this House. We might as well anticipate that to-day and provide the necessary authorization for appropriations to carry out such a law. [Applause.]

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment of the gentleman from Arizona. From a discussion of this amendment offered by the gentleman from New York, which is a committee amendment, it would seem we have under consideration here a bill for the suppression of peyote. We have no such thing under discussion or consideration at all. The bill we have under consideration is a bill to make in order on the Indian appropriation bill certain items which have long been carried on that bill and which have been activities of the Indian Bureau for years and years. The difference between the other items and this item is that this is an item which is not prohibited by law, but you are passing a law here under the guise of authorizing appropriations which this House ought not to do without more information than it has to-day. As to the hearings which the gentleman from Arkansas and the gentleman from Arizona have exhibited, I will leave it to any fair-minded man to go through those hearings and prove either side of the case by competent witnesses. What has been referred to by the gentleman from Arkansas and the gentleman from Arizona as stated by eminent scientists is true. These statements I read; I heard some of them and read some of them afterwards in the document when it was printed; but we must not forget that many Indians and some scientists appeared before that committee who said that peyote had no such deleterious effect as that described by the scientists on the other side. So you can prove the case either way by calling in evidence the document cited here to-day. When this peyote question was raised I was very much opposed to taking peyote away from the Indians, because they insisted that it was a part of their religious ceremony. It does not affect the Indian tribe to which I belong, because we have never used peyote, and perhaps have progressed far enough in the white man's religion that it will never be used, but it is a fact that some tribes in Oklahoma use it during their religious rites.

This peyote subject was first brought up several years ago when I was chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs. Both sides were urgently insisting upon being heard. I finally decided to appoint a subcommittee for that purpose. The question of prohibition seemed to be involved, so I appointed as chairman the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. TILLMAN], a well-known prohibitionist. To offset him I assigned as a minority member the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNYDER], whose antiprohibition views are too well known to need discussion by me. [Laughter and applause.] In order to balance the committee I appointed Mr. Hastings, because I thought there ought to be some one on the committee who would temporarily forget prohibition and look after the Indian. [Laughter and applause.] After extended hearings that committee brought back to the Committee on Indian Affairs the consensus of their views, favorably reporting the bill with some amendments. It was brought into the House. I yielded to their judgment when it came into the House and I did not object to unanimous consent being given for the passage of the bill. Now, I am frank to say that I am not sure but what some bill should be passed to prevent the use of peyote. But this is not the way to do it; this is not the time to do it, with such meager information as we have concerning it.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER. In a moment. I do not think we ought to take peyote away from the Indians in this manner without giving them their day in court and an opportunity to be further heard by the other Members of the House. I now yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Is the gentleman a member of the committee?

Mr. CARTER. Of the Indian Affairs Committee? I am not now.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I notice that the committee unanimously reported this provision with these words, "peyote and other deleterious drugs."

Mr. SNYDER. I will say the committee subsequently met this morning, and the committee authorized the chairman to offer a committee amendment.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I know; undoubtedly active influences have been at work, as they have in my vicinity since this bill came on; but the committee unanimously reported this language, "peyote and other deleterious drugs."

Mr. CARTER. Yes; that is true; but the committee changed it this morning, I understand.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Is not peyote a deleterious drug and does it not make drug addicts?

Mr. CARTER. I think I have just explained that you can prove that it is or that it is not by the testimony of so-called experts.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CARTER. You can take the hearings, you can take the testimony of the witnesses who appeared before the subcommittee when the hearings were held in the hearing room just adjoining my office, and you can prove, on the one hand, that an Indian may be influenced by peyote to do anything from stealing sheep to running away with his neighbor's wife; and by another witness who claims to be just as expert you can prove that it does no damage to the Indian, but is, on the contrary, a benefit to him and takes away from him the desire for the drinking of liquor. I do not know which class of experts to believe, but I do not think the committee should take action in this hasty manner.

My friend from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN] says that a bill will probably be passed for the suppression of peyote. If that is true, undoubtedly when the bill is passed the bill by its own terms will authorize an appropriation and this item in this bill will not then be necessary.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Will it authorize an appropriation to be expended by the Indian Bureau? Would it not go to the Department of Justice?

Mr. CARTER. The bill as passed before placed its enforcement with the Indian Bureau and would by implication authorize the use of the money by those officials.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER. Yes.

Mr. TILLMAN. I have a great respect for the gentleman's opinion, and so has the House. The gentleman from Oklahoma is an Indian. Suppose that further hearings had been had on this subject and that a bill was reported as the result of the hearings that the drug should be suppressed. Would the gentleman vote for the bill?

Mr. CARTER. I would with my present information; but I do not think it should be done in this haphazard and hasty manner. There are many Members who may differ with me, and I must say for myself that I would vote for it with much reluctance, because it is claimed to interfere with the Indian's religious ceremonies, and I hesitate to interfere with any man's religious service or views with the meager, conflicting information we have on this subject. [Applause and cries of "Vote!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired. The pro forma amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma is withdrawn. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNYDER]. The Clerk will report it again.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 12, after the word "liquor," strike out the balance of the paragraph.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I want to offer a perfecting amendment, if it is in order. I desire to offer this amendment: On page 2, line 12, amend that line and line 13, so that it will read as follows: "For the suppression of traffic in intoxicating liquors, peyote, and other deleterious drugs."

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that that is not a perfecting amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. That is a separate amendment. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNYDER].

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I call for a division.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is demanded.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 27, noes 43.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I rise to offer an amendment.

Mr. TILLMAN rose.

Mr. FRENCH. I will yield to the gentleman from Arkansas, who is a member of the committee.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend the amendment that is now adopted by inserting, on page 2, line 12, before the word "liquor," the word "intoxicating."

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. TILLMAN: On page 2, line 12, before the word "liquor," insert the word "intoxicating."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. HILL] is recognized in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I am absolutely against the liquor traffic among the Indians. I am absolutely for the enforcement of the liquor laws of the United States, but I think that we should not further subdivide the enforcement of the law by giving power to the Indian Bureau to do something for which we are spending millions of dollars to allow the Treasury Department to do. At the present time we have in the Internal Revenue Bureau in the Treasury Department a corps of persons to enforce the national prohibition law.

Mr. HERRICK. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HILL. I decline to yield. At the same time we have in the Department of Justice a corps of persons to enforce that same law, and now it is proposed by this amendment to create a separate national prohibition enforcement department in the Indian Bureau.

Mr. HAYDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HILL. I decline to yield. I say that in the interest of national efficiency, totally regardless of whether or not you should have a national prohibition act, you should vote against the further splitting up of the enforcement of the prohibition laws of the United States.

Mr. LINEBERGER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend and revise my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks. Is there objection?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Reserving the right to object, I should like to inquire whether it is the gentleman's own remarks or whether he intends to insert any newspaper articles?

Mr. LINEBERGER. I did intend to insert newspaper articles.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. I object to the insertion of any newspaper articles. I have no objection to the gentleman extending his own remarks.

Mr. LINEBERGER. In view of the gentleman's proposed objection, I shall withhold the newspaper articles and will ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the same request—to extend the remarks I have made to-day.

Mr. HAYDEN. I make the same request.

Mr. TILLMAN. I make the same request.

Mr. GENSMAN. I make the same request.

Mr. TILLMAN. And I ask that all gentlemen who have spoken on this bill on either side may have that privilege.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. TILLMAN] asks unanimous consent that all those who have spoken in the committee to-day on this bill may have the right to revise and extend their remarks. The Chair understood that objection was made or would have been made to including extraneous matter, such as newspaper articles, and it is further understood as the Chair supposes that the extensions must be on the general subject discussed to-day.

Mr. DOWELL. That request I think is not in order in the committee—the general request.

Mr. BLANTON. That is not in order in Committee of the Whole. The gentleman from Arkansas should withdraw that request.

Mr. TILLMAN. I withdraw it.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the request is that the gentlemen who have asked the privilege be given leave to revise and extend their remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DOWELL. I am not objecting to the general request, but I am only suggesting to the Chair that it should not be made in the committee.

Mr. TILLMAN. I withdrew it.

The CHAIRMAN. The general request is withdrawn.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. TILLMAN].

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. HILL) there were—ayes 66, noes 1.

Accordingly the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GENSMAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment: In line 12, after the word "peyote," add the words "except for religious purposes."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GENSMAN: Page 2, line 12, after the word "peyote," insert the words "except for religious purposes."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma.

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. BLANTON) there were—ayes 21, noes 46.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment at the desk that I wish to offer.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. COLLINS: Page 2, line 14, strike out lines 14 and 15.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk completed the reading of the bill, as follows:

SEC. 2. That annual estimates shall be submitted for the consideration of Congress as provided by section 5 of the legislative act approved March 3, 1901 (31 Stat. L., p. 1009).

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SNYDER: Page 2, line 18, strike out lines 18 to 21, inclusive.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with the amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BURTON, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 7848) authorizing appropriations and expenditures for the administration of Indian affairs, and for other purposes, and had directed him to report the same back with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and all amendments to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them in gross.

There was no demand for a separate vote, and the amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BLANTON) there were—ayes 81, noes 2.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote because it shows that no quorum is present, and I make the point of order that no quorum is present.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the House, in compliance with its previous order, adjourned until Monday, August 8, 1921, at 12 o'clock noon.

Philadelphia, Pa., July 15, 1921.

Whereas the frequent display of foreign flags independent of and over the Stars and Stripes on buildings, automobiles, etc., has been brought to the attention of members of Washington Camp, No. 342, P. O. S. A.: Therefore be it

Resolved, That inasmuch as the above action indicates clearly that those responsible for such display are hyphenated citizens whose loyalty to America is secondary to the nation or authority whose emblem they place above the Stars and Stripes, we demand that all those guilty of this un-American act be deprived of their citizenship whether naturalized or American born; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be forwarded to Attorney General Daugherty with a request that he take the necessary steps to enforce the above action; and if without legal authority so to do, that he request Congress to grant such authority in order that the ideals of and loyalty to this Nation may be upheld as provided in our Constitution; and be it further

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, I present a resolution adopted by the annual session of the Louisiana State Farmers' Union, held at Baton Rouge, La., July 26. It is brief, and I ask that it may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolution 1.

We, the Louisiana State Farmers' Union, in annual session at Baton Rouge, La., July 26, declare:

First. That we request the Louisiana delegation in Congress to urge the United States Congress to cease all attempts at experimental legislation and concentrate upon efforts to open up markets of the world for all farm products, such as cotton, grains, packing-house products, wool, tobacco, and other farm products.

Second. It is unrestricted and unlimited markets for cotton, packing-house products, grain, and wool which is needed to relieve the present depression in agriculture, finances, and transportation of our Nation, and we oppose all legislation which will have the effect of restricting in any manner the free and unlimited marketing of cotton, grain, and live-stock products.

Third. We are gratified to note from the papers that Senator RANSDELL, as a member of the Senate Committee on Agriculture, opposed the Dial bill. In 1914 the cotton exchanges were closed, with the result that farmers were unable to ascertain the correct prices of cotton, and, owing to the closing of cotton exchanges, the spinners and large cotton, spot, dealers were enabled to depress the price of cotton, and they did without mercy, and the result was that the cotton producers of America were compelled to accept ruinous prices for cotton; and we oppose any legislation which will have the effect of closing the cotton exchanges and grain exchanges of the Nation, or any legislation which will impair or interfere with the free marketing of cotton and grain by future contract sales or otherwise.

Fourth. We ask the Louisiana delegation in Congress to oppose any legislation being enacted which will interfere with or prevent the free and unlimited marketing at home and abroad of packing-house products of all kinds and to do everything possible to encourage and aid the sale of packing-house products and all live-stock products on the part of the American producers and manufacturers.

Fifth. We request that a copy of this resolution be forwarded at once to the United States Senators, JOSEPH E. RANSDELL and EDWIN BROUSSARD, with request that they furnish a copy to each Member of the Louisiana delegation for us, and we wish to express our thanks to the Louisiana delegation for aiding us on the above lines.

Sixth. We request that a copy of this resolution be furnished to the State officials for the farmers' unions of all other States, with the request that they urge upon their delegation in Congress to work for the world's markets, as it is markets and not credits and not corporations for the purchase of farm products which will relieve the situation, and that they also urge their delegation in Congress to oppose all legislation which restricts marketing of above products and to do all possible to open up the free and unlimited markets for grain, cotton, and live-stock products.

(Signed)

H. ARTHUR MORGAN, Chairman.
W. B. GENTRY.
JAMES HALL.

Adopted:

M. CARRON.

Mr. NICHOLSON presented three memorials of sundry citizens of Grand Junction, Jaroso, and Palisades, all in the State of Colorado, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation making stringent regulations for the observance of Sunday in the District of Columbia, which were referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

White, all of Denver, Colo., remonstrating against the enactment of House bill 5676, relative to contracts for the future delivery of grain, etc., particularly of paragraph G of said bill, which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Pitkin County board of commissioners, of Aspen, Colo., protesting against the enactment of Senate bill 1355, the interstate highway roads bill, unless it be so amended as to appropriate funds for road and trail construction in the national forests, etc., which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

BOY SCOUTS OF AMERICA.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, under the articles of incorporation of the Boy Scouts of America it is required that a report shall be filed with Congress every year. Such a report was filed and referred to the Committee on Education and Labor. Generally the report is printed, and it should have been referred, I think, to the Committee on Printing. I ask that the Committee on Education and Labor be discharged from the further consideration of the report, and that it be referred to the Committee on Printing.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SHORTTRIDGE. Mr. President, I introduce a joint resolution and ask to have it read at the desk.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 93) authorizing the President to communicate with the Government of Italy on the six hundredth anniversary of the death of the poet Dante, and appointing September 14, 1921, a national holiday to be known as Dante's Day, was read the first time by title, and the second time at length, as follows:

Whereas September 14, 1921, will mark the sixth centennial of the death of the great Italian poet Dante; and

Whereas his sublime genius is duly appreciated by all civilized peoples and has benefited mankind in general: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, etc., That the President of the United States be authorized and directed to send a communication to His Majesty, the King of Italy, and his Government and people, expressing the great esteem, regard, and veneration in which the Government and the people of the United States hold this illustrious son of Italy on the six hundredth anniversary of his death: And be it further

Resolved, That the President shall proclaim the 14th day of September, 1921, a national holiday to be known as Dante's Day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be referred to the Committee on the Library.

REDUCTION OF THE ARMY.

Mr. BORAH. I introduce a joint resolution which I ask may be read and lie on the table. Later in the day I shall make some observations upon it.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 96) to reduce the Army to 100,000 enlisted men, excluding the Philippine Scouts, was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of War is directed, under such reasonable regulations as he may prescribe, to grant applications for discharge of enlisted men serving in the continental United States, without regard to the provisions of existing law respecting discharges, until the number of the Army has been reduced to 100,000 enlisted men, not including the Philippine Scouts.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will lie on the table and be printed.

AMENDMENTS TO TARIFF BILL.

Mr. SHORTTRIDGE submitted sundry amendments intended to be proposed by him to House bill 7456, the tariff bill, which were referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENT OF NATIONAL PROHIBITION ACT.

Mr. WADSWORTH submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 7294) supplemental to the national prohibition act, which was ordered to lie on the table, to be printed, and to be printed in the Record, as follows:

On page 3, line 18, after the word "act," strike out the period and add the following: "the commissioner may authorize the return to the United States, under such regulations and conditions as he may prescribe, any distilled spirits of American production exported free of tax and reimposed in original packages in which exported and consigned for redeposit in the distillery bonded warehouse from which originally removed."

GARDEN CITY AND GARDEN SUBURB MOVEMENT.

Mr. SHEPPARD submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 122), which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

Whereas the garden city and garden suburb movement in Europe has made wonderful progress during the first 10 years of its existence; and

Whereas the object of this movement is to secure permanent and comfortable homes for the people, on terms within the reach of the average income, and to combine the advantages of town and country in the same community; and

Whereas this movement is contributing materially to the health, comfort, and prosperity of the people who have experienced its benefits; and

Whereas the movement, in the estimation of many, points the way to the long-sought goal of a contented, home-owning population; and

Whereas a beginning along this line is claimed to have been made in the United States: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry be authorized and requested to hear and consider such testimony as may be produced before said committee in Washington regarding this movement in Europe, in the United States, and elsewhere, to initiate such further investigation as the committee may deem proper, and to report its findings to the Senate.

BUREAU OF MANUFACTURE.

Mr. SHEPPARD submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 123), which was referred to the Committee on Manufactures:

Whereas the further development of manufacturing processes is one of the most important and powerful means of increasing the Nation's efficiency, wealth, and prosperity; and

Whereas departments of the Government are now devoted to agriculture, commerce, and labor, but so far no department or bureau has been established for manufacture, the other fundamental source of national progress; and

Whereas there is a wide field for the making of useful articles by hand and without machinery, a field which should have especial study; and Whereas the distribution of knowledge among the people as to the practicability of conducting manufacturing processes, both with and without machinery, on the cooperative plan and otherwise, will open up new channels of popular occupation and achievement; and

Whereas the adaptation of modern machinery to small factories in rural districts, villages, small towns, and in the home itself will open up an avenue of economic independence of incomparable value to the people; and

Whereas the farm is of itself a factory, and its higher profits and possibilities will be unrealized until its processes are carried to the finished state within its own limits or as near thereto as practicable; and

Whereas one of the principal needs of the United States is the conversion of its raw materials into finished products within its own boundaries, it being a source of national shame that we ship such enormous quantities of our basic raw materials abroad to be made by foreign countries into finished products and resold by them to us and others at a great profit; and

Whereas the conversion of raw materials into finished products should be effected as near the place of production as may be consistent with access to markets for finished products: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Committee on Manufactures is hereby authorized and directed to investigate the practicability of establishing a bureau of manufacture at the seat of government for the purpose of studying manufacture in all its forms and diffusing information relating thereto among the people of the United States.

The said committee is hereby authorized and directed to report to Congress the result of its investigation during the present Congress, and, if the committee finds such a bureau desirable, to submit a plan and bill to Congress therefor.

THOMAS H. MATTERS.

Mr. HITCHCOCK submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 124), which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

Resolved, That the Attorney General be, and he is hereby, directed, if not incompatible with the public interest, to transmit to the Senate the petitions, letters, and other papers which were considered by the President in granting a pardon to Thomas H. Matters, who had been convicted and sentenced to imprisonment in the Leavenworth Penitentiary for his part in wrecking the First National Bank of Sutton, Nebr.

UNITED STATES PROPERTY AT BRIDGEPORT, CONN.

Mr. BRANDEGEE submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 125), which was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of Labor be, and he is hereby, directed to inform the Senate what reason exists for the nonpayment of taxes by the United States Housing Corporation upon property of the United States at Bridgeport, Conn.

UNEMPLOYMENT IN THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. McCORMICK. I ask unanimous consent to offer the resolution which I send to the desk, and for which I ask immediate consideration.

The resolution (S. Res. 126) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of Labor be, and he is hereby is, directed immediately to advise the Senate as to the estimated unemployment in the several States, including the number of men, of ex-service men, and of women estimated to be unemployed.

Mr. McCORMICK. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the resolution.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

Mr. McCORMICK. I will state that the resolution is offered at this time because of reports that during the month of July there was a further increase in unemployment.

MOVING-PICTURE INDUSTRY IN FOREIGN COUNTRIES.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I submitted yesterday evening. I wish to say that the objection which was then made to its consideration by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] has been withdrawn, that Senator having since examined the resolution.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution (S. Res. 121) submitted by Mr. WADSWORTH on the 4th instant, and the resolution was agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of Commerce be, and is hereby, requested to report to the Senate, if not incompatible with the public interest, the development of the moving-picture industry in foreign countries and the extent of the importation of films of foreign manufacture.

DEVELOPMENT OF PORT OF NEW YORK.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, the Senate a few weeks ago passed a joint resolution giving formal authority to the States of New York and New Jersey to carry out a compact or understanding into which they had entered for the development of the port of New York. The joint resolution was a purely formal matter, giving Federal authority to carry on this work, and it in no way involved the Government from the standpoint of appropriations or otherwise.

It appears that there was an error in the joint resolution as passed. The joint commission of the two States has prepared another joint resolution, which I introduced a few days ago and which is now on the calendar, having been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with a slight amendment of one word to correct a typographical error. I should like to secure unanimous consent of the Senate to consider the joint resolution in its amended shape as now reported.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 88) granting consent of Congress to an agreement or compact entered into between the State of New York and the State of New Jersey for the creation of the port of New York district and the establishment of the port of New York authority for the comprehensive development of the port of New York, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment in section 1, page 14, line 2, after the word "right," to strike out "of" and to insert "or," so as to make the joint resolution read:

Resolved, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby given to the said agreement, and to each and every part and article thereof: Provided, That nothing therein contained shall be construed as impairing or in any manner affecting any right or jurisdiction of the United States in and over the region which forms the subject of said agreement.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this resolution is hereby expressly reserved.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

THE CALENDAR.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I understand morning business is closed?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is about to announce that fact. Morning business is closed. The Senator from New York.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the calendar, commencing at that point on the calendar at which we left off when it was last under consideration.

Mr. SMOOT. When the calendar was last under consideration the Senate reached Order of Business 151.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like the Senator from New York to include in his motion or request for unanimous consent—I think what he desires will have to be done by unanimous consent—that the Senate take up the calendar for the consideration only of bills to which there is no objection. Otherwise the time will be consumed perhaps on one or two bills.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I intended to include in my request that the calendar be called for bills to which there is no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New York?

Mr. McKELLAR. With what order of business on the calendar does the Senator from New York desire to start?

Mr. WADSWORTH. With Order of Business 151.

Mr. KING. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah will state it.

Mr. KING. Should the motion of the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] be agreed to, would it be proper if objection is made to the consideration of a bill for a Senator to move to take up the bill to which objection is made?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks not.

Mr. KING. Then I have no objection to the motion.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, why can we not proceed with the calendar under Rule VIII?

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator from Connecticut that when we begin to consider the calendar under Rule VIII the whole time is spent in going over bills to which there is objection. I therefore thought it was nothing more than right to begin with the calendar at Order of Business 151 in order to give the bills following that number an opportunity to be considered.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, the trouble about that is that there are certain bills on the calendar which are meritorious and which a great majority of the Senate favor, but under a unanimous-consent agreement to consider only measures to which there is no objection, a single Senator is day after day able to defeat the consideration of important measures. I think the regular rule of the Senate should be observed, that the calendar should be taken up, if the Senate wants to take it up, and bills on the calendar considered. I do not see why one Senator should be allowed continuously to defeat meritorious measures, and I should feel compelled, I think, to object to such an arrangement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The calendar under Rule VIII is in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator from Connecticut if he will not to-day allow us to proceed with the consideration of the calendar under the unanimous consent asked for by the Senator from New York, beginning with Calendar No. 151.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President, will the Senator from Utah speak a little louder. This is a matter of unanimous consent, and we all want to hear what he says.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will be in order.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask the Senator from Connecticut, Mr. President, if he will not allow the unanimous consent asked for by the Senator from New York to be agreed to to-day, so that at least we may run through the calendar and consider the bills to which there is no objection, beginning with Calendar No. 151?

Next Monday I shall have no objection at all, and I do not think any Senator will, to begin with the first bill on the calendar and take up the bills as they are reached, as suggested by the Senator from Connecticut. We have run over the bills up to Calendar No. 150 or 160 about three times now and spent the whole time on them, and the bills beyond Order of Business No. 151 have not been considered, and most of them have never been reached. I wish to ask the Senator if he will not agree to that to-day?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I will not object to-day, although I do not approve thoroughly of that course, if we can commence with Calendar No. 151 and proceed, so that the Senate may by vote take up a measure in spite of a single objection under the terms of Rule VIII.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Connecticut submit a request to that effect?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I say I have no objection to an unanimous-consent agreement to that effect.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. I object; and I call for the regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The calendar, under Rule VIII, is in order. The Secretary will state the first bill on the calendar.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 656) to create a bureau of aeronautics in the Department of the Navy was announced as first in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I object to the consideration of that bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WILLIS in the chair). Objection being made, the bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1021) to provide for the exchange of Government lands for privately owned lands in the Territory of Hawaii was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill has heretofore been read, considered, and amended. The bill is still before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, and open to further amendment.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President, in the absence of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW], I wonder if any other member of the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs may have anything to say on that bill?

Mr. KING. If the Senator will pardon me, I believe that there is no objection to the measure.

Mr. OVERMAN. There is objection.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I ask that the bill go over at the suggestion of the Secretary of War, in order that we may have more information from Hawaii direct.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 384) to require judges appointed under authority of the United States to devote their entire time to the duties of a judge was announced as next in order.

Mr. KELLOGG. I ask that that bill be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 214) to amend section 24 of the act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I ask that that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 724) for the relief of Henry J. Davis was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I ask that that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. KING. I ask that that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

LANDS IN WASHINGTON.

The bill (S. 1168) to authorize the payment of certain taxes to Stevens and Ferry Counties, in the State of Washington, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Stevens and Ferry Counties, in the State of Washington, as taxes claimed by said counties under section 2 of the act of July 1, 1892, relating to the payment of local taxes on allotted Colville Indian lands, the following sums, to wit: To Stevens County, $44,309.67; to Ferry County, $71,458: Provided, That there may be deducted from said amounts by the Secretary of the Interior such sum or sums as he may find have been paid to said counties for Indian tuition; also the excess, if any, where the rate based on the value of Indian allotments may be found to be in excess of the rate on taxable land.

Sec. 2. That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be immediately available, $115,767.67 for the payment of said sums to said counties, as provided in the foregoing section.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I have made some investigation in regard to this measure. I objected heretofore to its consideration. I believe that it is a measure which ought to pass; but I shall ask the Senator from Washington to make a brief explanation for the RECORD, so that Senators who have not been advised may understand its nature.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I made a brief statement for the RECORD when it came up before.

Mr. KING. I was not aware of that.

Mr. JONES of Washington. When the Senator made his objection, I covered the facts in the case.

Mr. KING. I have no objection, then.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 1829) for the relief of Walter Runke was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

QUAPAW TRIBE OF INDIANS.

The bill (S. 1894) to amend section 26 of an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs," etc., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment, on page 2, after the word "the," to strike out "latter" and insert "said named Indians," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 20 of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922," approved March 3, 1921, be, and the same is hereby, amended by adding to the list of members of the Quapaw Tribe therein enumerated, after the words Lucy Lottson Beaver, the names of three omitted members, to wit, Minnie Griffin, Lewis Quapaw, and Leona Quapaw, in order that the said named Indians may have the full benefit of the 25-year extension period provided by the act.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I inquire of the Senator from Kansas whether this bill entails any expense upon the Government?

Mr. CURTIS. None whatever. It simply extends by three names the list of incompetent members of the Quapaw Indian Tribe. The list was furnished by the department at the last session of Congress, and in the preparation of the list they omitted three incompetents. This bill just adds those three and prevents them from selling or disposing of their property without having a competency certification. Its enactment is requested by the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INDIANS OF MESCALERO RESERVATION.

The bill (S. 2022) promoting civilization and self-support among the Indians of the Mescalero Reservation, in New Mexico, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

ARTHUR E. RUMP.

The bill (S. 154) to extend the benefits of the employers' liability act of September 7, 1916, to Arthur E. Rump was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the United States Employees' Compensation Commission shall be, and it is hereby, authorized and directed to extend to Arthur E. Rump, a former employee in the post office in St. Louis, Mo., the provision of an act entitled "An act to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes," approved September 7, 1916, compensation hereunder to commence from and after the passage of this act.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Missouri [Mr. SPENCER], since he introduced the bill and also reported it, the reasons for the passage of this bill. Why should the employers' liability act be extended to this man?

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, if the Senator please, I should like to say a word about this case. It is an unusual case. As far as I know, the like of it has never arisen before.

The bill gives to the man about $66 a month as long as he lives. Congress already has appropriated $2,000 to this man about five or six years ago; therefore the necessity of bringing him under the compensation law.

The facts of this case, in a word, are these:

This man was employed in the Post Office Department, and was hit by a mail sack. He was severely injured, as it was thought, but not irreparably. After four or five years of suffering, Congress passed this $2,000 appropriation in his behalf. Now, here is what happened: Ankylosis set in with that man, until to-day he is absolutely rigid. He can not move a single joint in the body. Up to a few months ago he had the use of one thumb, with which he manipulated a telephone that was strapped to him, and tried to get orders for magazines. Within the last few months that thumb has ceased to act, and the only joint that that man now can use is his jaw, for about a quarter of an inch, which is gradually diminishing. He probably has but a few months to live.

I have on my desk pictures of that man as he lies in bed. He is the worst injured man I have ever seen or heard of in my lifetime. The fact of the matter was that when they settled his claim six years ago it was never expected that there would be any permanent incapacity. It developed afterwards, and this bill, which has already been favorably reported upon by the committee of the House, gives him the benefit of the employers' compensation act as long as he lives.

The emergency is here. Of course, the man is entirely helpless. He was a Government employee, injured in the Government service. There is an old woman who has been taking care of him, and this is to provide $67 a month, so that she can continue to take care of him and he can be supported during what few months are left of his life.

Those are the facts in the case.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 1251) providing for investigations for irrigation works in Green River, Wyo., was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the Senator reporting the bill is not present, but I can not believe that $20,000 will be required to make that investigation. It may be, but I doubt it. Therefore, until the Senator is present, I ask that his bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

JOHN HICKSON, JR.

The bill (S. 1951) for the relief of John Hickson, jr., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 1, line 6, to strike out "$1,375" and to insert in lieu thereof "$1,075," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to John Hickson, jr., of Lynchburg, Va., owner of a Chalmers automobile, the sum of $1,075 in full settlement to reimburse such owner for loss sustained as a result of damages caused to such automobile through a collision which occurred at Miami, Fla., on May 21, 1920, with a trailer which became detached from a motor truck belonging to the Navy Department while such truck and trailer were being operated by an employee of the Navy Department.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I notice that the Secretary of the Navy states in a letter addressed to the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] that—

The report of Lieut. Commander Allen was favorable to this claim, but he subsequently reported that the damage was done by a civilian laborer, and the department has no authority to settle such cases.

Mr. GLASS. Under the law, the department has no authority to adjust cases of accident where the employee of the Navy Department causing the injury is a civilian. The man was a chauffeur, but he was not in uniform. The Secretary assured me that otherwise the Navy Department would have paid the claim, as it is a just claim. They have no authority under the law to pay it.

Mr. SMOOT. There is no doubt about the accident?

Mr. GLASS. None at all. There is no dispute as to the facts. The only difficulty is that they have no authority under the law to settle such claims.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KING. Not by way of criticism or in opposition to the bill, but for information, I would like to inquire of the Senator from Virginia if he thinks it is proper, under circumstances such as those of this case, where there are civilian employees who may be guilty of negligence, for the Government to be responsible for their torts. I was wondering what the precedent might be, and what the effect might be, how far-reaching the establishment of such a principle might be.

Mr. GLASS. The only difficulty is that the man did not wear a uniform. Had he been in the uniform of the Navy, the Navy Department itself would be authorized, under the law, to make the adjustment. He happened not to be in uniform; but, nevertheless, by his negligence the property of this citizen of Virginia was utterly destroyed through no fault of his own.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I assume that the rule of law would be the same as the liability of a principal for an act of his agent whether the agent were a civilian or a military person, it certainly ought to be. As I understand it, the point about this case is that the department hold that they can not take funds which were appropriated under the naval appropriation bill for the Navy and compensate a civilian for an injury.

Mr. GLASS. Precisely. There is no question as to the facts, and no question of the justice of the claim; but, under the law, the department is not authorized to take funds from any appropriation for this purpose.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 7) to amend the act entitled "An act to regulate the business of loaning money on security of any kind by persons, firms, and corporations other than national banks, licensed bankers, trust companies, savings banks, building and loan associations, and real estate brokers in the District of Columbia," approved February 4, 1913, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 496) for the relief of George A. Robertson, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

DISTRICT STREET RAILWAYS.

The bill (S. 985) to amend the provisions of an act relating to certain railway corporations owning or operating street railways in the District of Columbia, approved June 5, 1920, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I inquire of the Senator from Delaware if it will not take some time to consider and dispose of this measure?

Mr. BALL. I presume that it will lead to some discussion.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator think, in view of that fact, that we ought to enter upon it during the morning hour?

Mr. BALL. I think it had better go over for the present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

MEMORIAL TO EMPLOYEES OF DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE.

The resolution (H. J. Res. 112) authorizing the erection on public grounds in the city of Washington, D. C., of a memorial to employees of the United States Department of Agriculture who died in the war with Germany, was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of Agriculture be, and he is hereby, authorized to grant permission to the Department of Agriculture war memorial committee for the erection in the Department of Agriculture grounds, Washington, D. C., of a memorial to the former employees of the said United States Department of Agriculture who lost their lives while in the military or naval service in the war with Germany: Provided, That the site chosen and the design of the memorial shall be approved by the Joint Committee on the Library with the advice and recommendations of the Commission of Fine Arts, and the United States shall be put to no expense in or by the erection of this memorial.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I am heartily in favor of a measure which will accomplish this purpose, and I am not sure that this does not accomplish it properly. It is true that under the joint resolution the Government would be put to no expense; the money has all been raised.

What I am not certain about is that the House passed a joint resolution upon this subject, and it came over to the Senate. The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds has reported this joint resolution. The one which the House passed, on the same subject, was referred to the Senate Committee on the Library, and is now pending there. I polled the committee some time ago on that joint resolution, and they ordered a favorable report upon it. I am perfectly willing that this measure should pass, if the Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD] has looked the matter up so as to be sure that this is the one the proponents of the project want to have passed.

There was some difference between the two measures. One confers jurisdiction upon either the Secretary of War or the Secretary of Agriculture, I have forgotten which. There was a difference between the two measures as to the part to be played by the Fine Arts Commission.

I am not sure of my ground at all. I simply want to be certain that the Senator from Maine has looked into the situation. I am somewhat confused about it. I am perfectly satisfied to take the word of the Senator from Maine if he is clear about it.

Mr. FERNALD. Mr. President, I am quite clear as to the difference between the two measures. The only difference is that the Joint Committee on the Library in one measure is designated to select the place where this memorial shall be erected, and in the other the Fine Arts Commission is designated. The employees at first thought that they wanted this measure which passed the House, and then came to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and we reported that favorably. The only difference between the two measures is as to whether it should go to the Joint Committee on the Library or to the Fine Arts Commission. The measure which we have reported would turn it over to the Joint Committee on the Library.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I am quite certain that the provision that the advice of the Commission on Fine Arts should first be taken should be in the joint resolution. Their judgment ought to be consulted in the matter, I think.

Mr. FERNALD. Then the joint resolution ought to go over?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. No; there is such a provision in this measure.

Mr. FERNALD. There is.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I have no objection to the pending joint resolution. If any mistake is being made, it can be corrected.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. FERNALD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to reconsider the vote by which Senate joint resolution 52, authorizing the erection on public grounds in the city of Washington, D. C., of a memorial to employees of the United States Department of Agriculture who died in the war with Germany, was ordered to a third reading and passed.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Has not the joint resolution gone to the House?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is advised that it has not. It is on the table.

By unanimous consent, the motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. FERNALD. I move that Senate joint resolution 52 be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

POTOMAC INSURANCE CO. OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The bill (S. 1312) to amend the charter of the Potomac Insurance Co. of the District of Columbia was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act to incorporate a fire insurance company in Georgetown, in the District of Columbia," approved the 2d of March, 1831, and the act entitled "An act to amend the charter of the Potomac Fire Insurance Co. of Georgetown," approved the 3d of March, 1837, and the act entitled "An act to renew and continue in force the charter of the Potomac Insurance Co. of Georgetown, D. C.," approved the 25th of March, 1870, and the act entitled "An act to change the name of the Potomac Insurance Co. of Georgetown, and for other purposes," approved the 10th day of March, 1900, be, and the same are hereby, amended so as to grant to the Potomac Insurance Co. of the District of Columbia, in addition to the powers, privileges, and immunities granted to the said company in and by its original act of incorporation, as amended, full power and authority to make insurances against lightning, windstorm, tornado, cyclone, earthquake, hail, frost or snow, civil riot and commotion, and by explosion, whether fire ensues or not (except upon steam boilers and pipes, flywheels, engines, and machinery connected therewith or operated thereby, against explosion and accident, and except against loss or damage to life or property resulting therefrom, and except against loss of use and occupancy caused thereby); and also against loss or damage by water to any goods or premises arising from the breakage or leakage of sprinklers, pumps, or other apparatus erected for extinguishing fires, and of water pipes, and against accidental injury to such sprinklers, pumps, or other apparatus; also insurances upon automobiles, whether stationary or being operated under their own power, which shall include all or any of the hazards of fire, explosion, transportation, collision, loss by legal liability for damage to or resulting from the maintenance and use of automobiles, and loss by burglary or theft, or both, but shall not include loss by reason of bodily injury to the person; and to effect reinsurances of any risks taken by it; and the said company shall have full power and authority to make and effect any and all of the above-described insurances and reinsurances.

Mr. KING. I would like to ask the Senator from Washington whether the capital of this corporation warrants the extension of its powers so liberally as in the bill is provided, and whether the record of the corporation justifies the granting to it of these additional powers?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I will say to the Senator that I do not know. That matter was not investigated. The bill was referred to the District Commissioners, they reported that they had no objection to the measure, and it was simply automatically ordered reported favorably by the committee. If the Senator thinks it ought to be gone into somewhat more fully, I have no objection.

Mr. KING. If the Senator has no particular interest in the matter, I will ask that it go over until the next calendar day, so that it may be fully investigated.

Mr. JONES of Washington. If the Senator thinks there ought to be further investigation, I think it would be well to have it referred back to the committee, and let the committee make further investigation.

Mr. KING. Very well; I move that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The motion was agreed to.

NAVAL STATION AT ST. THOMAS.

The bill (S. 1771) to authorize the United States, through the United States Shipping Board, to acquire a site on Hazzell Island, St. Thomas, Virgin Islands, for a fuel and fuel-oil station and fresh-water reservoir for Shipping Board and other merchant vessels, as well as United States naval vessels, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I ask that the bill may go over. I wish to make some further inquiries with reference to the situation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made, and the bill will be passed over.

SCHOONER CHARLOTTE W. MILLER.

The bill (S. 1063) for the relief of the owners of the schooner Charlotte W. Miller was announced as next in order.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President, the chairman of the committee is not present, but I am a member of the committee. The bill has not been considered by the committee so far as I know. I should like to know more about it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator object to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made, and the bill will go over.

HORACE A. CHOUMARD.

The bill (S. 1856) to reimburse Horace A. Choumard, chaplain in the Twenty-third Infantry, for loss of certain personal property, was announced as next in order.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Let the bill go over.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will the Senator withhold his objection until I can explain a moment about the bill?

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Very well.

Mr. McKELLAR. The bill is for the relief of a chaplain in the Army who was living at Texas City and had all his property destroyed. It is recommended by the War Department, and a similar bill has already once passed the Senate. The property was destroyed by the Gulf storm at Texas City in August, 1915.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. I do not understand that we are liable for providential losses like Gulf storms, cyclones, and matters of that kind.

Mr. McKELLAR. He was a chaplain in the Army at the time, and it was through no fault of his that the property was lost.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. No one gets hurt by a strike of lightning if he can help it. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made, and the bill will be passed over.

ESTATE OF CATHERINE LOCKE.

The bill (S. 1535) for the relief of the estate of Catherine Locke, deceased, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I should like to have an explanation of the bill.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, I should like to make a brief explanation of the bill. The bill as originally introduced provided for an appropriation of $30,000 for the relief of the next of kin of Catherine Locke. The Committee on Claims reduced the amount to $5,000. This woman, working for her living, supporting herself and in part her family, was walking along one of the streets of Brooklyn, in fact right near my own home, on a very wide street, when a motor truck owned by the War Department ran up on the sidewalk without notice, knocking her down and killing her.

A most exhaustive examination was made of the matter by the War Department, and there were many pages of testimony taken, all of which I have read. The Committee on Claims very carefully considered the matter. There is no doubt under the evidence submitted that the woman was killed not through an accident but through the negligence of the driver of the truck. It seems to me that this is as just a claim as has ever been acted upon in this Chamber.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. KING. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made. The bill will be passed over.

GALLATIN NATIONAL FOREST.

The bill (S. 255) for the consolidation of forest lands within the Gallatin National Forest, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized in his discretion to accept on behalf of the United States title to any lands within the Gallatin National Forest, Mont., not to exceed 24 sections, if in the opinion of the Secretary of Agriculture the public interests will be benefited thereby and the lands are chiefly valuable for national park purposes, and in exchange therefor may cause to be patented to the party conveying to the United States not to exceed an equal value of land within such national forest, or the Secretary of Agriculture may authorize the party conveying to cut and remove an equal value of timber within any national forest in the State of Montana, the value of the land or timber to be determined by the Secretary of Agriculture and acceptable to the owner as fair compensation: Provided, That before any such exchange is effected notice of the contemplated exchange, reciting the lands involved, shall be published once each week for four successive weeks in some newspaper of general circulation in the county of Gallatin, Mont., and in some like newspaper published in any county in said State in which may be situated any lands or timber to be given in such exchange. Timber given in such exchanges shall be cut and removed under the direction and supervision and in accordance with the requirements of the Secretary of Agriculture. Lands conveyed to the United States under this act shall, upon acceptance of title, become parts of the Gallatin National Forest.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ARMY FIELD CLERKS AND FIELD CLERKS, QUARTERMASTER CORPS.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 48) authorizing retirement as warrant officers of certain Army and field clerks and field clerks, Quartermaster Corps, was announced as next in order.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment to the joint resolution before it is considered finally by the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to have the joint resolution go over.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Will the Senator permit me to perfect it first?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I think in about five sentences I can tell the Senator about it, and I do not think he will then object.

Mr. KING. Let it be read, or will the Senator explain it?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I wished first to offer an amendment, but let it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be read.

The Secretary read the joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he hereby is, authorized to appoint and immediately retire as warrant officers any Army field clerk or field clerk, Quartermaster Corps, whose status was changed from a civil to a military one by, or who was appointed as such under, the act of August 29, 1916, and who, because of age, service, or disability incurred in line of duty, would be eligible for retirement on the same basis as a warrant officer: Provided, That for the purpose of retirement and longevity pay Army field clerks and field clerks, Quartermaster Corps, herein referred to, shall be permitted to count all service in and with the Army.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, inadvertently, I think, the Committee on Military Affairs in reporting the joint resolution neglected to make the amendment which I now propose. In lines 6 and 7 I move to strike out the words "or who was appointed as such under," including the commas, so that the sentence will read, "whose status was changed from a civil to a military one by the act of August 29, 1916," etc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, that amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. Now, I ask that the joint resolution go over.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Will the Senator not permit me to make a very brief explanation?

Mr. SMOOT. Very well.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I think the Senator perhaps does not understand what happened in this instance. Of course, if he does, and still objects, I can not say anything about it.

When the Congress last year passed the Army reorganization bill, which involved consideration of a vast number of details in connection with the personnel of the Army, among other things, it created a new grade of warrant officer, and it provided also that no more field clerks or field clerks, Quartermaster Corps, should be appointed in the service or in connection with the service. It permitted the field clerks and field clerks, Quartermaster Corps, to become eligible for appointment as warrant officers. The position of warrant officer is one having full and complete military status.

It so happens that back in 1916, at the time when field clerks and field clerks, Quartermaster Corps, had no military status, the Congress passed a bill transferring all the field clerks and field clerks, Quartermaster Corps, from a civil status to a military status. That took the field clerks and field clerks, Quartermaster Corps, out of the classified service. They thereupon, of course, by arbitrary act of Congress, became ineligible to the retirement privileges granted civil service employees.

There are about 30 of these men who are still field clerks and field clerks, Quartermaster Corps, having this semimilitary status. They are ineligible for retirement under the civil service law and they are too old to be commissioned as warrant officers, having passed the age fixed as the limit in the Army reorganization act.

In drafting that bill we forgot or did not have brought to our attention the condition of these men. They have been in the Government service 30 or 35 or 40 years or more. They can not continue as field clerks much longer. They are breaking down with age. They can not be retired as civil service employees. Their position was originally changed arbitrarily by the Congress and they are left all alone, 30 men, with no outlook whatsoever when the War Department will be compelled to let them go. The joint resolution will authorize their appointment as warrant officers to be retired as warrant officers in accordance with the provisions of the existing law. It is a matter of simple justice to a little group of faithful Government servants, who have served the Government for a generation or more.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from New York that if he will prepare a bill allowing these men to retire under the civil service law the same as other clerks of the Government I shall offer no objection, but I do object to the clerks here having the privilege of longevity pay and having the privilege of retirement the same as a warrant officer in the Army. I have, of course, some sympathy with them under the statement made by the Senator.

Mr. WADSWORTH. They are in quite a predicament through no fault of their own.

Mr. SMOOT. Let us put them in the position that they would have been in had they continued as clerks. That is what it should be, and nothing else. Their 30 or 40 years' service has been as clerks. I am perfectly willing to have a bill introduced and passed, and will support such a bill, allowing them to retire under the civil service law.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Then we practically repeal the act of Congress which gave them a military status.

Mr. SMOOT. We can do that.

Mr. WADSWORTH. They are not like ordinary civil service clerks. They are men in uniform. They go with the Army into the field to do clerical duty at battalion headquarters or field headquarters and they are often under fire. They are subject to the Articles of War and regulations of the Army and subject to discipline of every kind. They are military men. The Senator from Utah desires to have them changed back to civil service employees with no military status and then give them the retirement privilege.

Mr. SMOOT. The 30 or 35 years' service they have rendered the Government was as clerks.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Field clerks.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; field clerks.

Mr. WADSWORTH. With the Army, in uniform.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; with the Army, in uniform, and they were not given the retirement privileges or the longevity pay.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Of course, it was expected that they would have the privileges which go with a military status.

Mr. SMOOT. But they did not have them.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The only reason why they have not, may I say to the Senator, is that this little group of men have passed the age limit. If they were not over the age fixed by law for the appointment of warrant officers the Government would take care of them.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; under the act of 1916.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, the situation is that they have not been long enough in the military service with a military status to entitle them to the benefits under the new law.

Mr. SMOOT. That is what I said.

Mr. FLETCHER. But they have been long enough in the service as civilians to entitle them to certain rights, and those rights were taken away from them by legislation.

Mr. SMOOT. Then we will have to pass legislation correcting that and giving them the retirement privilege under the civil service act.

Mr. FLETCHER. The joint resolution does that thing.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah objects, and that ends the matter.

Mr. FLETCHER. Of course, if the Senator from New York desires he can move to take up the joint resolution. I think this is an important matter and ought to be taken up and considered.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry in response to the suggestion of the Senator from Florida. It was decided by a former occupant of the chair that no motion to take up a bill or joint resolution could be considered during the call of the calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. We are proceeding under Rule VIII.

Mr. FLETCHER. We are now proceeding under Rule VIII. Consequently, it would be in order to move to take up the joint resolution. I merely made that suggestion to the Senator from New York.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made. The joint resolution will be passed over.

FOREST RESERVES IN NEW MEXICO AND ARIZONA.

The bill (S. 916) limiting the creation or extension of forest reserves in New Mexico and Arizona was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter no forest reservation shall be created, nor shall any additions be made to one heretofore created, within the limits of the States of New Mexico and Arizona except by act of Congress.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CLOSING OF PINEY BRANCH ROAD IN THE DISTRICT.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1066) to authorize the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to close Piney Branch Road between Seventeenth and Taylor Streets and Sixteenth and Allison Streets NW., rendered useless or unnecessary by reason of the opening and extension of streets called for in the permanent highway plan of the District of Columbia.

It proposes to authorize the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to close Piney Branch Road from Seventeenth and Taylor Streets to Sixteenth and Allison Streets NW., upon the application in writing of the owner or owners of all of the property abutting on that road between the limits named, and provides that upon the closing of the road the land embraced therein shall revert to the owners of the abutting property.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXTENSION OF RENTS ACT.

The bill (S. 2131) to extend for the period of seven months the provisions of Title II of the food control and the District of Columbia rents act, approved October 22, 1919, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. FLETCHER. I ask that that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] has objected.

Mr. BALL. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill notwithstanding the objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Notwithstanding the objection of the Senator from Florida, the Senator from Delaware moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. KING. In view of the fact that there are several Senators who are interested in the bill whom I do not see upon the floor, I feel constrained to ask for a quorum, in order to give them an opportunity to be present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Assistant Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ball	Gooding	McKellar	Stanley
Borah	Harrell	McLean	Sterling
Brandeggee	Harris	McNary	Sutherland
Broussard	Harrison	Moses	Swanson
Calder	Heffin	Nelson	Townsend
Cameron	Johnson	Nicholson	Trammell
Capper	Jones, Wash.	Norbeck	Wadsworth
Caraway	Kenyon	Oddie	Warren
Curtis	Keyes	Overman	Watson, Ga.
Dial	King	Pomerene	Watson, Ind.
Dillingham	Ladd	Sheppard	Weller
Edge	La Follette	Shortridge	Williams
Ernst	Lenroot	Simmons	Willis
Fernald	Lodge	Smith
Fletcher	McCormick	Smoot
Glass	McCumber	Spencer

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-one Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Delaware that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 2131, notwithstanding the objection of the Senator from Florida.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with amendments.

The first amendment was, on page 3, after line 9, to insert as a new section the following:

SEC. 4. That Title II of such act is amended by adding at the end thereof two new sections to read as follows:

"SEC. 123. In all cases where the owner of any rental property, apartment, or hotel has, prior to April 18, 1921, collected any rent or charge therefor in excess of the amount fixed in a determination of the commission made and in full force and effect in accordance with the provisions of this title, he may within 10 days after this section takes effect return such excess rental or charge to the tenant directly, and if such return is made within such period the owner shall not become liable under the provisions of section 112 of this act.

"SEC. 124. (a) Any violation of this act or of any order of the commission committed before the termination of this act may, after such termination, be prosecuted by and in the name of the Attorney General in lieu of the commission in the same manner and with the same effect as if this act had not been terminated.

"(b) In the case of (1) any proceeding begun under the provisions of section 114 before the termination of this act, or (2) any proceeding on appeal from a determination of the commission begun before the termination of this act, such proceeding may, after such termination, be continued in the same manner with the same effect as if this act had not been terminated, and all powers and duties in respect to such proceedings vested in the commission by this act shall for the purposes of such proceedings be vested in the Attorney General.

"(c) Any right or obligation based upon any provision of this act or upon any order of the commission, accrued prior to the termination of this act may, after the termination of this act, be enforced in the same manner and with the same effect as if this act had not been terminated.

"(d) The Attorney General may, after the termination of this act, appoint the attorney last appointed by the commission under the provisions of section 103 to assist in the enforcement of this act. Such attorney shall continue to receive compensation for such services at the rate of $5,000 per annum, payable monthly."

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, I offer an amendment as a substitute for a portion of the amendment reported by the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Delaware to the amendment reported by the committee will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. In the amendment reported by the committee it is proposed to strike out, on page 3, from line 12 to line 21, inclusive, embracing section 123, and to insert the following:

SEC. 123. In all cases where the owner of any rental property, apartment, or hotel has, prior to April 18, 1921, collected or received any rent or charge therefor in excess of the amount fixed in a determination of the commission made and in full force and effect in accordance with the provisions of the title, he may within 30 days after this section takes effect return such excess rental or charge to the tenant directly, and if such return is made within such period the owner shall not become liable under the provisions of section 112 of this act. An owner who has obtained a judgment against a tenant for or which includes such rent or charge in excess of the amount fixed in such a determination of the commission shall move to vacate such judgment to the amount of such excess within 60 days after this section takes effect. In case such motion is not made and such owner does not exercise reasonable diligence to have such judgment vacated, such judgment, to the amount of such excess, shall be null and void.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LENROOT in the chair). The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Delaware to the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Delaware explain what change his amendment makes? I tried to follow it, but did not, perhaps, grasp its full scope.

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, the first change from the original rent act is that all business property is relieved from the effect or control of the act, making it clearly a housing proposition.

The second change is that the Rent Commission is authorized to employ an attorney. Under the original act they may employ nobody except a secretary, aside from such employees as they are authorized to obtain through the Civil Service Commission. The pending bill authorizes the employment of an attorney.

There is another change which applies where, since the law was declared to be unconstitutional by the local court, the tenant has paid an excess of rent over and above the amount fixed by the Rent Commission. According to the original law, the landlord had to refund the excess to the Rent Commission and pay double the amount. This bill authorizes their paying the excess to the tenant direct within 30 days, and the landlord is required to pay only the amount that has been overpaid.

Another amendment provides that where the agent or landlord has obtained a judgment against a tenant for the difference between the amount of the rent authorized by the Rent

Commission during that interim and the amount as fixed by the landlord or agent the landlord or agent must move to vacate that judgment. Those are the only amendments proposed to the original act.

Mr. FLETCHER. May I ask the Senator from Delaware to what extent the amendment he has offered reaches the amendment proposed by the committee? Does the Senator's amendment apply only to section 123, and will the other amendments proposed by the committee be offered as we proceed with section 124, for instance?

Mr. BALL. The amendment to section 123 takes the place of the amendment that was first offered.

Mr. FLETCHER. What about the other section, 124?

Mr. BALL. Section 124 stands the same way.

Mr. FLETCHER. It is not changed?

Mr. BALL. No.

Mr. FLETCHER. Then the amendment we are now voting on is an amendment offered to section 123?

Mr. BALL. In lieu of section 123.

Mr. FLETCHER. I do not see very much change in that, except that they have added the words "or received," so as to read "collected or received any rent," and then at the conclusion there are some changes and additions.

May I ask the Senator if he can tell us what this commission is costing now? The members of the commission get salaries of $5,000 a year each, and then here is a secretary at $3,000, and an attorney at $5,000. What are the other expenses connected with the commission?

Mr. BALL. The other expenses are only the employees that they have in the office, civil service employees, clerical assistants. I do not know what that expense is.

Mr. FLETCHER. Can the Senator give us any idea as to the monthly expense of this commission?

Mr. BALL. The original act appropriated $50,000 for the two years. I think there was an additional appropriation in the emergency appropriation bill of $15,000, was there not?

Mr. KING. Yes.

Mr. BALL. So far, the total expense of the operation of the act has been within $65,000.

Mr. FLETCHER. I saw a statement on this subject in the newspaper the other day. I have sent for the paper, but I do not have it here. My recollection is that the statement showed that during the last month this commission determined that there had been excess charges by landlords, tenants called upon to pay more than they should have paid, to the amount of about $6,387, in 42 cases, and that on the other hand they had found in favor of the landlords—in other words, against the tenants, and held that they should pay more than they did pay—to the amount of over $2,274, in 8 cases, showing that apparently the actual benefit to tenants under the decisions of this commission for one month amounts to some $4,113, according to that statement. It seems to me this commission is costing a good deal more than it is producing in the way of beneficial results.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President—

Mr. BALL. I should like to make just one statement, Mr. President, and then I will yield the floor. That, to me, shows that the commission is eminently fair both to the tenants and to the landlords, and that is what is necessary to have such a commission result in good effect. The moral effect of the existence of this commission has undoubtedly of itself reduced rents. I received to-day, and one yesterday, I think, a number of notices sent to me by different tenants, received from their landlords, stating that the rent act would expire on the 22d, and there would be an increase in their rents ranging from 15 to 40 per cent after that date.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, of course I do not know the merits of those cases. Each case depends upon its own facts and circumstances. It may be that they ought to be increased—I do not know—but this legislation was always wrong, in my judgment, and I regarded it as unconstitutional from the start. I never did believe that it was constitutional legislation, and it just did get through by the skin of its teeth upon that proposition, it seems.

Mr. KING. As a war measure.

Mr. FLETCHER. As a war measure, the lower court holding that it was unconstitutional; but I believe finally the Supreme Court, by a majority of one, decided that it was constitutional; but they put it upon the ground and upon the idea that it was war-emergency legislation, originating in war conditions, and justified only by reason of war conditions. The Government could commandeer buildings required for the conduct of the war. Now, it is supposed that the war ended some little time ago. Certainly we are not fighting anybody now and nobody is exercising any war powers now. Why should we continue upon our statute books legislation which practically places in the control of a commission the real estate investments of the people in the District of Columbia? Have we gotten to the point where the Government is warranted in laying its hands upon an apartment house, a building that is erected for the purpose of renting to tenants, and saying to the landlord or the owner of that property "You can charge only so much," and to tenants "You are entitled to occupy those premises without regard to the will of the owner of the property, and you can only be called upon to pay so much"? If that is not "government in business" I can not understand what is "government in business." The Government is actually taking control and charge of the property of individuals, men who have put their money into investments in this city, and is telling them how much they shall charge for the use of those premises they own, in effect when they shall be occupied and when they shall not be occupied, how long tenants shall stay there, and how soon they shall be forced to get out.

I submit that the whole thing is wrong. As far as I am individually concerned, while I own a little property here, it is utterly immaterial to me as a property owner in the District; but the whole legislation is wrong. This thing ought to end where Congress originally prescribed that it should end, in my judgment. I have never had any occasion to invoke or resist the jurisdiction or powers of the rent commission. I believe the members of it eminently fair, just, and capable; but placing an individual's property under the control and direction of a commission or an official is to that extent confiscation of private property. On principle it can not be defended. Only war emergency—actual war conditions—could warrant or excuse such legislation.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield.

Mr. CARAWAY. I want to ask the Senator for his construction of the language at the top of page 2. It enumerates apartment houses, but, if I read it correctly, hotels and apartment houses are both excluded from the provisions of the act. Now, who they are trying to catch I do not know.

Mr. KING. They are trying to catch apartment houses.

Mr. CARAWAY. But they have not got them. Under the definition commencing on the bottom of page 1 it says:

The term "rental property" means any building or part thereof or land appurtenant thereto in the District of Columbia rented or hired and the service agreed or required by law or by determination of the commission to be furnished in connection therewith; but does not include (a) a hotel or apartment, (b) a garage or warehouse, or (c) any building or part thereof or land appurtenant thereto used by the tenant exclusively for a business purpose other than the subleasing or otherwise subcontracting for use for living accommodations.

If there ever were any gougers in the District of Columbia, commend me to the hotel people and the apartment-house owners; and yet they are excluded from the provisions of this law.

Mr. FLETCHER. It certainly is quite ambiguous whether it is intended to exclude an apartment house or not or whether it is intended to mean an apartment in a hotel.

Mr. CARAWAY. An apartment would be, I think, pretty well defined.

Mr. FLETCHER. But I agree with the Senator that if there is anything that needs regulation or control by the Government in this city it is the hotels.

Mr. CARAWAY. And the apartment houses.

Mr. FLETCHER. And the apartment houses. Why, Mr. President, a friend of mine had two adjoining rooms at a hotel here last week, and $19 a day was the charge for the rooms. Their charges are grossly outrageous here and elsewhere, in most instances.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, with respect to the question of the definition, do we not have here what are called apartments and hotel apartments, distinguished the one from the other?

Mr. CARAWAY. Does the Senator think that does not include an apartment house?

Mr. GLASS. I think not. I think it includes only a hotel apartment—that is, an apartment house that is in the business likewise of furnishing meals.

Mr. CARAWAY. May I ask the Senator a question, if the Senator from Florida will permit me?

Mr. FLETCHER. Certainly.

Mr. CARAWAY. Why should an apartment hotel be excluded from the provisions of the act if an apartment house is to be included?

Mr. GLASS. I assume they put it on the same basis as a hotel.

Mr. FLETCHER. I see no reason for making any exception in instances of that sort. If there ought to be any regulation at all, it ought to cover those that are excluded.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, will the Senator permit a suggestion? My reading of this leads me to suggest that while it is a little bit obscure, it seems to me, after conferring with the Senator from Delaware, who is the chairman of the committee, that what is intended is that there should be a comma after the word "thereto" on line 5, so that the qualifying clause following that applies to all of these buildings. It would then read "a hotel or apartment used by the tenant exclusively for a business purpose other than the subleasing or otherwise subcontracting for use for living accommodations."

Mr. CARAWAY. The intention was not to exclude apartments?

Mr. BALL. Oh, no; only apartment houses parts of which are used exclusively for business purposes.

Mr. CARAWAY. I believe it is going to take some remodeling, or else they will escape.

Mr. BALL. The original act named apartments and hotels used entirely for living purposes. This bill makes that exception, that apartments or hotels or buildings used exclusively for business purposes are exempt from the operation of the bill.

Mr. POMERENE. Let me suggest a modification of that so as to make it perfectly clear, if the chairman will permit me. Suppose that right after the words "a hotel or apartment" we insert the last clause, "used by the tenant exclusively for a business purpose other than the subleasing or otherwise subcontracting for use for living accommodations."

Mr. BALL. I like the wording of that better than the wording of the bill as it stands, although I think either will cover the ground.

Mr. POMERENE. I think that would relieve the difficulty which the Senator from Arkansas and the Senator from Florida have in mind.

Mr. BALL. I accept that change in the wording, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that before that can be done the pending amendment must be disposed of.

Mr. FLETCHER. There is an amendment already pending. We shall have to go back to that, because that has not been involved in the discussion so far. However, I think the suggestion will very greatly improve it, so that it would exclude a hotel or apartment used exclusively for business purposes. I take it that the hotel would have to be used for the business of conducting a hotel. An apartment would have to be used for business purposes, but not for subleasing or subcontracting for use for living accommodations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that if that is agreed upon, it may be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. POMERENE. I think we do agree—at least, those who have been taking part in the colloquy here.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will submit a request for unanimous consent.

Mr. POMERENE. I ask unanimous consent that that be taken up now.

Mr. FLETCHER. I have no objection to that.

Mr. WILLIS. What is the request of my colleague?

Mr. POMERENE. To insert, after the words "a hotel or apartment," in line 4, the language in lines 6, 7, and 8.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? There being no objection, the Secretary will state the amendment.

Mr. FLETCHER. I do not understand that they want to strike out anything.

Mr. POMERENE. No; leave that language just as it is.

Mr. FLETCHER. That could be left to be adjusted when the Senators have taken a little time to go over it. The question would first come on this amendment, and that could be straightened out later.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. After the word "apartment" and the comma, on line 4, insert the words appearing on lines 6, 7, and 8, so as to read:

Used by the tenant exclusively for a business purpose other than the subleasing or otherwise subcontracting for use for living accommodations, (b) a garage or warehouse, or (c) any building or part thereof or land appurtenant thereto used by the tenant exclusively for a business purpose.

Mr. KING. May I inquire of the Senator from Ohio or the Senator from Delaware if, as read at the desk, it would not exclude from the limitations the buildings described in line 5?

Mr. POMERENE. They are exempted, I take it, from the provisions of the act. I may say that the chairman of the committee is very much more familiar with the provision than I am, because I have not given much attention to the matter of amendment of the bill; but, as I understood his statement, the object was simply to keep under the jurisdiction of the Rent Commission property which is used for residential or housing purposes.

Mr. FLETCHER. All business property, all hotels, and all portions of apartments used for business purposes are to be excluded from the jurisdiction of the commission.

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, I am quite sure that the language is perfectly clear. These are the exceptions:

"But does not include (a) a hotel or apartment," if tenanted exclusively for business purposes; "(b) a garage or warehouse; or (c) any building or part thereof or land appurtenant thereto."

It means all of those, or any of them, used by the tenant exclusively for business purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think the purpose of the Senator would be accomplished by just putting a comma after the word "thereto."

Mr. BALL. I think so.

Mr. POMERENE. I think that would perhaps meet the situation. I accept that suggestion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio withdraws the previous amendment and moves to amend by inserting a comma after the word "thereto," in line 5.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KING. I renew the inquiry which was propounded by the Senator from Arkansas a moment ago. If I understand the purpose of the Senator from Delaware, I fail to see how that purpose can be consummated, with the amendment just agreed to, by leaving the language as reported by the committee. I understand these properties will be excluded from the jurisdiction of the commission, namely, hotels and apartments. It is not the intention of the Senator to exclude apartments from the operation of the bill unless the apartments are used exclusively for business purposes?

Mr. BALL. The Senator certainly appreciates the fact that that designates hotels and apartments, garages, and so forth, or any other buildings, excluding all of those under subdivisions (a), (b), and (c) from the effect of the law. They are the exceptions.

Mr. KING. It does not include hotels; it does not include apartments, it does not include garages or warehouses, or any building or part thereof, or the land appurtenant thereto, used by a tenant exclusively for business purposes.

Mr. BALL. That is right.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator mean to exclude apartments from the operation of this bill? I thought it was the intention of the Senator to subject apartments to the operation of the bill.

Mr. BALL. It is the intention to exclude apartments if any part of those apartments is used entirely for business purposes. The first stories of large apartment houses are generally occupied by stores. It excludes those stores. It excludes any part of an apartment occupied entirely for a business purpose, but it keeps under the act the apartment building or parts of it used for housing purposes.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, not being a supporter of the bill, if the Senator is satisfied with what I regard as a very defective construction, which is bound to lead to an interpretation, in my opinion, adverse to that for which he contends, I shall make no objection. If he is content to have the bill in that form, of course I shall not object.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, I desire to propound an inquiry to the Senator from Utah, as he has given this subject much study. In his judgment, what is the effect upon building operations in the District of such restrictions as are here contemplated, and as were provided in the original act? Are they likely to encourage or to discourage the building of rental property?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I had occasion, when the measure was under consideration some time ago, to express my opinion in regard to this character of legislation.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to make another suggestion? May I have the attention of the chairman of the committee, as well?

Mr. KING. If I may be excused from answering the question of the junior Senator from Ohio, I will yield to the senior Senator from Ohio.

Mr. POMERENE. If the Senator was answering the question of another Senator, of course I shall not interrupt.

Mr. KING. I can answer that inquiry later.

Mr. WILLIS. I want to have it answered.

Mr. POMERENE. I was going to suggest that after the word "or" in line 4, page 2, there be inserted the words "or any portion of an apartment building," and then insert the comma as suggested. Then it would make it perfectly clear that you are only exempting from the provisions of the act any portion of an apartment building which might be used exclusively for business purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio offer that as an amendment?

Mr. POMERENE. I can simplify it by moving to strike out the word "apartment" in line 4, page 2, and to insert in lieu thereof the words "or any portion of an apartment building."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 2, line 4, it is proposed to strike out the word "apartment" and to insert the words "any portion of an apartment building," so that it will read:

but does not include (a) a hotel or any portion of an apartment building, (b) a garage or warehouse, or (c) any building or part thereof or land appurtenant thereto used by the tenant exclusively for a business purpose other than the subleasing or otherwise subcontracting for use for living accommodations.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I withdraw that amendment, because after a conference with the chairman of the committee I find that that is entirely wrong.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio withdraws the amendment.

Mr. BALL. I would like to offer one amendment, and I am satisfied it will make the provision absolutely safe. I propose to amend on line 5, page 2, by inserting after the word "any" the word "other."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 2, line 5, after the word "any," the first word in the line, it is proposed to insert the word "other," so that it will read "or (c) any other building or part thereof or land appurtenant thereto."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. POMERENE. I now offer my amendment at another point. I propose to amend by inserting after "(a)," in line 3, page 2, the words "any portion of a hotel or apartment building."

Mr. BALL. I accept that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. The Senator from Ohio proposes to strike out the words "a hotel or apartment," at the beginning of line 4, page 2, and to insert the words "any portion of a hotel or apartment building."

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is upon the amendment proposed by the Senator from Delaware to the committee amendment.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, I desire at this point to renew my inquiry made of the Senator from Utah or the Senator from Florida or some one who has investigated this question as to what has been the effect of legislation of this character upon building operations in the District? I am asking the question because it is perfectly obvious that the only way you can remedy a situation of this sort, in the long run, is to have more houses, more rooms, and more buildings. If this legislation encourages building it is desirable. If it discourages building it is undesirable. I should like to have the opinion of the Senator from Florida on that point.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I can not speak from experience in connection with the matter, but from observation and from common knowledge it is perfectly apparent that this sort of legislation discourages building. It does retard it in many ways, and it certainly discourages the putting up of new buildings, because a man who has a lot which he would like to improve by erecting buildings on to rent out to people who need houses would not undertake to launch upon an enterprise of that sort and invest his capital in buildings when he knew they would be controlled and managed by an outside commission.

It stands to reason that no man would want to invest his money and take the chances of being able to invest so as to earn a reasonable percentage on his investment, knowing that some third party would step in and say, "We will tell you how much you shall charge for your buildings and we will decide how much your apartments will be let for, and all questions between you and your tenants are not matters of private contract between you people, to be settled among yourselves, but those contracts are to be supervised by us, and we will determine whether they are reasonable or not, and we will determine whether the contracts between the landlord and tenant have been violated or not, if the question arises in the course of time, and we will determine whether the tenant is right or you are right, and we will decide that the tenant can stay in possession of your property as long as we say the tenant shall stay there, and that the tenant shall pay only the rent we say the tenant shall pay."

No man is going to invest his money in a building with that sort of condition existing, in my judgment, unless, of course, he assumes that the law is to terminate very soon.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator will admit that this law has been on the statute books quite a while, and that a great many apartment houses have been erected in the city of Washington notwithstanding it. What has the Senator to say about that?

Mr. FLETCHER. I admit that there have been a great many apartment houses erected; that a great many buildings have gone up, but nothing approaching what would have been erected, in my judgment, if that legislation had not been on the statute books, and certainly not if the owners of those properties had not understood that the legislation was to terminate at a certain time, and the time would soon come, probably by the time their buildings are completed, when they would be no longer under the restraints and restrictions of this law.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida will suspend. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The READING CLERK. A bill (H. R. 7294) supplemental to the national prohibition act.

Mr. STERLING obtained the floor.

Mr. BALL. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. STERLING. I yield to the Senator from Delaware to submit a request.

Mr. BALL. I ask unanimous consent that the bill known as the rent bill be considered until 2.30 o'clock, in the hope that we may get a vote by that time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware asks unanimous consent that the consideration of the bill known as the rent bill may be continued until 2.30 o'clock.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I am constrained to object to that request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

AMENDMENT OF FEDERAL FARM LOAN ACT.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. STERLING. I yield.

Mr. McLEAN. The bill (S. 1811) increasing the rate of interest on farm loan bonds from 5 to 5½ per cent has passed the House and has been received by the Senate. The House placed an amendment limiting to June 30, 1923, the time in which the rate shall be 5½ per cent. I understand there is no objection to that amendment. It is very important that the bill should pass as amended. I ask the Senator from South Dakota if he is willing that the unfinished business may be temporarily laid aside while the Chair hands down the bill to which I have referred.

Mr. STERLING. I consent that the unfinished business may be temporarily laid aside for that purpose, if it leads to no discussion.

Mr. McLEAN. I know of no discussion that will ensue.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think it ought to be acted on, and I hope that the Senate will concur in the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1811) to amend the Federal farm loan act, as amended. The amendment of the House was on page 2, line 3, after "anum" to insert ", but no bonds issued or sold after June 30, 1923, shall bear a rate of interest to exceed 5 per centum per annum."

Mr. McLEAN. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OF NATIONAL PROHIBITION ACT.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7294), an act supplemental to the national prohibition act.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I ask that the Secretary may proceed with the reading of the bill for action on the committee amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is now pending an amendment of the committee which the Secretary will state.

The READING CLERK. The Committee on the Judiciary propose, on page 2 in line 4 after the word "contains," to insert the words "separately or in the aggregate," so as to read:

Nor shall any one prescribe or sell or furnish on any prescription more than one-fourth of one gallon of vinous liquor, or any such vinous or spirituous liquor that contains separately or in the aggregate more than one-half pint of alcohol, for use by any person within any period of 10 days.

PROPOSED REDUCTION OF THE ARMY.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I introduced a joint resolution this morning (S. J. Res. 96) to reduce the Army to 100,000 enlisted men excluding the Philippine Scouts. I now desire to make some brief observations with regard to it before it shall be referred to the committee.

We have reached the point where we are compelled to consider the question of whether we are going to raise taxes instead of lower them. The chairman of the Committee on Finance advised the country some two weeks ago that there would be no decrease in taxes this year. The Secretary of the Treasury has now advised us that not only will there be no decrease, but unless there are pronounced reductions in the way of expenditures and appropriations there will be an increase in taxes. This, it seems to me, enjoins upon us the necessity of looking about to see where we may possibly reduce expenditures.

To increase taxes at this time would be almost a disaster. To fail to reduce taxes would, indeed, be most discouraging. I know of no way by which we can reduce taxes except to reduce expenditures. I have no faith in reducing taxes by reducing the class of expenditures to which so much reference is now being made; that is, by cutting down expenditures in the departments by the discharge of employees, and so forth. I do not criticize that. I think it is very important that we reduce the expenses of the different departments to the lowest possible working point. But it is manifest that, do the very best we may with reference to that class of expenses, we can not hope to cut enough to make any perceptible effect upon the taxes which we are compelled to levy.

There are no places where we can cut to the extent of reducing taxes except through the Army and the Navy, and if we are not willing to do that we may just as well say to the country that we shall do exceedingly well if we keep the expenditures and the taxes at the present point and that there is no hope of reduction.

This morning's Washington Post carries a statement from the Secretary of the Treasury, in which he said:

Without the assurance of substantial additional reductions in expenditures it would be folly to proceed to reduce revenue merely in the hope of reduced expenditures. Even without change in the law, revenue will shrink from natural causes and will shrink according to the present outlook at a faster rate than current expenditures.

The Secretary proceeded to show that expenditures thus far in the present fiscal year had actually increased as compared with those of a year ago. He told the committee that ordinary expenditures for July, the first month of the fiscal year, were $322,000,000, as against $307,000,000 in July, 1920, leaving a current deficit of $113,000,000, as compared with a deficit of $76,000,000 in July a year ago. Of the total expenditures last month $115,000,000 was for the account of the Military and Naval Establishments and $32,000,000 for the Shipping Board.

Now, Mr. President, we reduced the Army or made provision for its reduction during this session of Congress to 150,000 men, but in my opinion it would be perfectly safe to reduce the Army to 100,000 men. If we do so, we can certainly cut expenses in that instance to the extent of from $50,000,000 to $70,000,000. I know of no other place, except that of the Navy and the Shipping Board, where we can make any considerable cut. It was thought at the time the bill was before the Congress providing for reduction to 150,000 men that it would be practically impossible to accomplish that result. It was supposed that the contracts with the men stood in the way of a reduction. I did not think then, and I do not think now, that the contracts, according to their terms, stand in the way of reduction to any extent which the Government may see fit to make. But we need not discuss that, because it now transpires that the men are so anxious to get out of the Army that they are perfectly willing to relieve the Government of any contractual obligation which may possibly exist between the Government and the men.

As I understand, Secretary Weeks, who set about in good faith to carry out the provisions of the law, published a general notice or sent out a general order that anyone desiring to leave the Army should file his application for discharge and that it would be immediately acted upon and he would be given permission to take his leave. As the Senator from Utah

[Mr. SMOOT] just suggests, that was in continental America. I am also informed that out of twenty-three thousand and some odd men upon the Mexican border 11,984 applied for discharge. I have seen it stated in the western papers, although I have not known of it being officially confirmed, that the personnel at Camp Lewis voted unanimously to apply for the discharge for every man there in the service.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. BORAH. Certainly.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I will say to the Senator that in talking with the Secretary of War a short time ago I do not remember that he said they voted unanimously, but he said they were nearly all applying for discharge from Camp Lewis; so the reports in the paper are no doubt correct.

Mr. BORAH. According to a statement published in the papers a few days ago we were advised that the reduction of the United States Army to a peace-time strength of 150,000 men would be accomplished by July 31. The resignations literally poured in and caused the Secretary of War to revoke his order before the month ended. I have no doubt at all that if we should pass a joint resolution providing for reduction of the Army to 100,000 men and the Secretary of War should recognize the applications which have been made, we could reduce the Army to 100,000 men by the 1st of October just as easily as we have reduced it to 150,000 men by the 31st day of July.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. FLETCHER. I confess an erroneous impression at the time the Army reorganization bill was before the Senate and to have made the mistake of supposing that it would be impossible to reduce the Army without, as our committee was told, resorting to strong-arm methods. In other words, I was under the impression—and I got it honestly from the hearings before the committee—that it would be impossible to reduce the Army to 150,000 men within the time suggested in the Senate without forcing them.

However, I am glad to say that what the Senator from Idaho is stating is borne out by the information which comes to me that the men are making application to be discharged much faster than the War Department can adjust itself to the new conditions. They have to reorganize units, on account of these numerous applications, in a way that they never supposed would come about. It is entirely possible that what the Senator desires can be accomplished, and the Army can be reduced to 100,000 men without compelling any drastic methods to be adopted.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I am informed, not officially, but semiofficially, that the applications now on file, or the applications which were received up to the time when the Secretary revoked his order, if accepted would reduce the Army now to 100,000 men.

So we have this situation: An Army of 150,000 men reduced easily under the law which Congress passed, with applications for discharge pending which would reduce it to 100,000 men. The simple question, therefore, and the only question that Congress has to determine is whether in times of peace and under the economic conditions which confront us we can afford to reduce the Army to 100,000 men.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Idaho yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WILLIS in the chair). Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. NELSON. I wish to call the Senator's attention to the fact that we probably have a complement of officers now sufficient for 500,000 men. Merely discharging the privates will still leave us with a top-heavy body of officers whose pay is immense. The pay of the supernumerary officers would amount to more than that of the privates, and unless we could reduce the corps of officers commensurately with the reduction in the number of privates we should not get full relief.

Mr. BORAH. I am coming to that. I thank the Senator, however, for the suggestion. But the reduction of the Army to 100,000 men would of itself reduce the expenses of the Army from sixty to seventy million dollars. That would be the direct reduction of expenses, but the indirect reduction would be much larger. There are savings which could be made by reason of the cut in other ways. It would be safe to say that from seventy-five to one hundred million dollars could be saved merely by the reduction of the Army to 100,000 men.

As indicated by the venerable Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] we have 14,000 commissioned officers in the Army, and if I carry the figures correctly in my mind the expenditure for those officers in the way of salaries, and so forth, aggregates about from fifty-three million to fifty-four million dollars annually.

Mr. President, it seems perfectly ludicrous to say that we need 14,000 commissioned officers for an Army of 150,000. The 14,000 commissioned officers were provided upon the theory of maintaining an Army of from 280,000 to 300,000 men. In fact, I was advised by an officer of the Army lately that we had a sufficient Army organization, in the way of officers, for an Army of 400,000, if not for an Army of 450,000 men. We have here in the city of Washington, according to the telephone book—the nearest information that I have been able to get—from 1,750 to 2,000 officers. We have in Germany, with the Expeditionary Force there, in round numbers, about 500 officers. What we should do, if we are going to reduce expenditures, is to set about with the same zeal and vigor to reduce the Army and give it the same attention and study for the purpose of reduction that we set about to increase it when conditions required it to be increased. I feel perfectly sure, if the Military Affairs Committee, with its very able chairman, will give this matter the attention which they would undoubtedly give it if a different exigency confronted us—that is to say, if it were necessary to increase it—that we can safely reduce the Army to 100,000 men, and we can reduce the commissioned officers of the Army so as to save $25,000,000 to $30,000,000 in that particular instance.

Here, Mr. President, would be a saving of $100,000,000 or $150,000,000. Will some Senator tell me where else we may make a cut and secure a saving of such moment?

We are confronting the proposition of either reducing the Army and building up a different organization, or we are confronted with the proposition, as the Secretary of the Treasury tells us, of increasing taxes this year. Mr. President, this is not a party matter, and yet such questions appeal to us because we are responsible for this situation. We are in power; we are in control; and as a mere matter of prophecy and by no means as a threat—which it could not be—I venture to say that if we maintain the Army at 150,000 men, with 14,000 commissioned officers, and increase taxes this year, we shall have a much smaller membership in both bodies of Congress after the next election than we now have.

It is not a theory, but it is a condition which confronts us. There is nothing which is now of so much concern to the people of the country as to know whether or not they are going to get any relief from these ever-increasing expenditures. It is up to the party in power to devise some means or methods by which to do it.

Does anyone feel that we shall be insecure with an Army of 100,000? It is conceded that we are simply maintaining an Army for police purposes, as it were; it is conceded that our Army would be wholly insufficient and that we could not rely upon it if we were in expectation of trouble even with Mexico, or with any other country. Fortunately we are not in expectation of any trouble, but we are maintaining the Army solely for police purposes. One hundred thousand men, in my judgment, will be just as efficient, will meet the situation with as much security to the order and safety of the country, as would 150,000 men.

Mr. President, we have 14,000 men in Germany. One of the solemn pledges made to the voters in the last campaign was that the Army would be brought out of Europe just as soon as the new administration could issue the order. That pledge was repeated more than once in the campaign, and it was thoroughly understood. I think that that was a pledge which is within our power to fulfill. I would not expect a party pledge to be carried out if conditions were changed, if circumstances were different, but if conditions have changed and if circumstances are different we are uninformed as to the change.

What possible benefit do we receive from having 14,000 soldiers in Europe? What possible advantage is it to the United States? What property have we there to secure? What interests have we there to protect? On the other hand, what possible security or what possible advantage is it to any European power to have them there? Does anyone think that it is necessary to maintain soldiers in Germany under present conditions in order to insure peace or prevent an outbreak on the part of the German people?

We not only have 14,000 soldiers there, but, as I said a moment ago, we have about 500 officers. What possible use can there be, so far as official duties are concerned, for 500 officers when they serve with only 14,000 soldiers? According to the report of the Secretary of War, we had in Germany under date of July 26, 1921, commissioned officers, 480; warrant officers, 20; enlisted men, 13,241. I have stated the number at 14,000; that is true, in round figures, but I give the exact figures here. That makes a total of 13,785 altogether.

These figures are taken from a report of June 30, 1921, which is the latest available. The total cost of keeping these troops in Europe from December 18, 1918, to April 30, 1921, the latest date available, has been $275,324,192, an average of $966,049.80 per month. It is costing us, therefore, about $1,000,000 a month to maintain this army in Europe—a much larger amount than would be necessary to maintain the same number in the United States.

On April 30, 1921, the balance due to the United States by Germany for the maintenance of this army was $240,744,511.89. So, as a matter of fact, while Germany is responsible for the cost, at present it is all coming out of the taxpayers of the United States and the amount is growing all the time. It is no relief to the taxpayer to say to him that Germany is responsible, when Germany does not respond and Germany can not respond at the present time.

I should like to be advised by some one who is more familiar with the subject than myself as to what possible advantage, either to the United States or to the security of Europe, the expenditure of this $1,000,000 a month is. If it is of no advantage, certainly in the interest of economy we should stop the expenditure as soon as possible.

I desire to say further, Mr. President, that, even if Germany were able to respond within any reasonable time, there is no reason why we should put upon Germany any unnecessary expense. If it is unnecessary to maintain American troops in Germany, it is unreasonable to put that expense upon Germany, and, in a sense, it is unjust. All Europe is interested in the recovery of Germany as an economic unit. Europe will not be restored to normal conditions until Germany is restored economically. Until the German question and the Russian question are solved, until the 160,000,000 people in Russia and the 70,000,000 people in Germany are back to economic normalcy, we can not hope for any recovery of normal conditions throughout Europe and, indeed, throughout the world. Not, therefore, as a question of justice, or injustice alone, but as a question of assisting in the restoration of economic conditions in Europe, we should take from Germany every dollar of expense that it is not absolutely necessary to put upon her.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Has the Senator any information as to why our governmental authorities consider it necessary to maintain 14,000 American troops in the Rhineland when France has an army of 800,000 men?

Mr. BORAH. No; I have no information about that which I could give the Senator, but, like the Senator, I have a very strong opinion that it is unnecessary.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. FLETCHER. I assume the Senator understands they are there by agreement with Germany. Whether they are there at the request of Germany is another question.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I have seen it stated in the public prints by correspondents residing abroad that our troops there were very well contented, and that they liked it, and that the Germans liked to have them there in preference to the troops of other nations. I assume that when they originally were placed there it was done by due authority and for a proper purpose, just after the armistice; but I am at a loss to understand why the necessity for their maintenance there now exists, and I am simply seeking for some light, hoping that the department may inform us. I was under the impression that some resolution had been adopted by the Senate within the last few weeks asking the War Department or the President to advise us why it was considered necessary to maintain those troops there, or whether it was considered necessary, but I am not sure. I think such a resolution was passed.

Mr. BORAH. No; the resolution simply called for the number of troops and the expenditure, and how much Germany was indebted to us for keeping them there. It did not call for the reasons for keeping them there, because I felt that in all probability that would embarrass a reply to the resolution, and I wanted the other information.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I do not think it would embarrass anybody. I do not think it ought to embarrass the administration, for it seems to me that three years after the war is over the American people are entitled to know, without anybody being embarrassed, why an American Army is being maintained abroad in Europe, what the necessity for it is.

Mr. McKELLAR and Mr. FLETCHER addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. BORAH. I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, after the passage of the peace resolution was it not the idea that the soldiers in Germany should be at once returned, and that it should be illegal, or almost if not quite an act of war, to keep them there after the peace resolution passed? As I understood that was one of the arguments in favor of the so-called Knox-Porter resolution—that it would mean the withdrawal of our troops from the Rhine.

Mr. BORAH. I do not know that the Senator's question calls for an answer, but it may call for a comment. I think that we should have withdrawn our troops prior to the passage of the resolution, and I do not think the passage of the resolution presents any reason why they should not be withdrawn after its passage.

Mr. McKELLAR. I agree with the Senator about that; and I think it would save us an enormous amount of money to withdraw them.

Mr. BORAH. In other words, it is supposed in some quarters that the passage of the resolution did not have any effect one way or the other. It is not necessary to argue that, but it certainly did not present any reason for keeping them there.

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not believe that the Attorney General has yet reported as to whether the peace resolution had any effect or not. I understand it is still in his hands to determine whether or not it actually had any effect.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me, I have no such understanding. I do not know where the Senator gets his understanding.

Mr. McKELLAR. I get it from the newspapers, saying that the resolution is still in the hands of the Attorney General for a report as to what its effect is; and I also get from the newspapers the statement that the administration contemplates entering into a treaty of peace with Germany. I read that in the New York Tribune, which is a well-known Republican journal.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Yes; very. My understanding of the situation was that the Attorney General was not to give an opinion as to the effect of the Knox resolution, but that he had been requested to advise the President whether it would be advisable for him to issue a proclamation stating that Congress had passed such a resolution; but I do not think our understandings from what men write in newspapers are a very sound basis for international arguments.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am glad to have the explanation of the Senator. I did not know that it had any result at all; and, whether claimed or not, I have not seen any effects of it. Surely the only effect that seemed possible under it was to withdraw the troops, and the troops have not been withdrawn.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The Senator, I know, belongs to that school which considered the joint resolution of Congress which had declared war and then stated that we were at peace to be a mere idle gesture; but I think the Senator will in due time perceive the effect of the resolution.

Mr. McKELLAR. I hope so.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LENROOT in the chair). Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. STANLEY. If the passage of the Knox resolution in no way affects the status of this country as to the moral or legal right to maintain an army in the territory of the countries with which we are alleged to be at peace, can the Senator point to any difference whatever in our relations with Germany from those that existed before the passage of the resolution?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Why, yes. Irrespective of what effect it has upon our right to maintain an army abroad, in my opinion there can be no question that the passage of the Knox resolution produced an official status of peace between the United States and Germany. That is my opinion. If it did, then I fail to perceive our authority to maintain an army in Germany; but even if Germany consents to it, I myself do not see what authority we have to order troops into a foreign country, even with the consent of the foreign country, in time of peace. I do not know what purpose our troops are serving in Germany, and I do not approve of it. I expressed the opinion to the Senator from Tennessee, at the time we passed the Knox resolution, that the army ought to be withdrawn, and I had a confident hope that it would soon be withdrawn, and I have not abandoned that hope.

Mr. McKELLAR. In which hope I heartily join the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I do not know but that the matter is in process of carrying out now. I do not know. I suppose that even if the War Department and the President have made up their minds to withdraw that army very quickly, it is considerable of an enterprise to make the proper preparations to withdraw such a large force across the sea.

Mr. STANLEY. As I understand, the Senator from Connecticut and the Senator from Idaho take different views about the effect of this resolution upon our moral or legal right to maintain these troops in Germany. As I understand the Senator from Connecticut, he is of the opinion that we are officially at peace, and, if we are officially at peace, certainly we have no moral, if any legal, right to maintain an army within the territory of a country with which we are at peace, officially or otherwise.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I do not think myself that the question of morals enters much into the military business, but there is a question of our legal right to maintain an army across the seas.

Mr. STANLEY. Does not the Senator think that the question of morals ought to enter into the conduct of the Government in the disposition of an army?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Of course, I think morals ought to enter into everything, and do; but I know of no basis upon which to arrive at a logical conclusion about whether or not we have a moral right to maintain these men abroad.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, what I had to say, to which the Senator from Kentucky referred, was this: We had a perfect right to withdraw these troops from Germany before the official status of peace was declared, if we desired to do so. If the Knox resolution has had the effect of declaring an official state of peace, we still have the right. In other words, the Knox resolution, from my viewpoint, has nothing to do with either our right or our duty to withdraw these troops from Germany.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. BORAH. I do.

Mr. STANLEY. Is the Senator of the opinion that the passage of the Knox resolution and an official status of peace, as far as this country is concerned—of course it can not affect Germany—would add to the obligation of this Government to remove those troops, if it had any effect whatever?

Mr. BORAH. It might add something to the obligation in a sense, but I do not care to discuss the question of the effect of the Knox resolution. I recognized the fact that we were, as a fact, in a state of peace, and the mere technical condition which existed did not disturb me in the least. I was perfectly willing to vote for the resolution in order to have that official status declared, but for all practical purposes we could have gone ahead and done what we ought to do now without its passage. The fact is that the conditions were brought on by reason of the fact that the Versailles treaty was not satisfactory, and a condition arose in which apparently there had to be a declaration of an official status of peace, and the Knox resolution did it. As far as the subject with which I am now concerned is touched by it or controlled by it, I do not think it has any particular effect upon it. It does not from my standpoint.

Mr. President, I do not know what the President's program is for withdrawing these troops from Germany. I am not seeking to criticize. I only say that as a Senator whose duty it is to find some way by which to reduce expenditures I see in this program some way of reducing them; and I sincerely hope that the executive department, if it has not already taken steps, will take steps immediately to withdraw these troops from Germany, reduce the expenses in that particular as far as possible, and that it will then cooperate with the Congress in reducing the number of the Army in the United States.

The newspapers carry to us from day to day, Mr. President, the proposition that Congress must reduce expenditures, and the Secretary of the Treasury advised Congress upon yesterday that Congress must reduce expenditures. Of course, primarily, the responsibility is upon Congress. That is correct. Primarily, no one except the Congress can do that; but it would be misleading to the country if it were assumed that Congress could do this without the cooperation and the full-hearted aid and support of the executive department. I want to say to Mr. Mellon and those who are interested in curtailing expenses that in order to bring about a curtailment of expenses we must have the hearty cooperation of the executive department. Congress would have cut the Army to 100,000 men at this session in my judgment if it had not been for the opposition of the executive department, and Congress would have cut the Navy $10,000,000 in this Senate Chamber had it not been for the opposition of the executive department. It was only by determined effort on the part of Congress in opposition to the executive department that we reduced the Army to 150,000. Therefore, in order to have a program of reduction and economy, it is not sufficient to say that Congress must act. There must be cooperation and complete cooperation upon the part of the executive department in order that we may accomplish these things.

If the President, therefore, will assist us, or if he will not oppose, through his Secretary of War, the reduction of the Army to 100,000 men, I venture to say that the Congress will pass a measure bringing about such a reduction without any considerable delay.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. FLETCHER. May I ask the Senator if he thinks any action by Congress is necessary to bring the Army away from Germany?

Mr. BORAH. I do not think so.

Mr. FLETCHER. It seems to me that that is entirely within the Executive authority.

Mr. BORAH. Yes; I do not think there is any necessity for any congressional action.

Mr. FLETCHER. I agree with the Senator that there is no reason justifying the continuance of that Army there. Even if Germany is obligated to pay the expense of it, we ought not to impose that expense upon Germany, and I believe we have no right to maintain that Army there. I quite agree with that; and, as I say, I can not understand that any action by Congress is needed in order to relieve that situation.

Mr. BORAH. The thought which I was seeking to accentuate, therefore, when the Senator interrupted, was the mere fact that if this program is going to amount to anything at all it must have the hearty approval of both the executive department and the Congress. Having been interested in these matters for months I will be pardoned for saying the failure to reduce is not wholly with Congress.

Mr. President, we have called a conference for the purpose of disarmament, or of limitation of armament; and I can think of no more encouraging fact prior to the convening of that conference than the fact that the United States, with its 110,000,000 people, had reduced its Army to 100,000 men.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. BORAH. Just a moment. It would be notice to the entire world that the United States is acting in the best of faith with the view of actually reducing these expenditures for armies and navies.

There is no possible reason why we should not give a manifestation of that faith upon our part, and let it have what effect it will as a moral proposition in leading other nations to believe that this matter is in good faith upon our part.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I agree with the Senator from Idaho that the cutting down of the Army just prior to the call of the conference was a hopeful sign. But I want to ask the Senator from Idaho if he read in the morning paper that Great Britain, which is, in the minds of many, a poverty-stricken country, through its House of Commons, had ordered a new naval building program of four battleships, after the conference had been called to reduce armaments? Does the Senator think that is a hopeful sign? I would like to have his views on it.

Mr. BORAH. I may refer to that a little later, as I am going to discuss the Navy in a few moments.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President, it is not my purpose to divert the Senator from Idaho from the argument that he is making, but right at that point there seems to be a general impression when disarmament is mentioned that it refers to the curtailment of the naval programs of the several nations pursuant to any agreement which may be entered into. Does the Senator believe that a curtailment of the navies of the several countries which maintain large navies, without a contemporaneous curtailment of the land forces of those countries, is material in the maintenance of peace, or in the cutting down of the inordinate expenses due to the preparations for war by those several countries? It strikes me that of the two the more dangerous and the more expensive, in the long run, is the maintenance of enormous land forces.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, let me give the Senator an illustration. I think he will see the viewpoint of the Senator from Idaho through an illustration better than in any other way.

Of course, if we could have a curtailment of land armament, of appropriations for the purpose of maintaining military forces, along with the curtailment of naval expenditures, that would be what everyone would desire; that would be the consummation for which we would all pray.

But suppose it should transpire that, owing to existing conditions in Europe, we can not get land disarmament. The question then is, Shall we give up hope of curtailing expenditures on naval armament until the conditions in Europe permit of land disarmament? I do not think we should. For instance, France to-day has 800,000 men in her army. As a matter of fact, she has 1,600,000 subject to call. But she has actually in her army 800,000 men. But if the Senator were called upon to vote upon my joint resolution to-morrow, he would not care whether France had 800,000 or 1,000,000, so far as the reduction of our Army to 100,000 men is concerned. Neither would he care whether Italy has 300,000 or 100,000. Neither would he care whether Hungary had 300,000 or 30,000. It would not concern the Senator in the least, and I doubt if it would be any concern to the Senator, so far as reducing our Army is concerned, whether Great Britain has 300,000 or 100,000 men.

But if France, instead of 800,000 men in her land forces, were building a navy proportionately strong, the Senator from Kentucky would not consent to reducing our naval building program. It makes all the difference in the world, Mr. President, to my mind. In fact, Mr. President, it may be said with a good deal of certainty that the late war was largely the result, not of armies being increased and augmented but the result of the continuous competitive building of navies between Germany and Great Britain.

Suppose we take Japan, which always comes to the front in these discussions. I doubt if there is a Senator in the Chamber, unless he has looked it up, who knows what sized army Japan has. But we know what sized navy Japan has, and we know next morning when there is an increase in the building of that navy. If there is an airship added to the Japanese Navy, we know it. We give concern to it. We are interested in the proposition. If there is a naval base established somewhere in the islands of the Pacific to which Japan is giving attention, we know that, and we give particular attention to it. But if she adds 50,000 or 100,000 or 150,000 men to her army, we pay no attention to it at all. It is not a matter which excites interest. Of course, as an economic proposition it would be greatly to the interest of the United States to have land forces in Europe and Japan and everywhere reduced. But as a matter of our security we give little heed to the size of the armies. But vastly different is it as to the navies.

So I say, Mr. President, without going into that old discussion again, upon which my views have been expressed heretofore, I think that if we should be unable to secure land disarmament it is of the highest moment, for the peace of the world as well as for the better economic condition of the world, that we secure all the cut in the naval program we can possibly secure.

I want to say a word about that before I sit down, Mr. President. I have occupied the floor now longer than I had expected to. We are expending now about $400,000,000 upon the Navy, and since the experiment off the Virginia coast I have been convinced that we are expending at least $240,000,000 of it in a way that will not add any security to the people of the United States. The experiment off the Virginia coast demonstrated that which the best minds in the naval life of England has asserted for the last year and a half, that the battleship is practically obsolete. It has at least demonstrated that the type of battleship which we are now building will be obsolete within the next two or three years at most.

It may be possible to contrive some kind of a battleship, to improve the type in some way, so that it will still have its place in a modern, efficient fighting navy. It may be possible to do so; but that experiment has certainly demonstrated that the type of battleship which we are now building is not that kind of a battleship and that we will have to reconstruct and reorganize our entire method of building battleships.

Mr. President, it is now admitted that instead of building a Navy for the purpose of protecting the United States and giving security to the people of the United States, in view of the experiment off the Virginia coast we must now devote our money and our time and attention to building a Navy which will protect our battleships.

We are building 16 battleships, costing from $40,000,000 to $42,000,000 apiece, and in less than 30 minutes, as Gen. Mitchell told us he would, they sunk the ship which Von Tirpitz said was an unsinkable ship. Yet the airplane development is just beginning. It is just in its youth. Nay, more, it has not accomplished anything compared with what it will accomplish, according to those who are informed, even within the next year. Yet we go forward building these great battleships at this enormous expense, knowing that inside of two years the airplane will have rendered this particular type of battleship absolutely worthless as a defensive proposition.

Mr. President, there are six of those great battleships of the Indiana class, costing from $40,000,000 to $42,000,000 apiece to build, upon which very little work has been done, upon which a very small percentage of building has been accomplished, and if we want to save, would it not be wise to discontinue the building of those six battleships of the Indiana type; not only to slow down, as I understand the order has already been given—not only to slow down, but to abandon and clean up the contracts? If it costs us $10,000,000 to clean up the contract, very well and good; we will have saved $230,000,000 or more by doing that. If it costs us $40,000,000 or $50,000,000, we will have saved $200,000,000 or more by doing so, and in my opinion, unless we are willing to do that, Mr. President, unless we are willing to cut the Army to 100,000 men and reorganize the official organization of the Army, and unless we are willing to take the lesson which we have had given to us off the Virginia coast, and discontinue the building of at least six or eight of these battleships, there is no place where we can cut any expenditures that will amount to anything considerable.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. SMITH. Was the type of vessel sunk off the Virginia coast of the type that the Senator is now asking that we discontinue?

Mr. BORAH. Not exactly the type; but I call the Senator's attention to what I just said, that the great German admiral said that the ship which was sunk off the Virginia coast in about 21 minutes was an unsinkable ship.

Mr. SMITH. So that, for all practical experimental purposes, the ship that was sunk was practically as well protected against the attack of airplanes as the ones we are now building?

Mr. BORAH. I am informed by those who are in charge of the sinking business, the Air Service, that they could sink any ship we have or are building just as easily as they sunk this ship. But when you get into the details and the expert knowledge, I must rely, of course, entirely upon what others say.

Mr. SMITH. The only point I wanted to get at, and about which I wanted to be satisfied, was whether the Navy people, who were carrying on this experiment in conjunction with the airplane people, had this vessel of such a type and so armored that the experiment would give us some satisfactory data as to what would be the effect of airplane attacks upon the ships we are now building, and I thought perhaps the Senator was reliably informed as to the character of the protection which the one that was sunk had in comparison with the protection of those we are now building.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I had the privilege of seeing the bombing of that German battleship, and I heard some of the expert naval officers talking with reference to that ship and the character of its construction before it was sunk, and one of them said that, in his judgment, it was a thousand to one that the ship would not be sunk by the bombing. He was thoroughly acquainted with the character of the construction, with the water-tight compartments, and all that sort of thing; and yet, as the Senator from Idaho has said, within 15 or 20 minutes from the dropping of the first 2,000-pound bomb the ship was sunk.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I beg the pardon of the Senator from Idaho for taking his time, as I do not care to break the continuity of his argument; but unless we could be sure, or unless those of us who are charged with making this appropriation could know, that the character of the ship sunk was of the character of those we are now building, and for all practical purposes as well protected and as well constructed, it seems to me the experiment would not prove anything at all. If they took some obsolete type of ship and carried it out there and bombed it and sunk it, that would not spell anything to those who are charged with providing an efficient Navy.

Mr. BORAH. They all concede it had a powerful effect upon the program for the vessels we are now building, and that those we are now building must be protected in some other way than in the manner in which they have been protected heretofore or they will go the same way.

Mr. McKELLAR. As I understood the Senator, he said that battleship was sunk in 21 minutes.

According to newspaper accounts which I read of the sinking of the ships, one of them, a small vessel, was sunk with comparative ease, while the second, a battleship, took considerably longer. My recollection is the newspaper accounts said it took two days with constant bombardment of the one vessel floating out there, with no ability to protect itself. I do not know about that. I just read the account in the paper. I should like to have information about it from the Senator from Idaho, who is a member of the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator is mistaken about the last proposition. When the aircraft people were given opportunity to deal with it as they desired to deal with it, and to bomb it as they desired to do, they sank it in less than 30 minutes.

Mr. McKELLAR. That was the last ship?

Mr. BORAH. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. The newspaper account which I read was wholly mistaken then, because that account stated they were bombing it for two days before they finally sunk it.

Mr. BORAH. They were throwing some small bombs for a couple of days, but when they threw the big bomb they just threw one and it did the business.

I wish to say another thing which I think it is not at all improper to say. In a conversation with the aircraft men, two of them who were familiar with the situation and knew what was going on and what did go on, said if they had been permitted to do this experimenting under rules and conditions which would obtain under ordinary fighting conditions they would have sunk it even more readily than they did. In other words, the most favorable conditions that could be established for the battleships were established, and the rules under which they were operating were as favorable to the battleships as could be, as they contended to me.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have the same thought about aircraft that the Senator has, that its future is very great, and that it perhaps will put the battleships out of business. But in the interest of fairness it does seem to me that the sinking by bombs from the air of a vessel that is just lying out in an open place where they have an unlimited chance to hit it is very different from attacking a vessel manned by a competent force and able to take care of itself. That is the thought that goes through my mind, in fairness to the other side of the question.

Mr. BORAH. It is not a question of fairness. It is a question of getting accurate information.

Mr. McKELLAR. I mean accurate information.

Mr. BORAH. It is immaterial to me whether the aircraft men or the Navy men won. It is simply a question of getting accurate information.

I have here an editorial from the New York Times based upon this experiment, written within a day or two thereafter, in which it is said:

Of the sinking of the former German dreadnaught Ostfriesland by Army aviators, Gen. Williams, Chief of Ordnance, said: "A bomb was fired to-day that will be heard around the world." He added: "The capital ship now faces a new menace that must be guarded against by every possible study and effort." As the practical way to guard against that menace is to acquire an air force equal or superior to that of any other sea power, it devolves upon Congress to supply the necessary appropriations. The alternative, it should be emphasized, is limitation of armaments by agreement with other nations.

Naval men who held that the heavily armored battleship would withstand assaults from the air and remain afloat have been confounded. It was only a question of the explosive power of the bomb used.

Mind you, they claim that they will be able to throw a bomb with three times the power of the one which they threw upon this particular occasion.

Brig. Gen. William Mitchell's dictum that "the air force will constitute the first line of defense of the country" no longer seems fanciful to open-minded champions of the capital ship. They must admit that the tests off the Virginia Capes support this contention of his:

"A nation unequipped to concentrate her whole air force over the water, if the decision lies there, can just as well leave her navies tied up to the wharves instead of sending them out to certain destruction against a hostile country equipped for this purpose."

If there were war to-morrow with a sea-and-air power possessing swift airplane carriers and a well-trained and numerically strong aviation corps, the United States fleet could not face the risk of putting to sea, and it would be in great danger of being sunk at its moorings. Little comfort can be got out of the view that under service conditions the "Ostfriesland" would probably have escaped destruction. If 2,000-pound bombs dropped near a dreadnaught open her "seams" and make a sinking hulk of her, she will always be in danger night and day in a sea campaign. Antiaircraft guns are not to be depended upon; they register too many misses, and when a squadron of planes concentrate for an attack the battleship will always be at a great disadvantage.

Besides, it must be considered that while the hull may avoid for a time shocks that would send it to the bottom, the crew could not live on its deck during a bombardment. Add gas shells to the ordinary rending explosives, and the chances of the complement of the ship would be desperate, almost nil.

Twenty-one minutes of attack sufficed to sink the once formidable "Ostfriesland," and the seven 2,000-pound bombs that sent her down were dropped, not by sailors in seaplanes but by soldiers who had flown 100 miles from an inland air field to the rendezvous! It was not necessary to burst her deck open. The bombs that executed sentence of death upon her were dropped alongside. Who on board could have survived the disruptive power of those explosives? The achievement was a great triumph for the intelligent, strong-willed, persistent assistant chief of the Army Air Service, a leader who asks no subordinate to take any greater risks than he is willing to face himself.

In a contribution to the May World's Work, Admiral Sims said: "If the claims of the airplane advocates can be realized, it means that any battleship operating within the radius of planes which are in control of the air will be disabled or destroyed."

This was written before the test.

If those claims have not been fully realized, no fair-minded officer will now argue that the acquisition of a formidable naval air force is not more important than the completion of the 3-year capital ship construction program.

Mr. President, without assuming to say that the battleship is absolutely obsolete and can never be made effective by any changes which may be made or any different construction which may be had, it does seem to me conclusively established that to go forward and build these battleships at this time until this testing proposition has been carried to its final conclusion, until we know what is needed, what kind of battleship will stand it, is a mere sheer waste of money. No man in the Senate, as a business man, a member of a corporation, a stockholder, or having anything to say with reference to the expenditure of his money upon that kind of an enterprise, would consent to it for a moment. He would say, "Let us know whether we are putting $42,000,000 into each one of these ships that can be sunk in 21 minutes before the aircraft service has even reached what it contends is its first period of success in these matters."

Mr. President, if we should discontinue the building of the six battleships we could there save an expenditure of at least $240,000,000. I see no other way by which to reduce the expenditures upon the part of Congress.

The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKellar] spoke a few moments ago of the fact that England had ordered, I think, four superdreadnaughts. That is another reason why we should stop.

Mr. NICHOLSON. Mr. President—

Mr. BORAH. In just a moment. If the naval experts are correct, the battleships which we are now building will not be able to contend with the extraordinary ships which England is building; in other words, they will be in a measure obsolete as against those ships. It is just the same program that took place between Germany and England from 1898 to 1914. One country would put out a battleship. The other nation would put out a larger or stronger or greater ship. The ship which had just been put out by the former nation had then become practically obsolete, so they had to build another ship a little superior to the German ship, and then the German Navy would build a ship a little superior to the English ship. They kept on at that rate from 1898 to 1914, one year rendering the ships of the previous year practically obsolete against the improvements.

I now yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. NICHOLSON. Under the Senator's reasoning would it ever be possible to land an army on foreign soil, provided that the Nation spent sufficient money to have airplanes capable of carrying the bombs of which the Senator speaks?

Mr. BORAH. The Senator has suggested a very important proposition. An admiral stated to me a few days ago that not only the experiment off the Virginia coast demonstrated that the battleship as it is now being built is practically obsolete but it demonstrated further that with sufficient airplane and submarine protection this country was perfectly safe from attack from any other country.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McNary in the chair). Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. BORAH. Certainly.

Mr. JONES of Washington. This shows, too, that while possibly the airplane would not do vital damage to a battleship by striking it on the deck, yet it would absolutely destroy transports carrying troops.

Mr. BORAH. Yes. Of course, Mr. President, it might be inferred from something I have said that I would like to see our naval building stop entirely, regardless of what other nations do. I do not take that position. I do not wish that to be understood. What I say is that we are putting this vast amount of money into these ships without getting any corresponding security and without getting any safety such as we are entitled to have for that amount of money. We had infinitely better take $40,000,000 out of these battleship expenditures and put it into airplanes and submarines if we want real security and real safety. I do not think in the building of battleships we are giving our country any security or any safety at all, comparatively speaking.

Mr. McKellar. Mr. President—

Mr. BORAH. I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKellar. The Senator was interrupted a while ago and did not finish answering my question that he was good enough to say he was going to answer. My question was whether he thought the passage of a law by the English House of Commons, after they had agreed to take part in a disarmament parley in the fall, providing for the construction of four additional battleships, augurs well for any tangible result from the disarmament conference that we are to have and which I think is most desirable, of course.

Mr. BORAH. I think I can see England's viewpoint. We are building 16 battleships. England had not laid a post-Jutland battleship since the war. She is an island nation. It is not extraordinary, in view of our immense building program, that England should see fit to go ahead and put out additional ships. I have no doubt that is the viewpoint from which she argued.

I do think, however, that the fact the premier of England, the next day after he announced that he was gratified to receive the invitation from the President of the United States, also announced that they would go ahead nevertheless with their building program, was somewhat discouraging. I thought it was equally discouraging when our Secretary of the Navy the next day thereafter announced that we would go ahead completing our program. I did not see any necessity of advertising to each other that notwithstanding the conference we proposed to be armed to the teeth when the conference took place. I look upon it rather as a discouraging attitude of mind than anything else.

Nevertheless, we have this hope, that if the public opinion of the world, especially the public opinion of the three great nations primarily interested—Great Britain, the United States, and Japan—continues to be as strong and well directed toward the proposition of disarmament as it is, we may nevertheless achieve a great deal. I have never supposed, I will say to the Senator from Tennessee, that we would ever achieve disarmament through the action of the diplomats or through the emissaries who may meet from the different nations of the world if they were left alone.

But if we may continue to have a thoroughly aroused, well sustained, and well directed public opinion of the world upon this question I think we may achieve a great deal.

Mr. McKellar. Mr. President, I join with the Senator from Idaho in that hope. I, like him, think that it is very discouraging that plans for building larger navies should proceed, and especially that they should be entered into after the agreement for a disarmament conference has been virtually entered into. I shall hope that public opinion in our Nation and in Great Britain, as well as in Japan, will bring about some tangible results.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, just a word, and I shall conclude. The point which I desire to stress is that we, as a party, simply can not afford to permit an increase in taxes this year.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President, before the Senator from Idaho concludes I wish to ask him another question, not in a controversial sense. I heartily agree with the Senator from Idaho that we should push a reduction of naval armament, whether we secure other reductions or not, in the hope that disarmament may come. My question was addressed to the idea that the good result, the security of the Nation, would only come after we had disarmament both as to land and naval forces.

I see in the newspapers that the advocates of the dreadnaught claim that the airship in actual warfare inflicted no serious injury upon transports and battleships, and that its failure to inflict such injury is so recently demonstrated that it argues that under war conditions they would be impotent to inflict injury. I do not concur in that opinion, but I should like to hear the Senator's idea about it, because he is better advised than is almost anybody else on the subject.

Mr. BORAH. No; I am not on that particular phase of it. I do not want again to wander too far away from my subject, because I see my friend from South Dakota [Mr. Sterling] looking very wistfully over this way, and, of course, the Senator from Kentucky is equally anxious with the Senator from South Dakota to have the consideration of the liquor bill proceed.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, if the Senator from Idaho will pardon me, I do not think the Senator ought to permit, by declining to advert to the suggestion of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY], the inference to be drawn from the statement that the tests and experiments to which the Senator from Kentucky referred demonstrated that the airplane and the torpedo were not powerful foes of the battleship. I think those tests demonstrated the vulnerability of the battleship, and demonstrated that, while it is not obsolete, as the principal unit of the fleet its strength and influence have been greatly impaired.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President, if the Senator from Idaho will pardon me—

Mr. BORAH. I can not resist.

Mr. STANLEY. I hope the Senator from Idaho will understand that I am in complete and ardent harmony with him as to the vital importance of the matter to which he calls the attention of the Senate and the country. The nations of the world, as the Senator from Idaho has so much better said than could I, are in an agony of oppression and want. The necessities of the people and the demands of the Governments have ground the taxpayers to the bone. I know of no matter, not even the pending bill which is in the hands of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING], that is so vitally important to the people now as is the opportunity suggested by the Senator from Idaho to secure a reduction in armaments and a material alleviation of the burdens of the people, while at the same time we are marching toward that goal to which all Christian and humanitarian agencies look with infinite longing, toward the days when armaments will not be necessary and international disputes may be settled in some other way than by the system of international destruction.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the party which is now in power can not afford from any standpoint to permit any opportunity to go by to reduce expenses to the point where at least we shall not have to increase taxes; indeed, it will be unfortunate if taxes must be maintained even at the present rate. I hope, therefore, when the resolution which I have offered goes to the committee we may have an immediate consideration of it and an immediate report on it. It ought not to require long to consider the resolution. The whole matter was discussed a few weeks ago in this Chamber; every Senator's opinion is made up; and if the resolution could be reported and passed and the Army curtailed as it proposes, it would be a vast saving in that particular.

Then, if the Naval Committee would report out the bill which has been introduced by the able Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] to readjust that situation, we should save an expenditure in that direction of some $240,000,000, and still have a better Navy than we shall have by the expenditure of that sum. If there is any other way by which we can save, I do not know of it. We may cut out some expense here and there in a department or we may dismiss a few employees and curtail here and there in a small way, but we can not cut down expenses in such manner as the Secretary of the Treasury says we must in order to hold taxes even to the present status unless we do it upon these two lines.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair desires to inquire of the Senator from Idaho if he wishes his resolution to be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. BORAH. I do.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be so referred.

AMENDMENT OF NATIONAL PROHIBITION ACT.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill H. R. 7294, an act supplemental to the national prohibition act.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I offer an amendment to the pending bill, which I ask may be printed and lie upon the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be so ordered.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I desire at this time to submit a request for a unanimous-consent agreement to vote on the bill (H. R. 7294) supplemental to the national prohibition act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Dakota prefers a request for unanimous consent, which will be read.

The Assistant Secretary read as follows:

It is agreed by unanimous consent that at not later than 5 o'clock p. m. on the calendar day of August 8, 1921, the Senate will proceed to vote, without further debate, upon any amendment that may be pending, any amendment that may be offered, and upon the bill (H. R. 7294), an act supplemental to the national prohibition act, through the regular parliamentary stages to its final disposition; and that after the hour of 4 o'clock p. m. on said day no Senator shall speak more than once or longer than five minutes upon the bill, or more than once or longer than five minutes upon any amendment offered thereto.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. I object, Mr. President.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, do I understand that the Senator from Georgia objects?

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. I object. I thought I secured the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair did not hear the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. STERLING. Does the Senator from Georgia object to the unanimous-consent agreement?

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. He does.

Mr. STERLING. Is it because of the date fixed for the vote?

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. I do not feel that the Senator from South Dakota has any right to ask for an explanation of the Senator from Georgia. The Senator from Georgia desires to address the Senate.

Mr. STERLING. I simply thought if the objection was because of the date—

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. It does not at all matter to the Senator from Georgia what the Senator from South Dakota thinks.

Mr. STERLING. Well, it is of some importance as to what the Senator from Georgia thinks.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. The Senator from Georgia merely wants to address the Senate. Am I recognized, Mr. President?

Mr. STERLING. I thought if the date proposed was too early for the Senator from Georgia we might fix some other date.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. I thought I had secured the recognition of the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognized the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Very well.

Mr. STERLING. I see there is objection to the request for unanimous consent as submitted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection has been made.

Mr. STERLING. I am willing to make the date Tuesday, August 9, at 5 o'clock, and ask that the proposed unanimous-consent agreement be submitted in that form.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. I object to that, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

Mr. KENYON. Let us vote.

Mr. STERLING. I ask that the pending amendment may be stated.

THE FEDERAL RESERVE SYSTEM.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President, it seems to me that the Government is not dealing honestly with the people, and that there are too many things taken for granted here in the Senate. There are too many assumptions which have no basis of fact, and, without intending in the least degree to be disrespectful to any Senator or to wound his feelings, I wish to call attention to one or two of those unwarranted assumptions.

Throughout this debate touching the general condition of the country, it has been assumed that the South makes more cotton than the American people can consume. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK], who on yesterday addressed the Senate, said that the South produced twice as much cotton as the American people could consume. Mr. President, a greater mistake was never made—honestly, of course—and a greater mistake could not be made. This country can never produce too much wheat or too much cotton, so long as there is a single person who has not enough to eat or enough to wear. Because of the fact that the Norris bill, as amended by the McNary substitute, proposed a decentralization of money and a better distribution of money, in order that more people may be enabled to buy, I supported it; but it does not, in my judgment, meet the requirements of our people.

The largest crop of cotton that we ever raised in the South was 16,000,000 bales. The crop which is now said to be too large is 13,000,000 bales. The census reports show that there are more than 20,000,000 families in the American household. Let any Senator reflect for a moment, and he will see that the $50 which a bale of cotton will bring to-day will hardly gain the planter a foothold at the counter in a dry-goods store. Let him put the price up to $100 per bale, and the same thing will be true. Let him put the cotton at 40 cents a pound, and let the bale bring $200, and I will ask any Senator to reflect whether or not the family, composed of five persons on the average, can buy a sufficiency of clothing for the year, a sufficiency of bed-clothing for the year, a sufficiency of thread and binding twine for the year, a sufficiency of plowlines and well ropes for the year, a sufficiency of dress goods that range all the way from the balbriggan to the mercerized goods that you can not tell from silk unless you are an expert.

Mr. President, there is no sadder thing to be seen on the American continent to-day than a child in sight of a wheat field unable to have every day a sufficiency of his daily bread, no matter how often he repeats the Lord's prayer; no sadder sight than to see a ragged white man, a ragged white woman, ragged white girls or boys, or, as for that matter, ragged colored people, striving virtually from one end of the year to the other, to make cotton, and at the end of the year not having a sufficiency for their own needs—I do not say their own comforts. They do not have comforts. Go into their hovels as you go when they are sick; go there when you are on your visits, and you will find that they do not have the comforts of life, and very frequently not the necessities of life. There are children in the cotton belt to-day who are not being educated to the extent of the rudiments of an English education, because our poorest people are the proudest people on earth, and they will not send their children to school unless they can clothe them as other children are clothed. Even the Sunday schools are not fully attended, for the same reason.

It seems to me that something must be radically wrong when those who produce what is called twice the amount of cotton that the people can consume are not themselves sufficiently clad. Let Senators think of it. From the collar around your neck, if it is not linen, to the hosiery on your feet, the dress goods of the boys and the girls, of the women and the men, are chiefly composed of cotton; and you can go out over the cotton belt and you will find on the highways and in the fields and in the homes of these people an insufficiency of necessary clothing.

Work? Why, to make a cotton crop, Mr. President, you have virtually to toil from one end of the year to the other. Before the winter snows are off your western plains our people are putting the plows in the ground, preparing the soil for the crop. During the hottest days of the summer they are laying it by. During all of the autumn days and the early fall, sometimes until the Christmas holidays, they are picking that cotton; and yet in the sight of the cotton factories of South Carolina and of Georgia you will find school girls and boys, or boys and girls who ought to be in school, who are so insufficiently clad that they attract your attention and excite your pity. Therefore there is not too much cotton produced.

The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] spoke of German conditions. I was greatly interested in what he said about them. The Senator from Nebraska said that you could go to any bank in Germany and borrow, and I asked him what, and he said "money." I asked him if he meant paper money, and he said "yes, paper money." "Based upon what?" "Based upon the credit of the Government." "Does it answer every purpose?" He said it does. We are erecting to-day a tariff wall, called the Fordney bill, which will act as an embargo upon German products; and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] said that these German products simply proved that the rottenness of a currency was the better it could rival the products of other countries.

Mr. President, a currency that produces products to such an extent as to rival the products of this country, with our gold reserve rapidly approaching $3,000,000,000, is not a rotten currency. A currency which produces a sufficiency of food for every German—and nobody says that it does not—can not be classed as rotten. A currency which not only clothes Germany and fills her warehouses with manufactured products but threatens us to such an extent that we virtually put an embargo upon German products can not be a rotten currency.

If it were not so late I would ask Senators to pay some attention to chapter 13 of James G. Blaine's Twenty Years of Congress, volume 2. It can not be claimed that Mr. Blaine was a demagogue, nor a radical, nor a socialist, nor a communist, nor a bolshevik. He does not come under the head of any of those people that we have been putting in jail or sending out of the country without process of law. What is the law to us? We have long since pulled up the anchor and gone away from the Constitution. It is almost a joke in this Chamber when anybody mentions the Constitution. Talk about arresting a man without a warrant! Why, the stern champion of this antidoctor law, this legislator [Senator STERLING], this lawyer who wants to tell a doctor how to practice medicine, what does he care about the Constitution? What is the Constitution when it comes to a question between him and beer? Why, you do not need any warrant to arrest anybody.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McNARY in the chair). Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. I do.

Mr. STERLING. Let me say to the Senator from Georgia that I simply care enough about the Constitution to enact a law for the enforcement of the provisions of the Constitution.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. The Senator no doubt is honestly of the opinion that he is trying to do that, but his law does not follow the constitutional amendment. The constitutional amendment says, as plainly as any law could say, that these things shall not be used for beverage purposes. The Senator goes out of his usual route to dictate to a doctor what the doctor shall prescribe to his patients—that by way of incident—and the law enforcers in his State and in mine pay no attention to constitutional requirements about the issuance of a warrant to search the person, to search the baggage, to search the stateroom on a Pullman car, to search the berth of a Pullman, or to search a private house. If any warrant is obtained at all, it is obtained afterwards, and possibly after somebody has been shot and killed, very often after the lady of the household has had her every feeling outraged by the ransacking of her bureau drawers and the closets which contain her clothing; and if between the mattresses the officer of the law can find a pint of beer or a pint of wine or a pint of whisky, he goes out then and gets his warrant. Kill your man first and explain why afterwards!

As I was saying, Mr. President, Mr. Blaine opens chapter 13 of his book with this statement—he is referring to December, 1865.

We all know that the war between the States had but recently ended. He said:

The financial experience of the Government of the United States in the years following the war is without precedent among nations.

That statement is erroneous. Just exactly the experience which this country went through after the Civil War is the experience which the bankers, the money changers, have put every modern nation through after every war; and the ruin wrought by the contraction of the currency, the ruin of homes and of business, the beggaring of people who had been in comfortable circumstances, the reduction of the wage earner to the condition of a tramp, walking the roads begging for work, willing to work and finding no work, has been repeated after every modern war; and the bankers are the real vultures that feed upon the dead who fall upon the battle line. Very often, Mr. President, it is the banker who precipitates the war, either to make an investment or to save one.

Then Mr. Blaine takes up the gradual progress of the contraction of the currency, and he writes paragraph after paragraph, giving the arguments on both sides of the fearful panics, the failures, the collapse in values, which followed upon the contraction of the currency. It is an instructive chapter. I take the liberty to suggest to Senators that at their leisure they get the book from the library. It fits the present conditions like a glove, with this exception: Secretary McCulloch and those who were in charge of the Treasury at that time gave the people two or three years' notice that they would resume specie payments, that the paper currency would be called in. The storm signals flew. The beacon lights blazed. Every vessel, every ship out at sea, had the opportunity to reef sails and run into the harbor.

After this war there was a colossal contraction of the currency—debated where, decided upon where? In the open Senate of the United States, as Mr. Blaine speaks of in his book? Not so. In the House of Representatives, with all the American people listening to the debates? Not so. This contraction of the currency was debated behind closed doors and in secret by the Federal Reserve Board, and the storm came upon the country when the country had not been prepared for it.

A Senator speaking here yesterday used a contemptuous phrase about "printing-press money." Has that phrase been used about the issuance of bonds? Twenty-five thousand million dollars of bonds have been issued, printing-press paper, engraved here in Washington City, just as the Federal reserve bank notes were.

What is the difference between the printing press in the one sense and in the other? Your printing-press bond bears interest. Your printing-press money bears none. Which is the better for a country, to have a sufficiency of printing-press money bearing no interest, or printing-press bonds bearing interest? To ask the question is to answer it.

The Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], speaking of our condition and of what we should do to improve it, spoke of curtailing the expenses of the Army and the Navy. I agree with him about that. But that would not be a drop in the bucket. Has it never occurred to Senators who discuss these questions that the slump in values was coincident with the retirement of the currency? When you see two correlated things happening at the same time, do you not immediately reason that the one is connected with the other? When you see a motionless steamship begin to emit smoke from her stack, you hear the throb of her engines, and she begins to "walk the waters like a thing of life," do you not connect the steam with the motion of the vessel?

Cotton was selling at 40 cents a pound. What made it drop? The retirement of the money. Who retired the money? The Federal Reserve Board. What right did they have to retire it? They had none, or they should not have had it. What notice did they give the country? None. On whom did they serve the notice, "Call in your investments; curtail your expenses; get ready for a storm"? On nobody. It fell upon the country as the avalanche falls upon the unsuspecting tourist of the Alps.

In chapter 13 of Mr. Blaine's second volume he describes what happened, and he shows there that his sympathy was with the contractionists, but as an impartial historian he gives both sides. Very much to his honor, being a partisan by nature—and a very brilliant, effective partisan—when he came to write his book the lances of the setting sun rested upon his head, and the shadows of evening were creeping around his feet, and he was impartial. Passions had died away, just as they had died away when he made that beautiful commemorative address after the death of President Garfield—in my judgment one of the most beautiful orations that the English language contains.

But had Mr. Blaine studied the history, and the recent history, of other nations as carefully as he had studied that of his own country, he would have known that what was happening after the Civil War, and down to the Black Friday of 1873, was but the old lesson repeating itself.

Consult Alison's History of Europe, consult Browning's Modern Times, books easily accessible to anyone who cares to know, and you will discover that after the wars were over the paper money which paid the soldier for his service, which fed him on the march and in the camp, which clothed him with his uniform, which supplied him with a tent, which gave him his gun and his ammunition, was destroyed. Why? Because the man who had the gold wanted his own price for it; and that is what is happening now; the same thing happened in France, the same thing happened in Germany. I do not wish to indulge in anything that looks like pedantry, but I assure Senators that what happened to us at the close of this war, as the result of the contraction policy, has been the aftermath of every modern war.

These men of the Federal Reserve Board say, "We will have peace to-morrow; everything will be settled to-morrow." Yes; it will. I stood on the seacoast in Florida once and I witnessed a great equinoctial storm blowing across the Atlantic to the Gulf. I saw the waves rising higher and higher, until in the distance they looked like a range of mountains, and one trembled, for fear the next rise would take them over the ground upon which one's feet were planted. There were breakers above where I stood and breakers below. I could see those waves running to the rocks, over the rocks, and toward the inlet, with the foam streaming behind them, like so many of Neptune's horses at full speed, bent upon furious destruction, and a grander sight, a sublimer sight, a more terrible sight, I never saw.

But during the night the storm lulled, the wind ceased to blow, breezes came from the land side, and the next morning when I went out to the ocean there was an unrippled surface, amber hued by the rising sun.

The waves were lipping the beach as softly and as innocently as a child would move its rosy lips when asking its mother for a kiss. But all up and down the coast, as far as the eye could reach, there were wrecks, vessels with everything gone except the mast that stood above the waters, and when you saw apparently struggling monsters of the deep raging a few hundred yards from the shore, it did not need a very lively imagination to tell you that a school of sharks were conveying some human victim out to the greater depths beyond.

Yes; we will have peace, but where will be the men and the women who have been ruined by the storm that has been brought upon us by the Federal Reserve Board? Who will put back upon the ocean of business the vessels that have been wrecked? Who will call back to life the men and the women who lost everything they had, including their hopes, and who then took their own lives? Not until He who made us all shall cause the final trump to sound will anybody know just what has been the wreckage made by the contraction of our currency, now reaching something like two thousands of millions of dollars.

The whole country had adjusted itself to war expansion. Enterprise was animated. Credit was extended to almost everyone who had a good name and apparently good security. Business was never better. But all at once, when this life blood was let out of the arteries of commerce, what happened? It was the same thing that would happen to your physical body if a lancet should open your arteries. It weakened, it languished, it fell, and it is still prostrate; and this man, Gov. W. P. G. Harding, now has the effrontery to say that times are good. Good for him, no doubt. It is one of the sad, deplorable things about human nature that if you or I be well placed in position and drawing a good salary, having no need to fear for the bread of to-morrow, having no terror lest the wolf approach the door, we are inclined to forget those who are not so fortunately placed. The men in high places, drawing large salaries, are the very last men who ever mix with the people or who ever know anything about their real condition. Usually they are surrounded by a camarilla of designing men, a human palisade, a human fence, which can not be penetrated by the ordinary outsider, and even when some with the privilege of going inside does get in, he can not talk without some one hearing what he says to the big man to whom he wishes to talk.

It is the misfortune of one in power—for instance, the President of the United States—that he never really comes in contact with the people. He sees those whom his private secretary wants him to see, and the private secretary wants him to see whom somebody else wants him to see. The very men whom he ought to see to become acquainted with real conditions he never sees.

Napoleon used to say to his secretary on going to bed, "If good news comes during the night, let me alone, do not waken me. Good news can wait until the morning. But, if bad news comes, wake me at once, because it must be attended to." I would to God that somebody had the power to waken our President to the bad news that comes to us from all parts of the country.

As I said here some time ago, Great Britain has increased her money four and one half times since the war, France about seven times, Germany nearly forty times; and the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] stated in his speech yesterday that anybody in Germany could get, at any bank, money that was good in Germany. What does the German care about any other sort of money, then? If we could get money here in this Republic that is good in every State and Territory of our possessions, what would we care about English pounds, shillings, and pence or German money or French money or Italian money? Money is just as good as the Government that issues it.

I mentioned here the other day to a very distinguished Senator, who I am sure believes that he thoroughly understands the money question, that we had out $25,000,000,000 of bonds, and he said they were good because they were backed by gold. Not a single one of those bonds is backed by gold. As the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHBURST] has very well suggested, there is not that much gold in the world. There never was and there never may be. There was a time, after gold was discovered in California, when the European bankers thought there would be too much coin, and so they demonetized gold; at least the Latin Union did. They went on a silver basis. The Bank of England that was spoken of by the Senator from Nebraska suspended specie payment in 1797, and for 21 years England financed her wars against Napoleon Bonaparte with paper money.

During all that time there were harvests to feed the English, there was clothing to clothe the English, there was no housing problem in England, and it was not until the contractionists destroyed the paper money and went back to gold that they had trouble. Then came the riots, and the breaking of labor-saving machines, which was referred to so touchingly here the other day by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS]. The breaking of machinery became an epidemic in England, because the working people got it into their heads that the machine which could do the work of 10 men or 100 men deprived them of labor.

I saw a letter which a member of the Federal Reserve Board wrote to a Member of Congress from my State—a very insolent letter, a dictatorial letter, a threatening letter—admonishing him that if he did not change his tone he would be opposed for reelection next year. Well, if we all live and nothing happens, we will all be back in Georgia next year and we will see about that. But he said in this letter: "Your banks in Georgia are charging usury." He probably meant the State banks, which on short loans frequently charge 12 per cent. I have paid 12 per cent myself for all the money I borrowed in working myself up in the world, and was glad to get it at that price. It was worth that much to me. Whether that be too much or too little, let us see what the Federal reserve bank has been charging and getting.

In Boston they made 120 per cent clear profit. In New York they made 203 per cent, in Philadelphia 121 per cent, in Cleveland 110 per cent, in Richmond 118 per cent. In Atlanta they made 151 per cent, and they did not lend it to Georgians, either. They sent it to Chicago and loaned it to Ogden Armour, and he used it in his business and charged us three or four prices for his canned goods and his meats, and so forth. In Chicago they made 178 per cent, in St. Louis 121 per cent, in Minneapolis 112 per cent, and so on.

Senators, look back through the vista of time and see Roman senators rising in their places to assassinate in the senate chamber Julius Caesar. To defend himself he had nothing in his hand but the little steel instrument with which they wrote in those days—the stylus. He fought them until he saw his bastard son among the assassins, and then he said, "And you also, Brutus?" He covered his face with his mantle and sank into death at the base of the statue of Pompey, which was only unearthed in the Roman forum a few years ago. One can see that very statue now, at whose feet Caesar fell with the wounds of Cassius and Casca and of Brutus that took his life.

Why did they kill him? The noble Brutus, Mr. President, was one of the usurers who were lending money in the Roman provinces at 48 per cent. Caesar had passed a law forbidding it; making it a crime thereafter to charge more, I believe, than about 12 per cent—at any rate, reducing it to something reasonable. The usurers who had been bleeding, not Rome itself, but the conquered provinces of Rome, killed Caesar for doing that. Our noble Brutuses are not content with 48 per cent. In Kansas City they wanted 128 per cent, and got it; in Dallas, they wanted 83 per cent, and got it.

Mr. ASHURST. What was it at San Francisco?

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. At San Francisco they wanted 150 per cent. Should any Caesar, if there should be one, threaten to check those men and shear them of their power, he would be killed if they could kill him. It is charged that the governor, W. P. G. Harding, tried to beat up John Skelton Williams, right there in the committee room, because John Skelton Williams was telling the truth on them. They admitted that they had loaned $126,000,000 to one bank in New York. Whose bank? Morgan's; no doubt. They admitted that they had loaned themselves $18,000,000. That was a beautiful admission—was it not—showing the truth of the statement made by Sergeant S. Prentiss, of Mississippi, when speaking of a collector of the customs, he said:

In vain will you seek for the eunuchs who have the power to guard the treasures of your harems without the wish to enjoy them.

These eunuchs, Gov. Harding and company, have the power to guard, and it is their desire to enjoy; and they do both.

If it were not so late, I should really like to have some fun with my friend the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK], whose peculiarity is that as soon as you get after him with two or three questions and push him up into a corner where he can hardly draw his breath, he cuts everything off by saying you are diverting him from his line of thought. His line of thought! When the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] got after him about what he would vote for in the Norris bill, he complained that the Senator from Wisconsin was diverting him from his line of thought; when I got after him with a few questions, which were just as simple as they could be, he soon discovered that he was going up into the corner, and he shut me off by saying I was diverting him from his line of thought. What was his line of thought? It was that we should establish a great international bank—as if we did not have four or five of them already. The house of Morgan has a chain of international banks. Kuhn, Loeb & Co. have a chain of international banks; the Warburgs have a chain of international banks; the Rothschilds have a chain of international banks. It is well known, I think, that the Belmonts of New York are their American branch bank. However, the Senator from Nebraska wanted to take $800,000,000 in gold out of our Treasury and put it into an international bank. He never realized that he would be making a present of that much money to Mr. Morgan; that it would be giving him the use of all the idle gold in our Treasury.

Talk about reducing the Army! Why, yes; reduce it. I, myself, think an Army of 25,000 men would do. Reduce the Navy! Why, of course, I think, possibly, two or three of our admirals ought to have ships in which to sail around, and there ought to be enough of them left to escort the President when he takes a vacation to Plymouth Rock, or elsewhere. Possibly he will be taking a trip down to Jamestown before we know it. It will require a half dozen battleships to take him down to Jamestown and back.

I say I would be willing to reduce the Army to the vanishing point, leaving, of course, Gen. Pershing on deck. It would never in the world do to get rid of the General Staff. The country is full of soldiers now who have had experience.

All you have got to do is to sound the bugle, and tell them what you are fighting about. Nobody has ever been able to tell them what they fought about in the last war. That is a question that agonizes everybody right now—to tell the people what they fought about. They do not know; they realize it cost them a lot of money; and we are bringing dead soldiers back every day; but whenever the doctrinaires state what the war was about, the doctrinaires differ.

When President Wilson said we went to war for one thing, Senator Warren Harding said we did not do it on that account; that Wilson's talk was all balderdash. Now that President Wilson is down and out and Senator Harding is President, he is using exactly the same language that President Wilson used; but, of course, it is not balderdash. It makes a whole lot of difference as to who uses the language, and when, and where. I say that you can cut your Army and you can cut your Navy, but they are drops in the bucket. You must restore to circulation the money that was taken out of circulation. The taking of money from circulation weakened the whole business world. If you want to restore its strength, put the money back in circulation. The first thing to do, however, to accomplish that is to remove the present Federal Reserve Board, for which purpose I have introduced a resolution. Of course, it has no chance of passing here. This is a Republican Senate, a very reactionary Senate. It does not hear from the people; it does not care for the people. The people are honored in having a Republican majority here; they ought to be satisfied with that and not question the way they vote. If they want to give $25,000,000 to open the way for the Standard Oil Co. to get into Colombia, that is all right; if they want to give the railroads $500,000,000, that is all right; give it to them. Why not turn the whole Treasury over to them? They need it; they can use it to advantage; and they can prove by propaganda that it would benefit the whole country if we would let them have all the money that is in the Treasury.

We are heaping up gold; we are becoming a great national Midas. Here at the central Government everything we touch turns to gold. But Midas could not eat his gold, and he could not drink it, and he found himself starving to death in the midst of his gold. Our people throughout this Union are clamoring for money to be restored to circulation, so that the black man who can put up a horse or a mule or a cow may borrow money, and the white man who can offer collateral may borrow money. To-day our banks are choked with last year's paper. They are marking time and paying expenses while they are doing so.

AMENDMENT OF NATIONAL PROHIBITION ACT.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7294), an act supplemental to the national prohibition act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will continue the reading of the bill.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on the Judiciary was on page 2, lines 14 and 15, to strike out the words "limit the quantity of liquor unfit for beverage purposes that may be prescribed, sold, or furnished on a prescription," and insert "be construed to limit the sale of any article the manufacture of which is authorized under section 4, Title II, of the national prohibition act."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Mr. President, I do not care to continue the speech which I began the other day on this afternoon; but while this measure is pending I desire to discuss briefly one of the features of the facts which I discussed the other day.

A portion of my remarks on July 27 had reference to the lobby maintained here by the Anti-Saloon League. Within 10 minutes after I had concluded my speech one of the Senators handed me on the floor this slip of paper, and I was informed that it was circulated in the galleries while I was speaking. There is nothing offensive in it, but I want to read it to the Senate. I merely want to emphasize the fact that in the Senate of the United States lobbyists are busy while Senators are discussing questions which involve even the constitutionality of legislation.

It is not so much, as I said before, what is contained in this slip, but I call upon my friends who advocate this measure to consider the significance of this incident, and I will call the attention of Senators to the fact that it has reference directly to that which I discussed just a few moments before, the inference being that this was typewritten at some place very close to the place where we are talking.

Here I shall read this propaganda, or whatever it is. It begins with a quotation:

"Senator BROUSSARD's attack upon the prohibition department because it does not issue the regulations on beer is strangely inconsistent, in view of the fact that the regulations relating to wholesale liquor dealers have not been issued, even though the opinion relating to them was rendered long before the beer opinion," said Wayne B. Wheeler, general counsel of the Anti-Saloon League of America. "The dregs were interested in having those regulations issued promptly, and they have been delayed far longer than the beer regulations. As a matter of fact, both regulations have been a matter of controversy, and that explains largely the delay in their issuance."

I care nothing about this any more than any other Senator, whether he favors or opposes the bill; but I think it is my duty, since it was presented to me immediately after the closing of my remarks, to submit this matter to the Senate to be considered in such light as they, viewing the statutes upon the books and their own ideas, may attach to it.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President—

Mr. BROUSSARD. I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. MOSES. In connection with what the Senator from Louisiana has just said, I am reminded of another letter which I received from the well-informed Federal Trade Information Service, under date of July 28, in which the writer says:

In view of the interest you are displaying in the administrative activities of the Bureau of Internal Revenue relating to the liquor traffic, we believe you will be glad to see the statement printed at page 170 of the attached publication concerning a forthcoming Treasury decision on this subject. We believe this news has been published exclusively in the Federal Trade Information Service. We had in our possession the full text of the draft of the Treasury decision, but pressure on our space permitted the presentation of a summary merely.

On turning to page 170, as suggested by the letter, I find a summary of the regulations for wholesale druggists, which the slip which the Senator from Louisiana has just read says have not been issued; and I wonder again how it is that the Federal Trade Information Service is able to get the full text of regulations drawn by the Bureau of Internal Revenue while the Senate does not have them and while the country does not have them, and I ask unanimous consent that this publication may be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. MOSES. I do not happen to have the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. BROUSSARD. I do.

Mr. WILLIS. Reserving the right to object, does the Senator give it as his opinion that these are true and exact copies of any regulations that have been issued by the department?

Mr. MOSES. I express no opinion as to the truth or the exactitude of these regulations. I merely read the letter of this person, who is readily get-at-able in Washington, and from whom one can ascertain how he managed to get them, if he got them improperly or if they are fraudulent in any sense. The Senator will recall that I have pending here a resolution asking the Treasury Department to send us the accurate text, and the friends of this measure have objected to our having that information. What is it they are afraid of? If the Senator from Ohio thinks that these regulations which I present here, and which the editor of this paper—and I assume he is a reputable person—says are authentic, are in fact not authentic, why do the friends of this measure object to our having the information which my resolution asks for? What are you afraid of?

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, if the Senator from New Hampshire would give it as his opinion that these are exact copies of regulations that have been issued it would be quite a different thing. He does not so state. The fact of the matter is that no regulations have been issued and there is no good reason why the RECORD should be lumbered up with some statements purporting to be regulations, and I therefore object.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, if I may have the floor again from the Senator from Louisiana, I will say that these do not purport to be the full and exact text of the regulations. If the Senator from Ohio followed the text of the letter which I read, he will remember that they purported to be a summary, and I take the liberty of reading them, inasmuch as they are very brief.

Mr. BROUSSARD. May I ask the Senator to wait until I am through?

Mr. MOSES. Oh, yes, indeed; I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. BROUSSARD. I want to follow this matter up, and I think in my further remarks I shall answer the Senator from Ohio.

I call the Senate's attention to the fact that Mr. Wheeler complains here that we have made no complaint as to the tardiness of the issuance of regulations with reference to liquors other than beer, and that is contained in this circular which was sent through the galleries here while I was speaking; but since receiving this I have received the letter which I have in my hand from the prohibition commissioner, which contains information which I would gladly have given to the Senate had I had it in my possession at the time when I addressed the Senate on July 27. I happened to receive this this morning; and I want to answer those of the Senators who are advocating the bill, if they indorse the comments of Mr. Wheeler, by replying that the prohibition commissioner is giving to people engaged in legitimate business in this country the same reasons for not issuing permits under the national prohibition law which he gives for refusing to issue permits to doctors to prescribe beer.

I have here a letter which was written to Representative DUPRE, of Louisiana. It has reference to an application made by the old-established firm of I. L. Lyons & Co., who have conducted for many, many years the largest wholesale drug business in the South; a house that has been established possibly 75 years; people who are reliable and responsible; people who have been recognized I think by the National Association of Druggists and Pharmacists by honoring one of their members with election as president at one time; people who stand among the foremost of our progressive citizens. This firm had an application pending before the prohibition commissioner, who has delayed action upon this application, and when they are pressed the answer comes to Mr. DUPRE, Member of Congress from the second district of Louisiana, as follows:

AUGUST 3, 1921.

HON. H. GARLAND DUPRE,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. DUPRE: I am in receipt of your communication dated July 30, 1921, inclosing a copy of letter addressed to this office by I. L. Lyons & Co., wholesale druggists and importers, New Orleans, La. In reply to your inquiry regarding the status of this company's application for permit to manufacture certain special preparations, I have the honor to inform you that the application as executed by the above-mentioned company was forwarded to this office by the Federal prohibition director for the State of Louisiana without his recommendation for approval or disapproval, and in his letter transmitting same he calls attention to the fact that this company desires to import intoxicating liquors for subsequent resale for medicinal purposes. All applications of this character are at this time being held in abeyance awaiting the disposition of the bill now pending before Congress to prohibit further importation of liquors.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. BROUSSARD. Certainly.

Mr. NELSON. Does not the Senator think it is fairer to the brewers and the wholesale liquor dealers that the regulations be held in abeyance? Suppose rules are issued and Congress passes this bill; what would the rules amount to? They would simply be a deception and would mislead the brewers and would get them started in a practice in which they would have to take a back track. So it is for the protection of the brewers and the wine men, as much as for anybody else, that these imagined rules are held back until we pass this legislation.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Mr. President—

Mr. NELSON. And I want to give the Senator another sentiment, if he will allow me—

Mr. BROUSSARD. I will.
Mr. NELSON:

There's a spirit above and a spirit below,
A spirit of joy and a spirit of woe;
The spirit above is the spirit divine,
The spirit below is the spirit of wine.

Mr. BROUSSARD. "The spirit above is the spirit of love," I would correct the Senator.

But, in answer to the Senator from Minnesota, who is the chairman of the Judiciary Committee, under whose jurisdiction this bill was considered and reported, I will ask him who gives him the authority, even as chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, to ignore laws which his own committee submitted to Congress, and which were passed in 1919, to disregard them now, in order that the Congress may enact laws which he desires to see on the statute books?

Mr. NELSON. What laws did the Judiciary Committee ignore?

Mr. BROUSSARD. They ignored the national prohibition act, under which these people are entitled to these permits.

Mr. NELSON. We have not ignored it.

Mr. BROUSSARD. You are defending the course of the commissioner, who admits he is violating the law in order to await the passage of an act by this Congress.

Mr. NELSON. We are not defending him.

Mr. BROUSSARD. You are not?

Mr. NELSON. No; we are not defending him. The committee as a committee has not defended the commissioner.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Has not the Senator asked me if he was not right in withholding these permits?

Mr. NELSON. I will say that it is for the protection of the brewers and the wholesale dealers that they withhold these rules until we can legislate. Is it not better for them to await our action, instead of embarking in a practice in which they would have to take the back track as soon as we pass this law? And it will pass, I want to say to the Senator. As soon as we pass this law, these rules the Senator imagines and talks about would be of no use, and it would be misleading, and the brewers and the wholesale dealers would curse you for getting them into a scrape and making them spend money under rules that will never be effective.

Mr. BROUSSARD. I will reply to the distinguished Senator that if the antiprohibition element are able to continue to control the enforcement department of this Nation, for the sake of law and order I hope the bill will be passed, because you are absolutely setting at naught not only your own law but you are abusing the privileges and guaranties which the Constitution of the United States gives to this firm; and this is not, I will say to the Senator, a letter with reference to beer, but it is with reference to liquor for medicinal purposes, which, under the present law, you provide for.

Mr. NELSON. We will send you fresh, pure water, from Itasca clear down the Mississippi to New Orleans. You need not worry.

Mr. BROUSSARD. I do not care to reply to that remark.

I want to complete the reading of this letter. The last paragraph states:

You may be assured, however, that as soon as we are in possession of definite information bearing upon applications of this kind the matter of I. L. Lyons & Co. will be properly disposed of.

Sincerely, yours,

R. S. HAYNES,
Prohibition Commissioner.

I think it may not be necessary, but I desire to comment just a little bit on the significance of this letter, with the idea that Senators who are supporting this measure will realize—and if they do not realize, the country will realize—that you are absolutely now interfering with the functioning of the laws of this Nation; that you believe, as the Senator from Minnesota has just expressed it, that you are saving the brewers from themselves.

But that is not the question involved here, Mr. President. The point is that those who submitted the eighteenth amendment adopted the national prohibition act, and within 5 days after that act went into effect the construction of that law was submitted to the prohibition commissioner in 1920, on January 25, and on January 31, just 16 days after the act had gone into effect, the prohibition commissioner decided that he had no authority to withhold from physicians permits for the prescription of wine and beer, and he not only ruled that, but he went on to say that there was no limit to the amount which physicians might prescribe.

This letter was written, as I have demonstrated before, to a man who is a sincere prohibitionist, who has voted for all of the prohibition measures in Congress, and they thought they could trust him, and they withheld the publication of the regulations which, in that letter of January 31, 1920, they said they were preparing.

Subsequently, when they were pressed for action again, as they are being pressed now by I. L. Lyons & Co. under the present law, they submitted the matter to the Attorney General, and the Attorney General has ruled that the letter which Mr. Kramer, the prohibition commissioner, had written on January 31, 1920, was absolutely correct. Then those who advocate this measure now came to Congress and said, "There is an emergency here. We are holding up everybody clearly entitled under the law to a permit. We are refusing to issue permits to physicians. We are refusing to issue permits to wholesale drug importers. We are absolutely at the mercy of the law which you have enacted." And with that spirit of my good friend the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] they thought there devolved upon them the duty of saving this country, because they thought that the doctors might kill everybody; and that is the situation presented here, and I refer to it only for the purpose of calling the attention of Senators who intend to support the measure to the fact that they are encouraging agencies of this Government, created by Congress, to disregard, to set at naught, to defy, the legislative action of Congress, when it clearly is against the Constitution for them to take such a course.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. BROUSSARD. I yield.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I think the situation is simply this: Whatever the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may have written to somebody—and the Senator has alluded to a letter to which he called attention in his remarks the other day—granting that it was true that the Commissioner of Internal Revenue had said that there was no restriction in the law against prescribing wine and beer for medicinal purposes, and that there was no limit to the quantity which might be prescribed, it was assumed generally throughout the country by everybody that the law prohibited the prescribing of wine and beer. It was assumed by the framers of the original Volstead Act. It was thought to be necessarily implied from the terms of that act that nothing but spirituous liquors could be prescribed for medicinal purposes.

The House has passed this bill which we have under consideration now, H. R. 7294, and action on the part of the Senate is imminent upon the same measure, which prohibits the prescribing of beer. Under those circumstances, Mr. President, is it not the most reasonable thing that the Commissioner of Internal Revenue should withhold regulations for the manufacture of beer for medicinal purposes, it being quite evident that within a few days the Senate will have passed the bill, and it will have received the approval of the President?

I can not help but think that, in the interest of everybody, the brewers and the public as well, the Commissioner of Internal Revenue is doing the right and proper thing in saying, "Until final action by the Congress of the United States I will withhold the issuance of these regulations."

Those are the motives which are governing the commissioner, and instead of being censured for it, I think he ought to be lauded for the position which he has taken.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. BROUSSARD. I yield.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Is there any doubt about what the law is?

Mr. STERLING. I am not saying as to what the national prohibition act actually is. If the Senator will recall, I stated that it was assumed that everybody throughout the country generally thought that the original Volstead Act prohibited, impliedly if not expressly, the prescribing of wine and beer for medicinal purposes.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. If that be so, is any man in this Republic above the law, or is any man beneath its protection?

Mr. STERLING. No; nobody is above the law. But there is some discretion, I suppose, in the Internal Revenue Commissioner, in regard to the issuance of regulations, under which it shall be manufactured and prescribed for medicinal purposes, and now, to avoid a disturbance of business, not only of the brewer's business directly, but of those related to it, the commissioner says, "I shall not in view of the pending legislation issue these regulations for the present." I think he is doing the wise and the reasonable thing in taking that position.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Does the Senator think that it is a course of which we can approve?

Mr. STERLING. I think that course upon the part of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, under conditions as they exist, ought to meet the hearty approval of everybody. Had no bill been introduced, had none passed the House of Representatives, we might have said that the commissioner would have been justified in going ahead and issuing these regulations. But since we are now here discussing a bill already passed by the House, and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue knows that, as I have said before repeatedly, I think he has done the wise thing.

Mr. WADSWORTH. May I ask when the opinion of the Attorney General was rendered?

Mr. BROUSSARD. On March 3, 1921.

Mr. STERLING. I am glad the Senator calls attention to that. Notwithstanding an opinion was rendered by the Attorney General as far back as March 3, 1921, I do not think any particular pressure has been brought to bear for regulations until comparatively recently. At least I heard of no agitation of the question particularly, except that there was some wonder as to what might be done after the opinion of the Attorney General.

Mr. BROUSSARD. I was glad to yield to the Senator, and now I want to answer him.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I am not concerned with the merits of this bill for the moment, but does the Senator from South Dakota take the position that any man, unless authorized by law, directly or impliedly, can suspend a law?

Mr. STERLING. He is not suspending the law, I will say to the Senator from California. The law has not commanded him to issue these regulations.

Mr. BROUSSARD. What is that?

Mr. STERLING. I think the law has not commanded him to issue any regulations.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Does the Senator then hold that it is discretionary with him to enforce the law, or to fail to enforce it? Is not that the law?

Mr. STERLING. There is no question that he may issue regulations; that he may be expected to issue regulations. I think it likely that he would be under the law expected to issue regulations, but I do not recall any provision of the law that commands him to issue the regulations.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. In other words, the Senator does not think it mandatory that he issue regulations permitting the matter sought in this particular instance?

Mr. STERLING. Not at any particular time, I think.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Mr. President, I listened very attentively to the Senator from South Dakota in his defense of the commissioner for not issuing regulations under a law on the statute books of the United States. I have known, but I am satisfied that the Senator from South Dakota did not know, what the construction of the law was until March 3, 1921. But I have demonstrated that the prohibition commissioner as early as January 31, 1920, very clearly ruled that he had no authority to withhold these regulations and that he promised to issue them immediately and stated that he was preparing them.

Since March 3, 1921, the press of this city and the press of the country has almost daily announced that the regulations were printed and were ready to be issued. I am surprised that any Senator would take the position of the Senator from South Dakota in defending the commissioner in disregarding his oath of office and refusing to comply with the law and stating as a reason that the law does not suit his view and he is merely holding up these permits until the law can be changed.

If the Prohibition Commissioner may suspend the operation of an act of Congress, no matter at whose instance, then we have reached the stage when the Congress might just as well delegate all its powers to some agency of the Government and let us go home and take a recess. We are here for the purpose of enacting laws. We are here for the purpose of creating agencies for the purpose of executing those laws and not to hold them up.

I do not know that I am doing justice to my friend the Senator from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS], but it seems that I read in some paper in Washington that the Chief Executive had been appealed to by him to participate in this holding up of the operation of the law. I think that the press may have been mistaken; I hope it was; but as I read it I think that it had some reference to the Senator from Ohio. If I am wrong about that I desire to be corrected.

But now we have here the strange spectacle of Senators who find the law is not what they thought it was, when the enforcement division within 10 days after the enactment of the law, or after it went into effect, knew that it meant a certain thing, and after holding up the law for nearly a year they submitted it to the Attorney General at a time when they thought he was preparing to leave the office and would not have time to pass on it or give an opinion in the matter—just about 10 days before going out of office this matter which was first decided and then held up for a year was referred to him for an opinion and to their surprise he decided that these people had a right to the permits under the law.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. BROUSSARD. I yield.

Mr. WILLIS. I presume the Senator from Louisiana refers to me, though I do not know the substance of the article to which he refers.

Mr. BROUSSARD. I said I did not know whether the Senator had any part in it.

Mr. WILLIS. I have no objection to stating to the Senator from Louisiana that while of course I could not properly state what is the position of the Chief Executive, because that would be entirely improper even if I knew, and I do not know anything about it—I am not his spokesman or mouthpiece—yet I have no hesitancy in saying to the Senator that I did say to the Chief Executive what I now say to the Senator, that it seems to me it would be a perfectly ridiculous position for the Government to be in to permit the issuance of these regulations about which there has been so much discussion and then for the Congress a few days later to enact legislation that would set those regulations at naught.

I did say to the Chief Executive, and perhaps that is what may have been in the papers, but that I do not know anything about, what I now say to the Senator—that I think that would put the Government in a perfectly absurd position and everybody would be entitled to say that those who are in authority do not know their own minds. That is my part in the matter and that is my position now.

Mr. BROUSSARD. I know the Senator from Ohio is sincere in that opinion. I hold a different opinion, that any official of the Government who is willing to accept the office, finding a law upon the statute books and takes an oath to discharge its functions, is under that oath obligated either to resign that office or to carry out the law as he finds it on the statute books. I think that any influence which is exerted either upon the prohibition commissioner or the Secretary of the Treasury or the President of the United States is an undue, illegal, unconstitutional interference with the rights of men like I. L. Lyons & Co., who have been in business for 75 years and who under the law are entitled to this permit which is refused them because the law does not suit the view of the prohibition commissioner.

I understand there is a desire to have an executive session and I shall detain the Senate but a moment longer. Before closing I desire to read into the Record something which has regard to the matter to which I have directed my observations. It appeared in the Cincinnati Times-Star. I understand that paper is owned by Charles P. Taft, who is a brother of the present Chief Justice. Here is an editorial of Monday, August 1, 1921, entitled "The New Invisible Government," and which reads as follows:

"Great is the prohibition lobby. It is a very real imperium in imperio, or rather an empire within a Republic.

"The present Volstead law permits the manufacture and sale of beer for medicinal purposes. A Democratic Attorney General so interpreted the law, and a Republican Attorney General agrees with his predecessor's interpretation. But the prohibition lobby, which works Congressmen on wires, has notified the Commissioner of Internal Revenue that it will force through Congress a law making the manufacture and sale of beer for medicinal purposes illegal. Therefore the commissioner has held up the lawful regulations for such sale and manufacture. Meanwhile the prohibition lobby has forced its new bill through the House and it is now pending in the Senate. But the point is that a high official of the Government is taking orders from a congressional lobby, disregarding an existing statute while virtually enforcing a bill that the lobby promises to have passed at some future day. In other words, the law of the land is what Wayne B. Wheeler et al. say it is going to be, not what it actually is.

"Much used to be written of 'invisible government,' implying that behind the scenes of Congress were the prompters, who gave the puppets their lines. Some of it was true and some of it was not. But to-day we have an open puppet show, in which the wires running from the lobby to the Congressmen are in full view, and all the world may see them move and then the Congressmen sequentially act. A fourth department has been added to the executive, the judicial, and the legislative. Or, rather, the fourth is the department of departments. It tells a Commissioner of Internal Revenue what the law is not but should be; it hurries Congress in the passage of the law that it demands, and we have no assurance that it will not tell the courts how the law should be interpreted."

SOUTHERN TARIFF CONGRESS.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, the Southern Tariff Congress is going to hold a meeting at Greensboro, N. C., on August 15 and 16. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD two brief letters with reference to that meeting.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letters are as follows:

THE GREENSBORO NATIONAL BANK,
Greensboro, N. C., August 3, 1921.

HON. KENNETH MCKELLAR,

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

National tariff policies and purposes are undergoing a re-examination by those engaged in creating and conserving the wealth of the South, and the effect of the tariff levy upon the industry and upon southern progress is engaging the careful attention of thoughtful men.

At Greensboro August 15 and 16 the authorized spokesmen of southern agricultural, commercial, and industrial interests will hold a Southern Tariff Congress to consider the Fordney tariff measure.

You will render the South a distinct service by your presence and counsel at this congress, and we extend you a special invitation to be with us.

We inclose copy of the call for the congress and will thank you for your attention to this matter.

Yours, very truly,

E. P. WHARTON,
President North Carolina Division
Southern Tariff Association.

AUGUST 4, 1921.

Mr. E. P. WHARTON,

Greensboro, N. C.

MY DEAR MR. WHARTON: Your courteous invitation of the 3d to attend a meeting of the Southern Tariff Association at Greensboro, N. C., August 15 and 16 received and noted. I greatly regret that my duties here will prevent my attendance upon this meeting.

However, it is but frank for me to say that I feel that I would be out of place at such a meeting and could not come in any event.

I am unalterably opposed to a protective tariff. I believe there never was a time in our history when a protective tariff would do more to injure the American people than now. The one absolutely necessary condition to American prosperity is our ability to sell our surplus products abroad. We produce so much more than we can consume, it seems to me that any person would know that we can not be truly prosperous unless we have a ready foreign market for these surplus products. The main cause of the present business depression in the United States is unquestionably our inability to dispose of these surplus products abroad. Now, why we should undertake to make it more difficult to sell this surplus abroad is absolutely unexplainable to me. Of course, when we put a tariff wall about our own country, other nations can not ship us their goods. We have over half the gold supply of the whole world in our country, and, of course, foreign business men can not buy our goods and pay for them in gold. It follows that if they get our goods they must pay for them with their goods. This is so elemental that it seems to me that any man can see it and understand it.

For these reasons, I have no sympathy whatever with the proposed conference of the Southern Tariff Association. I believe that such a meeting is wholly inimicable to the best interests not only of the South but of our whole country.

A short time ago I was besieged with letters from members of the Southern Tariff Association to vote for the so-called farmers emergency tariff bill. Holding the views I do, of course I did not vote for that bill. You will recall that our Republican friends and their high-protective Democratic aides declared that bill would not only restore the farmers to a condition of prosperity but would aid in restoring the whole country. Now, instead of these predictions coming true, if there is a man, woman, or child in this country who really believes that bill has helped anybody, except possibly a few profiteers, that man, woman, or child has not yet arisen to make the statement that the bill has helped.

The present Underwood tariff law is a most excellent law. It brings in more revenue than any tariff law ever on the statute books, and ought not to be repealed nor even amended, except possibly to lower some of the rates.

I think that the best service that the Southern Tariff Association could do to the South would be for it to dissolve. Or, in any event, it should change its purposes and devote its attention to the building up of our foreign trade, upon which our prosperity really depends.

I hope you will pardon me, my dear Mr. Wharton, for writing plainly as to this matter. I would be untrue to the principles I believe in did I not so express myself in view of your very courteous invitation and your own frank statement of the purposes of the proposed convention and in view of the past course and the published purposes of the Southern Tariff Association.

Very sincerely, yours,

KENNETH MCKELLAR.

HEALTH AND FOOD CONDITIONS IN THE SOUTH.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I wish to state that several days ago a publication was made in reference to pellagra and a state of semifamine in the South. The public health authorities, by direction of President Harding, as I recall, were to meet here to-day and report upon the matter. They did meet here to-day, and issued a statement in which they assure the public that there is no state of semifamine in the South and that pellagra, instead of increasing, has actually decreased in the last few years.

I ask unanimous consent that the newspaper article containing the statement of the public health authorities may be placed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

"State health officers of the Southern States, in conference at the request of the Surgeon General of the United States Public Health Service, deplore the fact that an impression has been created that famine conditions exist in the South and as a result that pellagra has increased to an alarming extent.

"After making an investigation, using all information available, we do not believe the situation warrants or should occasion any undue alarm. The indications are that there will be an increase in pellagra this year in localities in certain States where the disease has been endemic, but data in hand show in an unmistakable way that the number of cases and deaths from pellagra during 1921 will still be less than the annual average during the period of 1914 to 1921.

"In other words, it is fully substantiated by facts in hand that pellagra has steadily decreased in the Southern States during previous years. In drawing conclusions relative to the actual control of any disease comparative statistics are valueless unless an analysis is made for a period of years not less than 5, and preferably 10.

"PLAGUE OR FAMINE NOT THREATENED.

"There is no condition approaching a famine or plague in the South. It is obvious that this is a clear case of misinterpretation of terms, an incorrect analysis, and as a result statements have been made that are erroneous and misleading to the public.

"We realize that pellagra requires scientific and aggressive consideration, and that the solution of the pellagra problem depends upon sane educational methods. The whole question is one that should be approached as a public-health problem and dealt with by a well-defined plan.

"There can be no doubt that there will be an increase in the prevalence of tuberculosis, pellagra, and other diseases during the next few years as a result of the economic depression throughout the entire country, unless Federal, State, and local health departments are given adequate financial support and cooperation in directing intensive public-health education and in the establishment and maintenance of local health organizations which are fundamental in the prevention and control of all disease and the promotion of the public health.

"DIVISION OF OPINION.

"The health officers were evenly divided as to the advisability of going on record that the pellagra situation was no worse at the present time than during recent years. Dr. West declared that, while he 'resented from the end of his toes to the top of his head charges that a veritable condition of famine existed in the South,' health authorities should realize the seriousness of the situation. Dr. C. W. Garrison, of Arkansas, took a similar position, while Dr. James A. Hayne, South Carolina; Dr. A. T. McCormack, Kentucky; S. W. Welch, Alabama; and Dr. W. S. Leathers, Mississippi, were among those who contended the situation was no worse than in previous years."

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I wish to express my regret that some of our southern people, with what I consider exaggerated sensitiveness, although I honor their sensitiveness very much, seem to have expressed themselves about the President's first notice, calling attention to this statement of threatened famine and pellagra in the South, as a sort of insult to us. Of course, I understand the basis of the feeling that led them to some extent to resent that, more in the newspapers than elsewhere; but of course the President of the United States could not have had any sort of idea, nor could the Public Health Service have had any sort of idea, of insulting the South or slandering it in any way in the world. They are doubtless just as glad to learn the facts in the case, which were known to me before this report was made and were probably known to the Senator from Tennessee before it was made, as we are ourselves.

So far from showing any bad feeling, it showed rather a feeling of generosity and a desire to be helpful, if any need for helpfulness existed. I merely desired to make this statement in behalf of the South.

Mr. McKELLAR. May I say, in addition to what the Senator from Mississippi has said, that I made some remarks on the same matter some days ago and took exactly the same position and praised President Harding for his generous views about it. He was just misled about the facts.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If I had known that, I would have left unsaid what I have just said, because I would have known the same thing had been said, and better said, probably; but I did not know it, and I thought some one ought to say it before the matter passed into history.

PROPOSED CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT.

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] will yield for a moment, I introduce a joint resolution and ask that it may be read.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 97) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States was read the first time by title and the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein), That the following article is proposed as an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which shall be valid to all intents and purposes as part of the Constitution when ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States:

ARTICLE —.

The Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes on incomes derived from obligations issued or created by a State or any political subdivision thereof after the ratification of this article, without apportionment among the several States and without regard to any census or enumeration.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I am not going to address the Senate upon the joint resolution at this time, knowing that the unfinished business is now before the Senate, but I do intend within a very short time to address the Senate and call the attention of the Senate, as well as the attention of the people of the country, to the absolute necessity of legislation of this kind, if the Government of the United States in the future is to receive sufficient income to carry on the actual necessary business of the Government.

I move that the joint resolution be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. WILLIS presented a resolution adopted by the Junior Chamber of Commerce of Cincinnati, Ohio, favoring the taking of prompt action by the United States Government relative to the Great Lakes waterway, so as to lower freight rates, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a letter in the nature of a memorial of the foreign trade committee of the Cleveland (Ohio) Chamber of Commerce, remonstrating against the inclusion of the American valuation plan in the pending tariff bill, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

MAJ. FRANCIS M. MADDOX.

Mr. SPENCER, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 6407) for the relief of Maj. Francis M. Maddox, United States Army, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 244) thereon.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Mr. WADSWORTH introduced a bill (S. 2371) to further amend an act entitled "An act for making further and more effective provision for the national defense, and for other purposes," approved June 3, 1916, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

HOUSE-FURNISHING GOODS.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I present a letter from Mr. J. R. Howard, president of the American Farm Bureau Federation, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

AMERICAN FARM BUREAU FEDERATION,
Chicago, Ill., August 3, 1921.

Senator WILLIAM S. KENYON,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR KENYON: Our research department has called my attention to the inclosed chart showing the relative wholesale price conditions for several groups of commodities. You will note that the prices of farm products on June 1, 1921, registered but 13 per cent above the prices of these products in 1913, and that during the period of deflation through which we have been passing during the past year farm products have experienced the greatest degree of decline and have for some time been below all other groups of commodities. The fact that farm products have a purchasing power of approximately 66 per cent in relation to all other commodities explains why the farmer is out of the market to-day to such a large extent as a purchaser of commodities, and also explains in part the failure of business conditions generally to improve.

Since 48.6 per cent of our people are classed as rural population and apparently derive their income wholly or in part from or in connection with the production of farm products, it becomes a matter of vital interest to them that prices of other commodities should bear a much closer relation to the prices of the products which are the source of their income than is now the case. Under such conditions it is of particular importance that the price of commodities that the farmer has to purchase shall at least be free of any artificial restraints or influences which prevent the free play of competitive forces and that the price shall be determined by unrestricted supply and demand forces.

The farmer already knows reasons for the failure of prices of some other commodities to respond to the deflation process. Thus, for example, in the case of prices of lumber and building materials, which, as the chart shows, are still 202 per cent of the 1913 prices, an explanation of the failure of these prices to adjust themselves more in line with the prices of farm products is given us by the report of the Federal Trade Commission on the activities of trade associations operating in that industry in the direction of bringing about uniform prices and their maintenance at an artificially high level by curtailing production or supply. The investigations of Samuel Untermyer and others at New York and Chicago have given additional explanations of conditions in this industry out of harmony with the public interest.

The investigations last winter by Senator CALDER's committee on reconstruction and production showed, among other things, the activities of the coal associations, and this explained to some extent at least the reason for price conditions in the coal industry at that time.

The studies of the Federal Trade Commission with respect to the Pittsburgh plus basis of determining prices in the steel industry have thrown some light on prices in that industry. The farmers hope that results of a constructive nature will follow from these investigations so as to correct conditions already disclosed. We think the time is ripe for investigations of other commodities, and particularly of the activities of associations therein.

We desire at this time, however, to call your attention specifically to the prices of household furnishings, which you will note are 250 per cent of 1913 prices and are in a class by themselves—the highest class—being entirely out of line with prices of any other group shown by the chart. We have endeavored to make some investigation, but with little success thus far, of the causes for the price increases which occurred in the household furnishing group during 1920, which reached, in October, 371 per cent of 1913 prices, having continued to rise for several months after prices of most other commodities had begun to decline. We have attempted to find out whether or not any further decline in prices in this group may be expected and have been assured by most of the concerns we have interviewed in this trade that no further declines are anticipated. We have heard of strong associations operating in certain branches of the furniture industry, of a trust in the glass industry, which dominates the situation, and of similar conditions with respect to other important articles included in the household furnishings commodity group.

It seems to me that this is an appropriate time for an investigation by the Federal Trade Commission of the household furnishing industry and trade, with a view to ascertaining what the actual conditions are which make possible a price condition so much out of line with tendencies in most other lines.

Assuring you that any action which may be taken by you toward initiating such an investigation will, in my judgment, be appreciated by the entire consuming population, of which the farmer is a very important part, I am

Yours, very truly,

AMERICAN FARM BUREAU FEDERATION,
By J. R. HOWARD, President.

Mr. KENYON submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 127), which was referred to the Committee on Manufactures:

Whereas reported statistics show that the prices of house-furnishing goods reached a higher peak relative to prewar prices than any other class of commodities; and

Whereas since May, 1920, while most other reported classes of commodities were falling in price, the price of house-furnishing goods continued to increase until the latter part of 1920 and then registered only a gradual decline; and

Whereas the prices of house-furnishing goods are now relatively very much higher than any other class of commodities, and particularly are relatively more than twice as high as the prices of farm products: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Federal Trade Commission be, and hereby is, authorized and directed promptly to investigate the causes of factory, wholesale, and retail price conditions in the principal branches of house-furnishing goods industry and trade, beginning with January, 1920, and particularly to ascertain the organization and interrelations of corporations and firms engaged therein, and whether there have been and are unfair practices or methods of competition, or restraints of trade, combinations, or manipulations out of harmony with the law of public interest, and if so, what effect the same have had on prices; and serially to report the facts, with its recommendations, at the earliest possible time as different phases of the investigation are completed.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED.

AMENDMENT OF NATIONAL PROHIBITION ACT.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7294) supplemental to the national prohibition act.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, when the pending bill was last under consideration the Secretary was proceeding with the reading of the committee amendments to the bill. I will ask that the next committee amendment be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next amendment reported by the Committee on the Judiciary will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. In section 2, page 2, line 19, after the words "If the commissioner shall find," the Committee on the Judiciary proposes to insert the words "after hearing, upon notice as required in section 5 of title 2 of the national prohibition act"; in line 22, before the words "national prohibition act," to strike out "the" and insert "said"; in line 23, after the word "being," to strike out "purchased for use" and to insert "used"; in line 25, after the word "article," to strike out "or" and to insert "and in the event that such change is not made within a time to be named by the commissioner he may"; and on page 3, line 7, before the words "national prohibition act," to strike out "the" and insert "said," so as to make the clause read:

If the commissioner shall find after hearing, upon notice as required in section 5 of title 2 of the national prohibition act, that any article enumerated in subdivisions b, c, d, or e of section 4 of title 2 of said national prohibition act is being used as a beverage, or for intoxicating beverage purposes, he may require a change of formula of such article, and in the event that such change is not made within a time to be named by the commissioner he may cancel the permit for the manufacture of such article unless it is made clearly to appear to the commissioner that such use can only occur in rare or exceptional instances, but such action of the commissioner may by appropriate proceedings in a court of equity be reviewed, as provided for in section 5, title 2, of said national prohibition act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, line 8, before the word "liquor," to strike out "intoxicating" and insert "spirituous"; in line 10, before the word "spirituous," to strike out the words "vinous or"; in line 14, after the word "manufactured," to insert "and imported," so as to read:

No spirituous liquor shall be imported into the United States, nor shall any permit be granted authorizing the manufacture of any spirituous liquor, save alcohol, until the amount of such liquor now in distilleries or other bonded warehouses shall have been reduced to a quantity that in the opinion of the commissioner will, with liquor that may thereafter be manufactured and imported, be sufficient to supply the current need thereafter for all nonbeverage uses.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, line 16, after the word "uses," to insert:

Provided, That this provision against importation shall not apply to shipments en route to the United States at the time of the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, page 3, line 19, after the word "act," to insert "and the national prohibition act"; in line 20, after the word "apply," to insert "not only"; in the same line, after the words "United States," to strike out "and" and insert "but"; and in line 25, after the word "and," to strike out "islands" and insert "Islands," so as to make the clause read:

SEC. 3. That this act and the national prohibition act shall apply not only to the United States but to all territory subject to its jurisdiction, including the Territory of Hawaii and the Virgin Islands; and jurisdiction is conferred on the courts of the Territory of Hawaii and the Virgin Islands to enforce this act and the national prohibition act in such Territory and Islands.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 4, page 4, line 1, after the word "made," to insert "by the commissioner," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 4. That regulations may be made by the commissioner to carry into effect the provisions of this act. Any person who violates any of the provisions of this act shall be subject to the penalties provided for in the national prohibition act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 5, page 4, line 9, after the word "and," to strike out "continued" and insert "continue"; in line 11, after the word "laws," to strike out "that" and insert "as"; in line 13, after the word "act," to insert "or of this act"; in the same line, before the word "such," to insert "any of"; in line 14, after the words "national prohibition act," to insert "or of this act"; and in line 20, after the word "manufacture," to insert "of," so as to make the paragraph read:

SEC. 5. That all laws in regard to the manufacture and taxation of and traffic in intoxicating liquor, and all penalties for violations of such laws that were in force when the national prohibition act was enacted, shall be and continue in force, as to both beverage and nonbeverage liquor, except such provisions of such laws as are directly in conflict with any provision of the national prohibition act or of this act; but if any act is a violation of any of such laws and also of the national prohibition act or of this act, a conviction for such act or offense under one shall be a bar to prosecution therefor under the other. All taxes and tax penalties provided for in section 35 of title 2 of the national prohibition act shall be assessed and collected in the same manner and by the same procedure as other taxes on the manufacture of or traffic in liquor.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STANLEY. I offer, and I desire to have read and have the Senate act on when we reach it, an amendment on page 5, line 12, after the word "penalties," to strike out the words "not collected."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. When that point is reached a negative vote on the committee amendment will accomplish the Senator's object.

Mr. STANLEY. Very well.

Mr. STERLING. That was the understanding in regard to that amendment.

Mr. BROUSSARD. I suggest that the committee amendment ought not to be agreed to.

Mr. STERLING. We have not yet reached the amendment in the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment has not yet been reached. The Secretary will continue the reading of the committee amendments.

The next amendment of the Committee on the Judiciary was, on page 4, line 21, after the word "spirituous," to insert "upon which the internal-revenue tax has not been paid"; in line 24, after the numerals "1920," to insert "or the merchant marine act, 1920"; on page 5, line 1, after the word "warehouse," to strike out "and the person guilty of the theft has been convicted of the offense," so as to read:

If distilled spirits upon which the internal-revenue tax has not been paid are lost by theft, accidental fire, or other casualty while in possession of a common carrier subject to the transportation act of 1920 or the merchant marine act, 1920, or if lost by theft from a distillery or other bonded warehouse, and it shall be made to appear to the commissioner that such losses did not occur as the result of negligence, connivance, collusion, or fraud on the part of the owner or person legally accountable for such distilled spirits, no tax shall be assessed or collected upon the distilled spirits so lost, nor shall any tax penalty be imposed or collected by reason of such loss, but the exemption from the tax and penalty shall only be allowed to the extent that the claimant is not indemnified against or recompensed for such loss.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, line 12, after the word "penalties," to strike out "not collected," so as to read:

This provision shall apply to any claim for taxes or tax penalties not collected that may have accrued since the passage of the national prohibition act or that may accrue hereafter.

Mr. STANLEY. That is the amendment to which I had reference.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, at the time of the presentation of the report of the committee I reserved the right to ask the Senate to disagree to the amendment inserting the words "not collected." I hope the amendment will be disagreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was rejected.

The next amendment was, on page 5, line 14, after the word "hereafter," to insert:

Nothing in this section shall be construed as in any manner limiting or restricting the provisions of title 3 of the national prohibition act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That completes the committee amendments as printed in the bill.

Mr. STERLING. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from South Dakota will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 3, at the end of line 7, it is proposed to insert a colon and the following proviso:

Provided, That no change of formula shall be required and no permit to manufacture any article under subdivision (e), section 4, title 2, of the national prohibition act shall be revoked unless the sale or use of such article is substantially increased in the community by reason of its use as a beverage or for intoxicating beverage purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from South Dakota.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BROUSSARD obtained the floor.

Mr. STERLING. Will the Senator allow me, on behalf of the committee, to offer another amendment?

Mr. BROUSSARD. I yield to the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. STERLING. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, to come in at the end of line 18, on page 3, as a proviso.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from South Dakota will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. At the end of section 2 it is proposed to insert the following proviso:

Provided, No vinous liquor shall be imported into the United States unless it is made to appear to the commissioner that vinous liquor for such nonbeverage use produced in the United States is not sufficient to meet such nonbeverage needs.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Do I understand that the Senator from South Dakota offers the amendment just stated as an amendment to the committee amendment?

Mr. STERLING. It comes in at the end of section 2 and after the committee amendment, but it is not an amendment to that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from South Dakota comes in at the end of the section; it follows the committee amendment.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I make the inquiry because I have an amendment drawn in such way as, if it is adopted, would follow the committee amendment on line 18.

Mr. STERLING. Would it not equally well follow the language of the proposed amendment offered by me, I will ask the Senator from New York?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I have had it printed. I might redraft it in the form of an additional proviso.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks the amendment offered by the Senator from South Dakota does not qualify the words in italics reported by the committee as an amendment. The amendment offered by the Senator from South Dakota should be considered as a separate amendment following the committee amendment which has been agreed to.

Mr. WADSWORTH. May I ask the Senator from South Dakota to give us a little sketch of the situation as he sees it and which makes necessary the amendment which he has just offered, which I understand would prevent the importation of any vinous liquors if the commissioner had an idea that there was enough of a certain kind of vinous liquor already in the country to meet medicinal needs?

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, may I ask the Secretary to read the proposed amendment again?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will again read the amendment.

The amendment was again stated.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, the reason for the proposed amendment has just come to my notice. The original paragraph applied to all intoxicating liquors. The committee amended it so that it should apply to spirituous liquors alone.

I have these data: From June 30, 1920, to July 1, 1921, there were 1,200,000 gallons of wine imported into this country; 90,000 dozen quarts of still wines in bottles; 51,000 dozen quarts of champagne. During the year before there were 28,000 gallons imported; 5,000 dozen quarts of still wine in bottles, and 2,800 dozen quarts of champagne. The increase from 28,000 gallons to 1,200,000 gallons shows what will happen if vinous liquors are eliminated from this section; and it would seem that there ought to be a restriction by inserting the proposed amendment here.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from South Dakota if I understood him correctly to say that 1,200,000 gallons were imported last year?

Mr. STERLING. One million two hundred thousand gallons of wine were imported into the country from June 30, 1920, to July 1, 1921, a period of one year.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I ask the Senator if that amount of wine was imported for medicinal purposes?

Mr. STERLING. I do not know as to that; but it was imported into this country.

Mr. WADSWORTH. How did it get in if it was not for medicinal purposes?

Mr. STERLING. It was imported into this country, whether imported for medicinal purposes or whether used for medicinal purposes I do not know. I will say, however, Mr. President, that under the interpretation put upon the law by the Attorney General it was supposed it could not have been used for medicinal purposes. I ask for a vote on the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from South Dakota.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Mr. President, on behalf of and at the request of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED], I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, which I ask to have read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. At the end of the bill it is proposed to add a new section, as follows:

Sec. 6. That any officer, agent, or employee of the United States, or other person who, under color of claim that he is enforcing or is engaged in the enforcement of this act, or the act of which it is amendatory, willfully subjects or causes any person to be subjected to the deprivation of any rights, privileges, or immunities secured or guaranteed by the Constitution or laws of the United States, shall be deemed guilty of a felony, and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by imprisonment for a period of not more than five years or by a fine not exceeding $10,000, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I have just a word or two to say in regard to the proposed amendment. I hope it will not prevail. There is no need for the amendment to this particular bill. Sections 20 and 21 of the chapter relating to search warrants in the espionage law fully cover the situation. Let me read those two sections. They are as follows:

Sec. 20. A person who maliciously and without probable cause procures a search warrant to be issued and executed shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than one year.

Sec. 21. An officer who in executing a search warrant willfully exceeds his authority, or exercises it with unnecessary severity, shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than one year.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, if I may ask the Senator a question, how about the officer who makes an arrest or seizes a man without any warrant at all, or who makes an entry without any warrant at all? The sections which the Senator from South Dakota has just read cover the abuse of a warrant, but they do not cover the cases which are occurring, if I may trust the news dispatches, where seizures are attempted without any warrant at all.

For instance, I saw stated in the papers the other day the case of an officer who saw a man come out of a hotel with a package in his hand and get into his automobile; and he got into the automobile himself, seized the package, found that it contained a bottle of whisky, arrested the man, and took him before the court. The court dismissed the man at once, and dismissed the case, on the ground that it was an illegal arrest, because it was made without a search warrant or any warrant at all.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But at the same time nothing was done to the officer, and there was nothing in the law that enabled anybody to do anything to the officer.

Mr. LODGE. Precisely. This does not provide at all for officers of the Government or any officers who make seizures without any warrant whatever. This is the abuse of a warrant; that is all.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I think we can hardly provide in the law that there can be no arrest without warrant. The general law is that for an offense committed in the sight of the officer there may be an arrest without warrant. No warrant is required. So there will be those cases, and undoubtedly many of them where, if this amendment were adopted, you could not enforce the law, because here the man suddenly appears committing the act in violation of the prohibition law, and here is the officer who has no time at that moment to procure a warrant, and he arrests because he has seen the commission of the act.

I think a private individual, not an officer, seeing the commission of a criminal offense, may arrest. Further, let me say to the Senator from Massachusetts, if there is an unjustifiable arrest without warrant, the party has his civil remedy as well for false arrest and imprisonment; and where there is an arrest that is malicious or without probable cause, he has his remedy in a civil action for damages for malicious prosecution.

Mr. LODGE. In the case that I have stated, the man had this bottle of whisky in his possession, and had it in his automobile; but he was not violating any law.

Mr. STERLING. If he was not violating any law by that conduct of having it in his possession, of course the officer had no right to arrest him without a warrant.

Mr. LODGE. He was not selling or manufacturing.

Mr. STERLING. He had no right to arrest without a warrant; but the question as it appeals to me, I will say to the Senator from Massachusetts, is whether he was not violating a law and whether he was not violating the prohibition law in having it in his possession.

Mr. LODGE. He might have been; but this man had no warrant to make the arrest.

Mr. STERLING. If he had it in his possession, and was thus violating the law, I think the arrest could have been made without a warrant.

Mr. LODGE. The court disagreed with that view.

Mr. KING. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. STERLING. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. KING. I call the attention of the Senator from South Dakota to the fact—and it is a fact, attested by a long line of abuses which have been chronicled by the press and by individuals who are familiar with the facts—that a large number of the officials charged with the enforcement of the prohibition act have utterly disregarded personal rights, have committed assaults upon individuals, have searched homes, have seized individuals, have abused their person, and have resorted to methods which are intolerable in a civilized community; and they have been justified by the Anti-Saloon League and by the officials. Something ought to be done to restrain these men who refuse to respect the rights of individuals.

Mr. STERLING. Of course, if an unnecessary assault is committed, with or without warrant, upon the individual sought to be arrested the party is liable, and criminally liable, too, for assault and battery, as well as civilly liable.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. STERLING. I yield to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator has just informed us of the fact that if an officer made an arrest without a warrant, unjustifiably, there was a remedy on the civil side of the law; in other words, that you could sue the man and get damages, and then you could collect providing you could find anything to collect out of. In the vast majority of these cases an execution would be returned that no property was found. If it be true, however, that a civil remedy is all sufficient, why should the Senator provide a criminal penalty where there is an abuse with a warrant and not provide a penalty where there is an unjustifiable arrest without a warrant? Why should the abuse with the warrant require criminal procedure in order to complete the protection of the citizen and an unjustifiable arrest without a warrant not require the same thing?

Mr. STERLING. Does not the Senator from Mississippi agree that all abuses under a warrant are covered by sections 20 and 21 of the search-warrant law?

Mr. WILLIAMS. My question admitted that.

Mr. STERLING. As to the other cases, I say there are many where it will be impossible to procure a warrant and apprehend the offender under a warrant; and I do not think you should provide here by law in this case any more than you would in any other infraction of law that no arrest can be made without a warrant. That would be a dangerous thing to do.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, of course it is a familiar principle of law that where a violation of the law is taking place in the presence of an officer, he does not have to wait to go around and make an affidavit and get a warrant. If the Senator from South Dakota were attacking the Senator from Massachusetts in my presence and I were a constable or a policeman or any other sort of peace officer, even a justice of the peace, I would have a perfect right to go up and arrest both parties and to bring them before the proper tribunal. There never has been any doubt about that. Now, here comes this case, and if it stood alone it would not make any difference; but it has become the rule and not the exception where a man goes up to another and for some reason suspects that he has in his valise whisky or wine or something else and then proceeds to arrest him, even if he had in his possession the liquor, whatever it may be, it does not follow for that reason that he is violating the law.

The mere possession of whisky is not a crime under the Volstead Act. It is the possession of it for unlawful purposes.

Here comes a man who takes for granted, first, that there may be possession—may be, not is—and proceeds to open a man's valise without any warrant or anything else. In my opinion the man is perfectly justified in knocking him down, and, if the officer were superior in strength to him and he could not prevent the insult otherwise, shooting him, if he had anything to shoot him with. There must be always a limit to the tyranny of the man, for—

Proud man,
Drest in a little brief authority,
Most ignorant of what he's most assured,
His glassy essence, like an angry ape,
Plays such fantastic tricks before high heaven,
As make the angels weep.

And there must be some protection for the citizen; and where a suit at common law for damages for unlawful arrest is not sufficient, then this statute ought to provide it.

As I said a moment ago, it has become the rule and not the exception. This is not the only case. I noted with pleasure that this particular court pronounced a rebuke to the officer. Again and again, all over the country, judges have informed officers that they have no right to arrest men without a warrant.

It is not like seeing a man with a pistol pointed at another, at the point of committing murder. It is not like seeing one man with his fist lifted, about to strike another in the face or elsewhere. It is not like seeing a man breaking into a door of a residence at night, from which you can assume that burglary is contemplated. The reason of the law which enables the officer to arrest for a crime committed in his presence is to protect life and limb and property when there is not time to do it otherwise. Now, a man could not contend that he is opening another man's valise in order to protect life or limb, or to prevent an irreparable injury to the public or to an individual that could not be redressed in any way except by the immediate action of the officer. That is the reason underlying the law. Cessat ratio, cessat lex, ought to apply.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the officer in the case to which I have referred, and about which the Senator has been speaking, exercised the right of search.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Of course.

Mr. LODGE. There was no obvious violation taking place.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Of course.

Mr. LODGE. He had to search the man in his automobile, and I contend that the court was right when it said he had no right to do it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And I neglected that in my argument. It was not merely an arrest, but prior to the arrest was the exercise of the right of search; and that right has always depended upon some legal authority, some warrant of some description. A man has no right to come into my house at night upon the general supposition that I am about making a bomb with a view of destroying the life of the Senator from Massachusetts. He has no right to come in to search and see if I have a weapon in my house on the supposition that I am going to use it unlawfully. The right of search was fully protected away back yonder, before the very remote ancestors of the first English-speaking people in America had ever found out that there was a New World, as far as that was concerned.

As I said a moment ago, the only reason why an officer has a right to arrest a man in the commission of a crime is that great bodily hurt or harm of some sort to an individual or to the public, otherwise irreparable and irremediable, is about to take place. However much gentlemen may hate a bottle of whisky, it can not be said that its mere possession in a valise constitutes an irreparable and irremediable injury either to society or to any man's fellow citizens.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. STERLING. I yield.

Mr. STANLEY. I notice, Mr. President, that the sections to which the Senator from South Dakota has called the attention of the Senate provide:

SEC. 20. A person who maliciously and without probable cause procures a search warrant to be issued and executed shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than one year.

Section 21 provides that—

An officer who in executing a search warrant willfully exceeds his authority, or exercises it with unnecessary severity, shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than one year.

Those two provisions were written at a time when it was presumed by the lawmakers of the land that no officer would attempt to search the person or the property of any citizen without previously securing a search warrant, and this act was approved May 16, 1918. The sanctity of the person is old, is sacred; it comes down through all our Saxon civilization, and when Saxon civilization and Anglo-Saxon law are lost in the twilight of time and of tradition, Tacitus tells us that our Scandinavian forbears, while they permitted their lands to be allotted by the will of a chief, resented the laying of the weight of a hand upon the person of any free man. The right of castle, the sanctity of the home, and the person of the free man have been so sacred, and sacred for so long, that the writers of this law never fancied that the time would come in a free country when some petty officer, armed with a brief authority, should cut such antics as would make the angels in high heaven weep. But it is true, Mr. President, that at this time the person and the property and the home of the citizen are not immune.

It is true, and it will not be denied, the statement will be challenged neither by the proponents nor the opponents of this measure—that it is almost customary, that it is usual, upon the highways of this country for men and women to be held up and searched.

Not long ago some ladies were traveling to the city of Lexington from a city in an adjoining State, the wives of some of the first citizens of Kentucky, unaccompanied by any gentleman. They were stopped by half a dozen men, who were courteous enough to say, "Ladies, do not be frightened. We simply propose to go through your automobile and see if there is any liquor in this vehicle, and if you will kindly turn over any little vials you have no violence will be offered." They were gallant and courteous to that extent. But it is true, it is customary, and it is an outrage to the person and the property of a citizen.

What were search warrants originally authorized for? For the apprehension of the most despicable of criminals. A search warrant was originally intended, and usually intended, prior to this present condition for the purpose of finding purloined and stolen property, for the purpose of detecting the crook, the sneak thief; and yet, about him, even, the law threw the safeguard of the search warrant and provided that the person and property of a man suspected of the most despicable crimes could not be violated except after a warrant duly procured, and then that it must be enforced in a certain way; and in order to safeguard the rights and property and person of the citizen, this espionage act adds additional penalties to the man who will abuse the warrant, to the man who procures it by collusion, or fraud, or false statement, or other misconduct, or to the officer who executes it with unwarranted violence. But there is not a word here which prohibits the searching of the person or property of the citizen without a warrant, because it was thought unnecessary.

The Senator from South Dakota has very eloquently and very ably argued to the Senate that when the original Volstead Act was proposed and was passed, it was the opinion of the author of the act, and of those who were interested in it, that the act did prohibit the use of brewed liquors for medicinal purposes. I do not concur with the Senator in that opinion, but he himself claims that, since the original act intended that this prohibition should be contained, that now it should be inserted. I am sure the Senator will apply the same reasoning to sections 20 and 21 of the espionage act. No lawyer in this body will argue for one instant that the law which provides heavy pains and penalties against an officer who would procure a search warrant by making a false statement, which provides heavy pains and penalties against an officer who would execute a search warrant with undue severity, which provides a prison sentence for the man, for instance, who would offer an insult to a woman in executing a search warrant, or who would make a false statement in order to search the person of a man, should provide no protection whatever against the wanton disregard of all the rights that have been safeguarded for 2,000 years, and by a thousand years of English jurisprudence, and leave the person and property of the citizen utterly defenseless against any insolent officer, however petty and however silly or useless his ground, however unwarranted he may be in laying his hands upon the person or poking his ubiquitous nose into the closets and the pantries of the men and women of this country.

This is not an effort to prevent the enforcement of the law against the transportation of alcoholic liquors. If it were proposed to repeal the wise acts which now adorn the statute books providing for search warrants, upon any sensible man claim that they who maintained the inviolate right of the individual against unreasonable search and seizure, or they who incorporated it into the Constitution of the United States, were in favor of thievery or in favor of highway robbery? Not at all.

It is not necessary, in order to enforce this law, that the citizen should be deprived of this ancient and sacred safeguard to the privacy of his person and the sanctity of his home and the immunity of his property. The man who does not violate the law, the man who does not transport alcoholic liquors, has the same right now that he always had to go wheresoever he pleases, without being interfered with, without being stopped, without being searched. His home is just as immune now as it ever was from the presence either of officers, or of lawless men who pretend to be officers, in entering his house without a warrant.

The other day in the city of Chicago, on one of its principal streets, one of its most thickly populated avenues, a truck backed up to the palatial home of a citizen, who was at that time in California on a summer vacation; the servants of that home were lined up against the wall by men wearing badges of revenue officers, and the house was searched and robbed. The men were not revenue officers. Had these provisions been broad enough, that home would have been protected. These provisions should be enlarged, not only to protect the home of the citizen as it always has been protected, they should be enlarged to cover search without a warrant, in order to protect the citizen from the lawless acts of the thousands of highwaymen and burglars who pretend to be prohibition officers in order to enter the homes of citizens; and that thing is going on everywhere, in every city in the United States.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, as I understand the Senator, he contends that if this amendment had been in effect it would have prevented such an outrage as he describes as having taken place in Chicago.

Mr. STANLEY. I think it would.

Mr. WILLIS. Will the Senator explain how it would have had any bearing? This amendment applies to any officer, agent, or employee of the United States who does these things. The Senator says these men were not revenue officers; they were not agents or employees of the Government. How would this amendment have prevented anything of that kind, then?

Mr. STANLEY. I think I go not too far when I say that the average citizen of the United States still has, notwithstanding these abuses, a respect for the law and is inclined unquestioningly to obey the mandate of any man who appears to be an officer of the law. The officers of the law have been engaged in this business of going wheresoever they listed, of stopping whomsoever they pleased, of searching where and whatever they cared to search, so that it has only been necessary for an officer to show his badge to secure immediate obedience. These servants, seeing these badges, believing the men were officers of the law, yielded until it was too late to offer resistance. If it had been absolutely necessary to show a warrant, and if that had been generally known, those servants would have said, "Where is your warrant?" That is what they ought to have said.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Kentucky, in connection with the point made by the Senator from Ohio, to the fact that the proposed amendment, after enumerating officers, agents, or employees of the United States, adds:

Or other person who, under color of claim that he is enforcing or engaged in the enforcement of this act or the acts of which it is amendatory—

And so forth.

So that it would cover, indeed, anyone pretending that he was an officer.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. LODGE. I do not wish to break the argument of the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. STANLEY. I am practically through, I will say to the Senator from Massachusetts.

I wish to ask the Senator from South Dakota if he would object to broadening the amendment or applying the same rule, the same wise safeguard contained in sections 20 and 21, to search by an officer or other person without a warrant; in other words, the Senator admits that it is wise to provide that the officer does not secure a warrant illegally and does not transcend his discretion in the execution of it. I am sure the Senator believes it is just as necessary to properly secure the warrant as to properly execute it, and for that reason I would suggest that the same identical provisions apply to persons searching without a warrant as to persons searching with a warrant illegally obtained. There is no reason why they should not so apply, and I would suggest that the bill be amended to the effect that "any officer or person who shall arrest or search or attempt to search the person or property of any citizen for any violation of this act without previously securing a warrant or search warrant as required by law shall, upon conviction, be fined not to exceed $1,000 or imprisoned not to exceed one year."

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the Volstead Act, for which I voted—and this is an amendment to it in substance—was passed by the Congress for the purpose of carrying out a constitutional provision adopted in the necessary constitutional form. We also have in the Constitution a clause, which I am going to read, which is quite forgotten, I think, by some people. It is to this effect:

The right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects against unreasonable searches and seizures shall not be violated, and no warrants shall issue but upon probable cause, supported by oath or affirmation, and particularly describing the place to be searched and the persons or things to be seized.

I contend that legislation to carry out that provision of the Constitution is just as legitimate as legislation to carry out the prohibitory amendment, and the fact that it stands in the Constitution is no reason why we should not have a law to carry it out and enforce it and punish infractions of it. Those infractions by these officers are going on all over the country at this time. They are searching without warrant; they are arresting without warrant; they are violating the fourth amendment.

We have a law which punishes them if they take excessive steps under a warrant, and yet you would decline to punish them for acting without a warrant. They pursue automobiles where they think there may be liquor and shoot them up until they stop. That has happened in my State; and it is done without a warrant, without anything but suspicion to go on. Such cases might be multiplied everywhere. Why should not the officers of the Government who violate the Constitution be just as much punished as the people who violate the prohibitory amendment to the Constitution?

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, the effect of the pending amendment is to encourage bootleggers. We have had experience in Minnesota and North Dakota on the border of Canada. Men go over to Canada and get a lot of liquor—and they get it cheap—and they get fast automobiles of the very greatest speed and rush back across the boundary line. It is a prairie, open country. In those cases if compelled to have warrants we never could catch those bootleggers. They have their big automobiles filled with Canadian whisky and come through at a rapid rate across the boundary line. To say to us that we must have a warrant to search those people before we can do anything is to make the law in cases of that kind utterly impossible of execution.

I wish to say to my good friend the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY], who spoke about men who pose as officers when they are really not such officers, that we have a statutory provision in our criminal code; I do not recall just what the punishment is, but it makes it a penal offense for anyone to assume to be a public official and act as such.

It has been a rule of the common law, and it is as much a rule to-day as it ever was, that when a man is engaged in committing an offense if a peace officer catches him in the offense he is not compelled to get a warrant, but can arrest him; that if he has stolen or smuggled goods in his possession the officer has a right to take those goods from him without a search warrant and keep them.

All legislation, Mr. President, should be practicable. The people of the United States have adopted the prohibition amendment. We are anxious to have that amendment enforced, and any legislation which will help bootleggers, any legislation which will prevent the due enforcement of the law, is inimical to the spirit of the constitutional amendment.

For more than six months the bane of our State was the running of Canadian whisky down to Minneapolis and St. Paul. They would run it through in carload lots, smuggle it in, put it into boxes as dry goods, put it into sacks, and ship it as flour. Those cases could be reached by a search warrant, but the worst things we had to contend with were the automobile bootleggers.

I will be charitable and say that the Senator from Kentucky does not intend to help the bootleggers by the amendment, but the effect of it will be that if an automobile full of whisky comes across the boundary line from Canada into our part of the country we can not stop it until we get a search warrant. How utterly useless it would be to say that before we can arrest that automobile of whisky, before we can take the whisky out of the automobile, we must go and get a search warrant. It would make the law practically nugatory in that case. We have hundreds of such cases. Therefore we have in our law provisions against the abuse of search warrants. We have laws prohibiting men to pose as public officers and making it a criminal offense for them to claim to be officers when they are not in fact officers.

There are cases and there always will be cases where an offense has been committed where the peace officer, the constable, the sheriff, or the marshal sees a crime committed, knows it has been committed, and is sure of it, and he has the right of arrest in all such cases. It has always been the fact from early English history down that in cases where a man catches one in the act of a crime he has the right to arrest him without a warrant, and if he catches him with stolen or smuggled goods or goods that he has no right to carry he has the right not only to arrest him but to take those goods without a warrant.

Mr. BROUSSARD obtained the floor.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to reply to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. BROUSSARD. I yield the floor to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President, I am grieved and surprised to hear so great and so profound a jurist, a great lawyer, who has for so many years presided with such grace, such dignity, such poise, as the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary of the Senate, second only in its dignity to the great court within the same building—

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, may I correct the Senator?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. STANLEY. Certainly.

Mr. NELSON. I wish to disabuse the mind of the Senator from Kentucky. I only claim to be a hayseed lawyer. I became chairman of the Judiciary Committee not through any merit, but through the rule of seniority that prevails in the Senate, so I do not desire him to ascribe my ability as a lawyer or otherwise to the fact that I happen to be chairman of the Judiciary Committee. I am just a plain hayseed, country lawyer, and I can say, in the language of the old Methodist hymn:

Just as I am, O Lord, I come.

Mr. STANLEY. The Senator is not only a great lawyer, but he is a versatile genius, and in this case the great chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary has displayed that versatility by making a hayseed argument that is not worthy of the lawyer or the chairman.

Would the chairman of the Judiciary Committee of the Senate claim for an instant that the abrogation of the provision, not only of the Constitution but of the Bill of Rights, that was intended to make the person and property of the citizen forever immune from unwarranted searches and seizures would not materially facilitate the apprehension of every burglar, of every robber, of every footpad, of every pickpocket, of every sneak thief in the United States? If the officers of the law were permitted upon the statement of a citizen that his person had been robbed to immediately surround an assembly, however large, and search every man in it, would they not detect many criminals who now escape? An entertainment, a wedding party, is given, and they discover five minutes afterwards that a part of the jewelry and valuable presents have been taken. How simple a matter it would be to surround that building with a cordon of police, to send in nimble searchers to run through the persons of the men and women present in order to apprehend the thief.

It is admitted by all who know aught of the enforcement of the criminal statutes of the country that this immunity of the person and the home of the citizen must delay in a measure the enforcement of the law, not against the importation of a pint of Scotch whisky from Canada to a Northern State, but it does militate and does delay and does often prevent the apprehension of those who come into homes at midnight prepared to commit murder in order to succeed in their nefarious calling. And yet will it be said in an hour of passion and fanatical blindness that we will rob the citizens of those safeguards which have remained so long sacred and secure, notwithstanding the fact that those safeguards interfere with the apprehension of the most dangerous criminals, in order now to reach with greater facility the activities of a bootlegger here and there?

In addition to that, Mr. President, are search warrants obtained according to law? Does the Senator from South Dakota, who is in charge of the bill, or does the chairman of the Judiciary Committee, the Senator from Minnesota, claim that it is the common practice to search cars, suit cases, and citizens passing through the States without a search warrant? If it is the common practice, it is time that the law be amended; if it is not a common practice, then the law will not be interfered with. If the officers of the law are obeying the spirit, as well as the letter of the law, and are securing search warrants before they stop Dick, Tom, and Harry on the highway, then there is no necessity for granting them immunity. If they are not respecting the spirit of the law, there is greater necessity for this proposed amendment. If it be true that the prohibition law can not be enforced without an open and unblushing violation and nullification of the Bill of Rights and of the Constitution of the United States, if it be true that it can not be enforced without stripping from the citizens the last particle of immunity and protection, without robbing the home of the last vestige of its privacy and sanctity, it is time that we knew it.

I do not believe that the law is so impotent, that the time has come for the Constitution to be trampled under foot, for the most sacred rights to be outraged and disregarded in order to enforce the prohibition law or any other act of the Congress of the United States.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, I have no desire to discuss the purpose of the amendment offered for the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] in his absence or the amendment offered by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY], but I merely desire to make one or two observations as to the probable results of these amendments.

Mr. STANLEY. Will the Senator from Ohio yield for just a moment? I should like to send the amendment which I have prepared to the desk and have it read and pending in case the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri shall not be agreed to.

Mr. WILLIS. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky for that purpose.

Mr. STANLEY. I now desire to offer the amendment, in order that the Senator from Ohio may address himself to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is an amendment pending at this time.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the junior Senator from Ohio yield to his colleague?

Mr. WILLIS. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. POMERENE. In order that I may be able to follow my colleague's argument, I should like to have read the amendment which is proposed by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY].

Mr. WILLIS. Let the amendment be read. I have no objection to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Kentucky will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert at the proper place in the bill the following words:

Any officer of the United States or other person who, under claim that he is enforcing or is engaged in the enforcement of this or other acts of the United States, shall arrest or search or attempt to search the person or property of any citizen without previously securing a warrant or search warrant as required by law shall, upon conviction, be punished by a fine not exceeding $1,000 or by imprisonment for a period not exceeding one year, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, I do not desire to discuss the purpose of the two amendments which have been offered; that purpose is undoubtedly laudable and proper, but I desire to make an observation about what the inevitable result of the adoption of either of the amendments would be.

There is a very grave danger while we are talking about some technical constitutional right of a bootlegger we are going to put ourselves in a position where the Constitution of the United States, which 99 per cent of the people desire carried into effect, can not be carried into effect. There is no purpose disclosed in the pending bill to take away from any man any constitutional right; and if such purpose were disclosed it would, of course, be utterly futile. Any right that any man has guaranteed to him under the Constitution he, of course, still has whether the pending bill is enacted or not. Its enactment would make no difference about that; but if either the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri or the amendment offered by the Senator from Kentucky should be adopted, the effect would be to make practically impossible the enforcement of this proposed law in this country. I desire to call attention to something which I think Senators have overlooked in this connection. Let us see how the proposed amendments would work. Take the amendment which has been proposed by the distinguished Senator from Kentucky. As pointed out by the Senator from Minnesota, the criminals—and they are criminals—who are engaged in rum running are men of desperate character. I happen to know something about the difficulties surrounding this problem, for I come from a State where we have had some experience with that very thing. These men, these booze peddlers and rum runners, travel across the borders of States and the international border in high-powered automobiles; they are armed to the teeth; they will shoot at sight; they pay no attention to any order from anybody; yet if word comes that a gang of that sort is coming across the boundary line of a State or the international boundary line, if the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kentucky should be adopted, instead of dealing with that sort of criminals in the only way that they understand, the Senator's amendment requires that there be very great deliberation, and that search warrants should issue. There would be placed by either of these amendments on the shoulders of the officers whose duty it is to enforce the law the danger, when dealing with a lot of thugs of that kind if they should happen to violate the law in any particular, that a tremendous fine and imprisonment would be visited upon them, perhaps.

I repeat that any right which a citizen has he will still have, and why, therefore, should we attach to this particular bill a provision of the kind now proposed? The effect of the adoption of either of these amendments by the Senate will be that we shall render nugatory the law itself. The question for us now to decide is, Shall we quibble about protecting some little technical right of a booze peddler or rum runner, or shall we enact a law that will make possible the enforcement of the amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which the very great majority of the people of the United States desire enforced?

I do not at all question the purpose of the amendment; but the rights of the citizen are already protected and guaranteed, and it does not need this amendment to accomplish that object. We are, however, to decide whether we are going to protect particularly the technical rights of the criminal, the man who is seeking to break the law, or whether we are going to make it possible to enforce the law.

Gentlemen criticize the eighteenth amendment because they say it is not enforced and some of them in ghoulish glee—not in this Chamber but elsewhere—point out that the law is being violated and that liquor can be bought. They complain about the enforcement of the law, on the one hand, and yet, on the other hand, they question whether we ought to do the thing that will make the enforcement of the law possible. If we really want the law enforced we must enact such legislation as will make it possible for the officers of the law to do their duty.

The enforcement of the prohibition act, Mr. President, is no easy task. I wonder whether Members of this body are aware of the fact that the loss of life among the men who have to deal with the thugs who are trying to violate the eighteenth amendment is higher in percentage than that sustained by our gallant troops in the World War. Yet when these men have to face dangers of that kind, we are told that their hands should be tied and they must run out and summon a court of inquiry and discuss this, that, and the other, and get a search warrant. That is a very nice theory, but we can not enforce the law in that manner. I think the people of the country expect the law to be enforced and the eighteenth amendment to be carried into effect. Neither can the law be enforced if we tie the hands of the officials. Therefore I trust that both the amendment of the Senator from Missouri and the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky will be voted down.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question there?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. WILLIS. Certainly.

Mr. LODGE. There is the fourth amendment of the Constitution which has not been repealed. Is not that the law of the land?

Mr. WILLIS. Undoubtedly.

Mr. LODGE. Is it not our duty to enforce the provisions of the Constitution without passing special laws to enforce them?

Mr. WILLIS. Undoubtedly; there is no question about that; but, of course, the Congress has the authority, and it is the duty of Congress to pass laws to carry the Constitution into effect; there is also no question about that.

Mr. LODGE. I mean if we do not do that it does not make the Constitution any less binding.

Mr. WILLIS. Certainly not; nothing that we can pass, no law that we can enact here, would affect any constitutional right.

Mr. LODGE. I am not more interested in protecting the rum runner and the booze peddler, to use the current vernacular describing the men engaged in the illicit traffic, than is the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. WILLIS. I understand that.

Mr. LODGE. But I am interested in protecting the interests of the citizen who is not engaged in violating the law and who outnumbers the other one hundred to one. Those are the men that I should like to see have the constitutional protection to which they are entitled, and it seems to me very important that they should be accorded that protection.

Mr. WILLIS. The Senator is quite right in that view. Of course my fear is that if we should adopt either of the proposed amendments the very constitutional rights in which the Senator is interested, and in which all of us are interested, could not be protected, because the prohibition enforcement officials have got to deal with a lot of desperate criminals. If we say that an officer who makes an arrest shall necessarily have to be sure on every point, the Senator knows what the effect will be. It will be to tie the hands of the officials and to make practically nugatory the law.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator means, then, that by omitting any allusion to it in this act these men could go ahead and safely violate the fourth amendment.

Mr. WILLIS. No; I do not mean that, because the Constitution, as the Senator has pointed out, still stands. I mean that the adoption of this amendment here would put every officer on notice that when he sees a carload—

Mr. LODGE. Does the Senator think these admirable officers employed under the prohibitory law ought to obey the Constitution like every other citizen?

Mr. WILLIS. I certainly do; and I think that they are obeying the law. I do not join in the general statement that has been made here—not by the Senator from Massachusetts but by others—that unwarranted acts on the part of officers have become the rule rather than the exception. I think that ordinarily the prohibition officers are excellent men, although I think there may be extreme cases.

Mr. LODGE. I agree with the Senator. I think as a rule they are good men and well-intentioned men, but there are some of them who are not.

Mr. WILLIS. That is undoubtedly true.

Mr. LODGE. And those men, I think, are apt to be rather harsh in dealing, perhaps, with perfectly innocent people.

Mr. WILLIS. My only fear is that the amendments proposed will be so interpreted as to make the legislation practically unenforceable.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. WILLIS. I yield the floor.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I wish to make a single observation with reference to this question which seems now to be before the Senate. As I understand, it relates to the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED]. The only objection which should be interposed to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri is that it is too limited and narrow in its scope. In other words, while control of the officer in the enforcement of this law is a desirable object to be attained, we know that during the last seven or eight years the practices which are claimed to be prevalent under this law are practices which have been prevalent with reference to the enforcement of a great many other laws.

I have been a member of a subcommittee which has had to do with the investigation of the conduct of officers connected with the Department of Justice for the last several years; and our investigations have shown that it has become almost a practice in many classes of cases to disregard entirely the constitutional guaranties. Men are arrested and imprisoned without warrant, houses are searched without warrant, private papers are taken without warrant; and to say to those men that they have a remedy by civil process is, of course, to say that which everybody knows is without any real merit so far as their protection is concerned.

I hope that the report of this committee will be before the Senate in a few days. I had hoped it would be here before this discussion came up, but we went thoroughly into the matter. The able Senator who now has charge of this bill, I think, was chairman of the committee, and the facts are there. The record may be read by any one who desires to read it. What we need is not only the amendment which the able Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] has proposed but an amendment broad enough to cover the right of the citizen under the provisions of the Constitution and make them available to the private citizen not only with reference to this law but with reference to any other law which the officers are called upon to enforce.

Some time ago I introduced a bill which I am going to ask to have printed in the Record in connection with this debate which undertakes to cover the subject matter. It may not be sufficient, but it certainly will form a nucleus around which to organize our ideas with reference to protecting the citizen in his rights under the Constitution. I read a paragraph or two from it.

The first section reads:

That every officer, agent, or employee of the United States in the civil, military, or naval service who injures, oppresses, threatens, or intimidates any person in the free exercise or enjoyment of any right or privilege secured or guaranteed to him by the Constitution or laws of the United States, or because of his having so exercised the same, shall, upon conviction, be imprisoned not more than five years or fined not more than $10,000, or both.

SEC. 2. That every officer, agent, or employee of the United States in the civil, military, or naval service who, under color of any order, regulation, or custom, or otherwise, willfully subjects or causes to be subjected any person to the deprivation of any rights, privileges, or immunities secured or guaranteed by the Constitution or laws of the United States shall, upon conviction, be imprisoned not more than five years or fined not more than $10,000, or both.

That is practically this amendment limited to this law.

SEC. 3. That every officer, agent, or employee of the United States in the civil, military, or naval service thereof who, by force, threat, intimidation, order, advice, or otherwise, prevents or attempts to prevent any person from freely exercising his right, privilege, or immunity by lawful means to advance, promote, agitate for, or discuss any amendment to the Constitution of the United States, or any statute of the United States, or amendment of a statute of the United States, or any proposition, policy, or measure, or any legislative, executive, or administrative action, the carrying out of which under the Constitution of the United States would fall within the scope of Federal jurisdiction or would involve an amendment of the United States Constitution, shall, upon conviction, be imprisoned for not more than five years or fined not more than $10,000, or both.

That, together with the other two sections, covers the entire field of controversy so far as we have been able to develop it by this investigation, as I see it. I shall vote for the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri if we get an opportunity to vote; but I only want to say that we ought not to confine our efforts to the punishment of persons who violate the constitutional guaranties or the rights of a citizen under the Constitution with reference to the enforcement of this particular law. We ought not to suppose, either, that when we pass this particular amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri we have done all that we ought to do in reference to this matter.

I call attention to this because I hope in a few days we shall have the report of this committee in, and then I shall urge the consideration of this measure.

I ask permission to print in full as a part of my remarks the bill of which I have just read a part.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POINDEXTER in the chair). Without objection, that order will be made.

The bill is as follows:

A bill (S. 664) to protect persons in the exercise of certain privileges and immunities guaranteed and secured by the Constitution of the United States.

Be it enacted, etc., That every officer, agent, or employee of the United States in the civil, military, or naval service who injures, oppresses, threatens, or intimidates any person in the free exercise or enjoyment of any right or privilege secured or guaranteed to him by the Constitution or laws of the United States or because of his having so exercised the same shall, upon conviction, be imprisoned not more than five years or fined not more than $10,000, or both.

SEC. 2. That every officer, agent, or employee of the United States in the civil, military, or naval service who, under color of any order, regulation, or custom, or otherwise, willfully subjects or causes to be subjected any person to the deprivation of any rights, privileges, or immunities secured or guaranteed by the Constitution or laws of the United States shall, upon conviction, be imprisoned not more than five years or fined not more than $10,000, or both.

SEC. 3. That every officer, agent, or employee of the United States in the civil, military, or naval service thereof who, by force, threat, intimidation, order, advice, or otherwise, prevents or attempts to prevent any person from freely exercising his right, privilege, or immunity by lawful means to advance, promote, agitate for, or discuss any amendment to the Constitution of the United States or any new statute of the United States or amendment of a statute of the United States or any proposition, policy, or measure, or any legislative, executive, or administrative action, the carrying out of which under the Constitution of the United States would fall within the scope of Federal jurisdiction or would involve an amendment of the United States Constitution shall, upon conviction, be imprisoned for not more than five years or fined not more than $10,000, or both.

SEC. 4. That every officer, agent, or employee of the United States in the civil, military, or naval service who, without duly issued search warrant or other warrant of law, shall enter into and search the house, office, room, or other premises of any person of any State, Territory, or District, or seize any book, paper, document, or other printed or written matter belonging to any such person, or enter any hall, room, or other premises for the purpose of obstructing, interfering with, or breaking up any meeting shall, upon conviction, be imprisoned not more than five years or fined not more than $10,000, or both.

SEC. 5. That any officer, agent, or employee of the United States who violates any provision of this act shall, upon conviction thereof, be at once discharged from the service of the United States.

SEC. 6. That, in addition to the punishment above provided, any person who shall violate any provision of this act shall be liable to the person injured or aggrieved in an action at law, suit in equity, or other proper proceeding, for redress. Such actions may be brought in any Territorial or district court of the United States wherever the defendant may be found, without regard to the other party or the amount in controversy.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, just a word or two with reference to the law as it now is relative to search warrants and warrants generally.

I turn to section 25 of the national prohibition act, which provides as follows:

It shall be unlawful to have or possess any liquor or property designed for the manufacture of liquor intended for use in violating this title or which has been so used, and no property rights shall exist in any such liquor or property.

The part to which I wish to call particular attention is as follows:

A search warrant may issue as provided in Title XI of public law numbered 24 of the Sixty-fifth Congress, approved June 15, 1917.

That is the law passed in 1917, and is a general Federal search-warrant law. The provisions of that law in regard to the use of search warrants follow the Constitution, and protect a citizen.

Turning to section 3 of Title XI of this Federal search-warrant law, I find the following:

A search warrant can not be issued but upon probable cause, supported by affidavit naming or describing the person and particularly describing the property and the place to be searched.

So, Mr. President, I question whether any search or seizure can be made without a search warrant; and why? Because there is the place to be searched and there is the thing to be seized, and the party desiring the search warrant must make an affidavit describing the place to be searched and the thing to be seized; and where there is a search and a seizure, or either, without any warrant being obtained as the statute requires, the party must have a remedy against the trespasser who does search and seize under the Constitution and under this Federal search-warrant law, which provides that no search warrant can issue except upon probable cause and upon affidavit describing the place to be searched and the thing to be seized.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. STERLING. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Suppose an officer, in an attempt to enforce this prohibition law, breaks into the Senator's house and searches it in an attempt to find a violation of the law, and finds nothing. The Senator says he has a remedy. Will he state what that remedy is?

Mr. STERLING. He certainly has a civil remedy, and of course if it is accompanied with an assault there can be no question but that he will have his criminal remedy against the party.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Assume that the Senator is terrified by the nocturnal invasion of this "law-enforcing" officer, and makes no resistance, and the officer ransacks his premises and retires in good order, and the next day the Senator brings a civil suit against him for damage that he has suffered—damage to what?

Mr. STERLING. Damage for invasion of my premises; and the circumstances, of course, would warrant exemplary damages.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. If the Senator will pardon me, the circumstances would warrant the imprisonment of that lawbreaker and invader of private houses, and in my opinion he ought to be put in the penitentiary for 10 years at hard labor.

Mr. STERLING. I am inclined to think that there is already a statute that will reach a case of that kind and punish it as a criminal offense. I have not run down the statutes to find out, but I believe it would be covered; and, as I say, there can be no question about it if it is accompanied by an assault.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, there is no statute whatever about it. A person in his own house is called to the front door by an officer. The officer shows him his badge, and says, "I am an officer, and I demand to search your house." The citizen, who does not know the law, and perhaps is not familiar with his constitutional privileges and immunities, instead of having a fight with the officer, which is his only remedy, and perhaps shooting him, says, "I protest against it, but I can not resist"; and in the man goes. Now, the only thing he has done is to commit a trespass, as he would have done if he had jumped over the fence into the man's yard when the man forbade him to do it. There is no damage whatever done to the property, and the right of the citizen to recover is a pure paper right, a fiction. He might get 1 cent and costs; but when that sort of proceeding is indulged in by a force of "law enforcers" all over the country under the direction of chiefs and deputies, with the country mapped into districts, if search and seizure, or search for the purpose of seizure, or search upon suspicion is to be the universal rule in the enforcement of this law, there will be riots in this country, Mr. President. The country never will stand for such a thing. If this law can not be enforced without the invasion of private premises, and arbitrary search of both sexes at any time of night or day that it may enter the head of one of these law enforcers to perpetrate those outrages, then the law will not be enforced. If it can not be enforced except by such Russian, inquisitorial methods as that, then it is a law that is unadapted for a free Anglo-Saxon people.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. STERLING. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. STANLEY. I want to ask the Senator from Connecticut a question at that point. The Senator speaks of a civil remedy here.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I did not speak of it.

Mr. STANLEY. The Senator was discussing it. It appears that this act, the only law to which the Senator from South Dakota has called our attention, provides absolutely no penalty for a search without a warrant. The penalties are all for an abuse of the warrant and for obtaining it by some indirection. Now, in that case, if the man himself is not personally responsible, as for a trespass, what good will a civil remedy do?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Of course, I do not think it does any good, and I claim there is no adequate remedy. It is a mere fiction that there is a remedy. The law provides for its orderly enforcement, as other laws do. They get a search warrant under the provisions of the Federal statute. The object of the opponents of this amendment, which gives a man a remedy for a wrong and punishes the perpetrator of the wrong, is to subject the country to a loss of the constitutional rights of its citizens by refusing to penalize an officer who exercises the right of search without any process of law or search warrant or due process whatever.

That is the only explanation of the opposition to this amendment. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS] has said that men are injured in trying to enforce this law. Of course they are. They will be injured just the same whether this amendment is adopted or not. If desperadoes are engaged in smuggling contraband goods, they will generally shoot when they are interfered with, and they will do it just the same whether this amendment is adopted or not. The amendment will not hurt any officer of the law who is holding up a motor car loaded with contraband goods. He will go in there, if he has knowledge that the machine is loaded with contraband goods, and he has a right to arrest the men without a warrant, the crime being perpetrated in his presence, the men sitting on the seats with drawn weapons. I am not talking about that sort of a case. That is not the case of searching suit cases of men and women on railroad trains and invading their houses on the suspicion that they may be violating the law.

So the Senator from Ohio, who says he is in favor of enforcing this provision of the Constitution, apparently is in favor of violating the other provision of the Constitution which provides that people shall be safe in their persons and property against unreasonable searches and seizures.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, just one word in reply to the Senator from Connecticut. If, as in the case he supposes, there is an invasion of a right by entering a man's house without warrant and searching it, making seizures or not making seizures, it pertains to every other violation of the law of that kind, every one of them, and his objection is no more applicable to the enforcement of prohibition than it is in the case of a search without a warrant or a seizure without a warrant in any other case.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, would the Senator be willing to accept this amendment if it were changed so as to cover the enforcement of any law of the United States?

Mr. STERLING. I will think about that. It is more reasonable, of course, than limiting it to this particular law, I will say to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. STANLEY. I want to state that I have an amendment now pending which covers the violation of this or any other act.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, it has been widely assumed, I think, that the prohibition law invites invasions of the rights of citizens more than any other law. I have no doubt but what there have been those who have been overzealous, perhaps, in the enforcement of the law. It is going to take a little time to regulate that, with the proper kind of administration here at Washington to see to it. But, Mr. President, I think we might well hesitate, simply because of that fact, to enact the wholesale proposition such as is involved in the present amendment.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. STERLING. I yield.

Mr. WILLIS. I have heard many complaints and criticisms relative to the conduct of revenue officers and customs officers in the enforcement of the revenue and customs laws. Does the Senator know whether any such law as is proposed in the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky applies to them?

Mr. STERLING. It does not, I think.

Mr. WILLIS. Is there any more reason, then, why it should be here applied than that it should be applied to customs officers and other officers of the Government?

Mr. STERLING. None at all.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President, if I am not mistaken, the Senator is inadvertently shooting at a man of straw, or I did not put in the amendment what I intended to. I heartily concur with the Senator from Ohio that the persons of law-abiding citizens should be immune from search or seizure, that their homes should be sacred from the invasion of any man who chooses, on a faint suspicion or to please his own sweet will, to go in there, in the middle of the night or at any other time, not for the violation of this act specifically, but to search it for the violation of this or any other act of the United States. It covers every case of the searching of a man supposed to have diamonds on his person, as well as liquor.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, it was the intention of the framers of the national prohibition act that the same law should apply in regard to arrest or in regard to the issuance of the service of search warrants as in all other cases.

With reference to arrests, we adopted the provisions of section 1014 of the Revised Statutes, which provide as follows:

For any crime or offense against the United States the offender may, by any justice or judge of the United States or by any commissioner of a circuit court to take bail, or by any chancellor, judge of a supreme or superior court, chief or first judge of common pleas, mayor of a city, justice of the peace, or other magistrate of any State where he may be found, and agreeably to the useful mode of process against offenders in such State, and at the expense of the United States, be arrested and imprisoned or bailed, as the case may be, for trial before such court of the United States as by law has cognizance of the offense.

By relation, we adopted that provision of the Federal statutes, so that a party can only be arrested under this law with or without a warrant, in a particular State, under the same circumstances under which he could be arrested under section 1014.

What are some of the circumstances under which one may be arrested? Reference has been made to arrest without warrant, and that seemed to be at the beginning of this discussion the only question which concerned the proponents of this amendment. Can arrests be made without warrants? Ought arrests to be made of violators of the prohibition law without warrants? If the party is found in the commission of the offense, of course he ought to be arrested without warrant, as a man may be arrested, either by a peace officer or a private citizen, when he is found in the commission of any other offense. I turn to the statutes of my own State as to arrests and when arrests may be made without warrant, and I think they must be very similar to the statutes of every State in this Union. The law there provides that—

A peace officer may, without warrant, arrest a person:

1. For a public offense committed or attempted in his presence.

It does not make any difference whether it is a misdemeanor or a felony, he may be arrested if it is committed in the officer's presence. The law further provides that—

2. When the person arrested has committed a felony, although not in his presence.

3. When a felony has in fact been committed, and he has reasonable cause for believing the person arrested to have committed it.

A private person may arrest another:

1. For a public offense committed or attempted in his presence.

And as in the case of the officer, it does not make any difference whether it is a felony or a misdemeanor, the private person may arrest without a warrant.

The national prohibition act simply adopts section 1014 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and arrests can be made only in accordance with the laws of the States, as to the issuance of warrants and as to arrests made without a warrant, following the same process exactly.

As to search warrants, the Federal search warrant law provides penalties for searching where there is no probable cause. It assumes, of course, that there can be no search without a search warrant, and rightly assumes that there can be no search without a search warrant.

Section 21 provides that—

An officer who in executing a search warrant willfully exceeds his authority, or exercises it with unnecessary severity, shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than one year.

As I said a while ago, and in response to the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], I do not believe in, nor do I want to see, any discrimination between the enforcement of this law in regard to search warrants and ordinary warrants of arrest, or arrests without warrant, and the enforcement of any other Federal statute.

An officer may, without a search warrant, for the violation or alleged violation of some other law, wrongfully invade the premises of the citizen and commit an outrage in so doing. Why should we say with reference to the prohibition law that there shall be a penalty attached to that, where we do not say it as to other statutes?

Mr. POMERENE obtained the floor.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. POMERENE. I yield.

Mr. STANLEY. I think it is highly important that the Senate should hear the very elaborate discussion of the Senator from Ohio. I happen to know that this is a matter upon which he is thoroughly posted, and I think it of great importance to the country that Senators should hear his discussion. For that reason I make the point of no quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ball	Harrell	McKellar	Smith
Borah	Harrison	McNary	Smoot
Brandegee	Heflin	Nelson	Spencer
Broussard	Johnson	Nicholson	Stanfield
Bursum	Jones, Wash.	Norbeck	Stanley

Capper	Keyes	Overman	Townsend
Caraway	King	Polindexter	Trammell
Curtis	Ladd	Pomerene	Wadsworth
Dial	La Follette	Ransdell	Warren
Fletcher	Lenroot	Sheppard	Weller
Gerry	Lodge	Shortridge	Williams
Gooding	McCumber	Simmons	Willis

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CURTIS in the chair). Fifty-two Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The Senator from Ohio will proceed.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, when the eighteenth constitutional amendment was pending before the Senate I did not vote for it at that time for the one particular reason, above everything else, that up to that time Ohio had always voted against prohibition. It has always been my thought that Senators should be controlled, when it comes to the submission of constitutional amendments, by what seemed to be the prevailing opinion in their respective States. I realize that other Senators differ with me on that subject, and I have no quarrel with them because they do.

Everyone recognizes the stupendous evil of the liquor traffic. The eighteenth amendment was adopted and became a part of the fundamental law of the land. Since that time I have voted not only for the Volstead Act but, as I now recall, for every bill that came before the Senate of the United States having for its purpose the enforcement of the eighteenth amendment. I have been hoping that no bill would be presented having that purpose in view which would not meet my approval.

I purpose this afternoon to discuss this question in part from a constitutional standpoint and in part from a point of policy. I wish to say now, lest I may be misunderstood, that I have no sympathy whatsoever with the violation of this law or any other law.

An examination of the statutes of the several States, and perhaps the constitutions of most of the States, will show liquor in one form or another has been manufactured and sold for four general purposes, beverage, medicinal or pharmaceutical, sacramental, and industrial or manufacturing purposes. This fact must have been in the mind of the draftsman of the eighteenth amendment, for we find upon an examination of it that it prevents "the manufacture, sale, or transportation of intoxicating liquors within, the importation thereof into, or the exportation thereof from the United States and all territory subject to the jurisdiction thereof for beverage purposes."

In my humble judgment, when this amendment was ratified by the legislatures of the several States they had in mind the prohibition of the manufacture, sale, transportation, exportation, and importation for "beverage purposes." I dare say that it was never suggested that the amendment would be so construed as to prevent the manufacture and sale for either medicinal or pharmaceutical purposes, sacramental purposes, or industrial or manufacturing purposes.

I recognize fully the decisions of our Supreme Court bearing upon the subject. I think that we must construe not only this amendment of the Constitution but the decisions of the Supreme Court, having in mind the history of the traffic in intoxicating liquors. If it were intended by the Congress of the United States or by the legislatures when they ratified this amendment to prohibit the use of intoxicating liquors, either in whole or in part, for medicinal purposes, it seems to me that the draftsman would have so provided; but when the prohibition goes only to beverages, the presumption is that it was not intended to prohibit the manufacture and sale for other purposes.

I am not unmindful of the fact that in the Volstead Act the Congress limited the amount of the alcoholic content to one-half of 1 per cent. No objection, in my judgment, can be taken to that provision. I may say in passing that there is an amendment pending to this bill the purpose of which is to allow the manufacture of beer with an alcoholic content of 4 per cent and of wine with an alcoholic content, I believe, of 12 per cent. I can not support that amendment. I do not believe it would be constitutional. I do not believe that it is within the power of Congress to say as a matter of law that a beer or a wine which can be proven to be intoxicating is not intoxicating. I think if that amendment were adopted the courts without very much hesitation would hold it to be unconstitutional.

I recognize the fact that they have said that any liquor with an alcoholic content of one-half of 1 per cent is intoxicating, and I recognize the power of the Congress to pass laws which may not come within the letter of the Constitution, but which come within the spirit of it for the purpose of enforcing the provisions of the Constitution, but it can not be done for the purpose of destroying the Constitution.

The pending legislation provides that only spirituous and vinous liquors may be prescribed by a physician, and then only one-half pint of alcohol within a period of 10 days. This means that no matter what might be the necessities of his patient in his scientific judgment, if the physician were to prescribe anything in addition to one-half pint of alcohol within the period of 10 days, he would find himself amenable to the criminal provisions of the pending bill. He is absolutely forbidden to prescribe beer, ale, or porter, no matter what the alcoholic content.

The other day when the very learned Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] was discussing the question he cited in support of the constitutionality of the bill the case of Ruppert against Caffey and others, decided by the Supreme Court of the United States January 5, 1920. The court, in delivering that opinion, quotes from the case of the Purity Extract Co. v. Lynch (226 U. S., 192).

This case determined that such legislation of this character is valid, and set forth with clearness the constitutional ground upon which it rests. I read:

When a State exerting its recognized authority undertakes to suppress what it is free to regard as a public evil, it may adopt such measures having reasonable relation to that end as it may deem necessary in order to make its action effective.

It does not follow that because a transaction separately considered is innocuous it may not be included in a prohibition the scope of which is regarded as essential in the legislative judgment to accomplish a purpose within the admitted power of the Government.

I call especial attention to this language:

Measures having reasonable relation to that end.

The case of the Purity Extract Co. against Lynch arose in Mississippi. The legislature of that State had passed a law forbidding the manufacture and sale of any malt liquor, whether it was intoxicating or not. The purpose of that legislation, of course, was to prohibit the dealing in liquor for beverage purposes. I think the court was right in its holding, looking at it from a constitutional standpoint; but, so far as the eighteenth amendment is concerned, there is nothing in it which prohibits the manufacture or sale of any intoxicating liquor for medicinal purposes, for sacramental purposes, or for industrial purposes. Can it be said—and that must be the position of those who contend for the constitutionality of the pending bill—that in order to prevent the violation of the eighteenth amendment, which prohibits the sale of alcohol for beverage purposes, we may go further and prohibit the sale of liquor for medicinal purposes? If that position is taken, it must be because it is felt that course is necessary in order to prevent the sale of liquor for beverage purposes. Then, it is only one step further to say that under the same constitutional provision Congress may prevent the manufacture and sale of wines for sacramental purposes because that may lead to the violation of the eighteenth amendment.

Then, in the minds of some, Congress may go a step further and say "We will prohibit the manufacture of liquor for industrial or manufacturing purposes," because more danger to the community may arise from the manufacture of alcohol for industrial purposes than can possibly arise from the manufacture of beer for medicinal purposes.

Mr. KING. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. POMERENE. I yield.

Mr. KING. I was diverted for a moment and did not exactly learn the position of the Senator from Ohio with respect to the decision of the Supreme Court in construing the Volstead Act. The Senator may recall that during the consideration of that bill in the Senate a number of Senators took the position that Congress could only declare as an alcoholic beverage that which was in fact a beverage which was intoxicating, and that under the constitutional amendment it was not within the power of Congress to declare as intoxicating that which everybody conceded was not intoxicating?

Mr. POMERENE. Yes.

Mr. KING. Now, as a lawyer, not as a citizen, does the Senator approve of the decision of the Supreme Court, which in effect says that Congress has the unlimited power to declare that to be intoxicating which everybody knows is not intoxicating?

Mr. POMERENE. Yes, Mr. President; I think Congress has the right to pass such a law. I think the Supreme Court of the United States rightly held that law constitutional, because, bear in mind, we are dealing with the subject of beverages. I can cite the Senator from Utah to other decisions which carry out the thought that we may not only pass a statute which has for its purpose the enforcement of the provisions of the Constitution, but that Congress can go further and say that if there is something—here in this case a beverage—which by reason of its appearance, by reason of the package in which it is contained, by reason, perhaps, of its taste and smell, may encourage the violation of law and increase the difficulties of enforcing it, I think the Congress has the right to say that we may likewise prohibit its manufacture and sale.

Mr. KING. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield further to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. POMERENE. I yield.

Mr. KING. I do not think the Senator from Ohio can find the decisions that support that view. The Senator will find that the Supreme Court of the United States have upheld that doctrine as applied to the States, and have, so far as they have the right to speak upon the subject, affirmed the constitutionality of State statutes which have received the approval of the highest judicial tribunal of the State; but the Senator from Ohio appreciates the fact that the State, because of its plenary power, may deal with a subject with which the Federal Government may not deal. The Federal Government must put its finger upon the authority to deal with the subject. In this case that authority is the eighteenth amendment, which gives Congress the right to prohibit the manufacture and sale of alcoholic liquors for beverage purposes.

Mr. POMERENE. I recognize the fact that a distinction is drawn between the police power of the State and the limited powers of the Federal Government, generally speaking. Let me remind the Senator that when we adopted the eighteenth amendment we made it a part of the fundamental law of the land. By it a part of the police power is directly conferred upon the Congress. Such power was inherent in the States prior to the adoption of this amendment. That power is in part now vested in the Congress under the eighteenth amendment.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. POMERENE. Yes; I yield.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Does the Senator contend that the delegation of power to Congress to regulate the liquor traffic for beverage purposes includes its regulation for other purposes?

Mr. POMERENE. Speaking generally, no. I am not prepared to say how far the power might be extended. Thus far I have been trying to discuss this matter leading up to the question which is immediately involved in this bill, namely, the right to prohibit the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquor for medicinal purposes.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield further to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. POMERENE. I yield.

Mr. BROUSSARD. If the Senator will permit one more observation or question—I will reduce it to that form—the delegation of authority under the Constitution to the Congress is to regulate the manufacture, use, transportation, and sale of intoxicating liquor, and the Congress has defined what an intoxicating liquor is by adopting what to me appears to be an absurd position, that forty-nine one-hundredths of 1 per cent is not intoxicating but fifty-one one-hundredths of 1 per cent is intoxicating.

Mr. POMERENE. Yes.

Mr. BROUSSARD. And, as I understood the decision, the Supreme Court held that the definition of what was an intoxicating beverage was one within the discretion of the Congress. Is not that the correct interpretation?

Mr. POMERENE. I think that is perhaps correct; yes; for the purpose of enforcing the Constitution, but not for the purpose of destroying or defeating it. Now, let me go a step further. If it were within the mind of the Congress of the United States to prohibit the manufacture and sale of beer for medicinal purposes, it would have been easy enough to say so; but the fact that Congress limited the prohibition against intoxicating liquor to beverage purposes clearly justifies the inference that it would be perfectly legitimate to manufacture and sell it for other purposes.

Again I do not want to be misunderstood. I do not think that it is or ought to be within the power of a physician in his professional capacity to write prescriptions for beverage purposes under the pretext that it was for medicinal purposes. I recognize the fact that it is necessary to hem around these privileges with proper restrictions, just as we did in the case of narcotics, and I had hoped that the committee could see its way clear, instead of placing the limitations for medicinal purposes which are contained in the pending bill, would put in it some provisions which were more reasonable and would permit the legitimate application of these remedies by physicians in the proper practice of their profession.

Mr. President, while the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] has taken the position that this bill is constitutional under the holding of the Supreme Court in the case of the Purity Extract Co. against Lynch, we, I think, must all agree that the facts were very different in the Mississippi case from those involved in the pending bill. The court said in that case that the legislature might adopt "such measures having reasonable relation to that end"; but can it be said, when we know that liquor of all kinds has been used by doctors in the practice of medicine, that we can by act of Congress prohibit the use of medicine by physicians in the practice of their profession and say that such a law has "reasonable relation" to the prohibition of the traffic for beverage purposes? That point, it seems to me, marks the distinction between the two cases. Liquor for beverage purposes is one thing; liquor for medicinal purposes is quite another. To forbid the one ought not to destroy the other.

I recognize the fact, Senators, that in this day and generation I ought not even to refer to the Constitution; but I am not so constituted, and I am not willing at this time in the history of this legislation to say, as those who support this bill must say, that beer and porter and ale have no place in the art of medicine.

I understand, of course, that there were certain hearings in the House, and certain witnesses came before the committee, one of them an eminent doctor, who said that he never heard that beer was prescribed as a medicine, and he was supported by a resident of the District of Columbia, who seemed to be very much opposed to beer; and I judge from a reading of his testimony that it was largely because when he was a young man in Germany he learned to drink beer to such an extent that it spoiled his manly beauty.

Mr. President, when physicians will appear before a committee and say that they have never heard of beer being prescribed as a medicine for a sick patient, the only comment I care to make is that for the sake of their patients I hope they know more about the practice of medicine than they do about the history of the practice of medicine.

With all due respect to the committees that have had this matter in charge, I make bold to say that no such investigation has been made by either branch of the Congress of the United States as will justify its Members in saying that beer and ale and porter have no place in the medical art.

Mr. President, let me call attention to what a few of the authorities have said upon that subject. The authorities I cite apply in part to whisky and brandy and in part to beer, more particularly the former; but they will have application to the limit that is placed upon the right of the physician to prescribe alcohol in the pending bill. The limit in the bill is one-half of 1 pint of alcohol in 10 days.

Mr. BALL. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. POMERENE. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BALL. I should like to ask the Senator if every work on therapeutics of any repute in the United States does not name alcohol and its derivatives as one of the principal medicines?

Mr. POMERENE. I never had any doubt about it until a few Congressmen and Senators turned into doctors overnight.

Mr. BALL. In all of my medical studies I have always found alcohol designated as one of the principal medicines. No other medicine is given that will take its place under certain conditions.

Mr. POMERENE. Will the Senator allow me now to ask him a question? Does his statement apply to beer and ale and porter as well as to wine and whisky?

Mr. BALL. It does to some extent, Mr. President. It is given in all works on therapeutics as a medical agent. It is not as important as some of the stronger forms of alcohol.

Mr. POMERENE. The Senator is a practicing physician, and has been practicing medicine for many years—

Mr. BALL. I have practiced medicine for 35 years.

Mr. POMERENE. And I will not ask him to say so, but I do know that he has been a very successful practitioner.

Mr. President, I want to read an excerpt from "Physiological Aspects of the Liquor Problem," an investigation made by and under the direction of W. O. Atwater, John S. Billings, H. P. Bowditch, R. H. Chittenden, and W. H. Welch, subcommittee of the committee of fifty to investigate the liquor problem. This committee was appointed some years ago.

In volume 2, pages 210 to 211, appears the following:

The patient was a young, very good-looking girl, who entered the hospital very ill with double pneumonia, both lungs being solidified below the scapula. She was so very sick that she was put in ward 24, one of the long, one-story wards, cut up into small rooms, so that each patient might be by himself. My house student told me he could not get her to swallow anything of a quieting nature; in fact, she would swallow nothing. She was evidently mildly delirious, quiet, with a quick, feeble, irregular pulse and short, embarrassed breathing. When I spoke to her she gave me no answer. She made no complaint. I asked my assistant to bring me some milk. I presented a teaspoon of it to her lips, and she immediately clicked her teeth and tried to turn her head away so as not to swallow a drop of it. I did not care to use any force in such a case, and so did not urge her any further. I then told my assistant to bring me some brandy. I mixed a little of it with water in a teaspoon and presented it to her lips. A drop or two got into her mouth, and she did not reject it, but took the whole of it without any difficulty. I saw I had my cue. I directed the nurse to give her as much brandy and water as she would take, carefully watching for any signs of overstimulation, and stopping if such indications appeared. The nurse's report the next morning was that she had taken half a bottle of brandy without any unpleasant effects, and nothing else. She had slept very little, as had been the case for several nights. My order was, "Continue treatment." The next morning the report was a quiet night, with very little sleep. She had taken in 24 hours another pint of brandy. The same order, "Continue treatment," was given. The report on the third day was the same. The patient had slept more, and was evidently doing well. The order to continue treatment was repeated, but as the patient was drinking the most expensive French brandy I felt justified in changing the stimulant to Bourbon whisky, which was considerably cheaper. On the fourth morning the nurse reported that "three-quarters" of a bottle of Bourbon whisky (or a pint and a half of the liquor) had been taken in 24 hours, without any unpleasant effect, and the patient was sleeping better. And so it went on for the remaining three days in the week, the patient having a pint and a half of whisky each 24 hours, with excellent effect.

Why, that was more by one-half in one day than the doctors can legally give under this bill in 10 days.

She was sleeping much better, had little or no fever, and a good pulse. On the morning of the eighth day the patient absolutely refused to take any more stimulant and began to take suitable food. Her convalescence was rapid and she got entirely well.

Of course that doctor would have been a criminal if the pending bill had been in force at that time, and the patient probably would have died.

Let me read from another:

Excerpts from a paper on Alcohol Medication, by Dr. Abraham Jacobi, in American Medicine, September, 1913. From "The Whole Truth about Alcohol," by George Elliot Flint, pages 119 to 124.

I am not going to read all of this.

A few stray specimens of my observations are as follows: With one of my most respected colleagues I saw 35 years ago a boy of 5 years. Membranes covered his fauces and mouth and part of his lips, and were visible in the nares. Round the neck were big lymph body swellings, now known to all of us as the sure proof of thorough mixed infection. Some membranes could be removed by forcible injections into the nose. It had been bleeding and oozing, the odor was foul. The second heart sound, still slightly perceptible, pulse 160, hardly felt at the wrist. Boy restless in his semicomatose, tossing about, feet bluish, not cold, covered with erosions and subcutaneous hemorrhages of different sizes. His whole surface discolored, from drab to blue; hemorrhages small and large in and under the skin. No intestinal hemorrhage. Urine could not be obtained. My friend told me I was not called by him but by the family of the dying boy—

His friend was the family physician.

He was going down town, and on his way would order the undertaker to send the coffin after dark. I begged him not to do that, but to wait until to-morrow. The undertaker, however, came after dark and left, disgusted. Meanwhile I had permission to act. The boy's stomach retained my whisky, from one to two teaspoonfuls every 15 or 25 minutes, diluted in water, occasionally in milk or coffee, and his rectum retained a few doses. Within a day he took a pint and a half, perhaps more. We kept on, the boy and I. He was alive when I happened to meet him 20 years afterwards.

This doctor would have been lodged in jail if he had lived in this day, when Congressmen and Senators want to tell the doctor at the bedside of a dying patient what he shall give and what he shall not give.

Mr. BALL. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. POMERENE. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BALL. In my own experience I have known a patient suffering from typhoid fever in a very low form to take as much as a quart of whisky in 24 hours. The test is always the odor of alcohol or whisky on the breath. With the high fevers they burn it up and it is all used for food. The moment you get the odor on the breath then you are using an intoxicant. Otherwise, it is a medicine; and there is but the one test as to when you are giving more than you should. I am confident that in those cases whisky or alcohol has saved many lives.

Mr. POMERENE. Yes; and if my distinguished friend from Delaware were to prescribe after this bill goes into effect as he did then he would be a criminal, and if he had complied with the present law his patient would have been dead.

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, it appears to me that a physician is placed between two fires—one to do his duty as a physician, the other to protect himself from prison—if this bill shall pass.

Mr. POMERENE. Yes.

Mr. BALL. The patients that he receives early in the 90 days will receive good medical treatment. Those received later in the 90 days will take their chances.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. POMERENE. I yield.

Mr. STERLING. I should like to ask the Senator from Delaware whether or not there is any other known remedy in such cases which can be taken instead of spirituous liquor?

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, there is no medicine which possesses both stimulating and nourishing qualities as does alcohol. We have a number of stimulants which act quickly for a short time, like strychnia, but there is no medicine which will take the place of alcohol in being both a stimulant and a nourishing liquid.

Mr. STERLING. Then why, may I ask the Senator from Delaware, did the American Medical Association, at its convention in 1917, declare against the use of alcohol or spirituous liquors as medicine?

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, I can not answer that.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I expect to answer the Senator in a moment on that subject. I have heard that statement before here on the floor of the Senate, and I am amazed that Senators did not give us the whole truth about it. I propose to read from "The supplemental prohibition enforcement bill," a brief presented by Wayne B. Wheeler. This was the resolution which was passed in 1917 by the American Medical Association. I read:

Whereas we believe that the use of alcohol as a beverage is detrimental to the human economy; and
Whereas its use in therapeutics as a tonic, or a stimulant, or as a food has no scientific basis: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the use of alcohol as a therapeutic agent should be discouraged.

I do not know the circumstance surrounding the adoption of that preamble and resolution at the time, but let us see what the American Medical Association did afterwards. My authority is Wayne B. Wheeler. He says in this brief:

At its recent meeting in Boston this year (1921) when a motion was made to reaffirm the action of 1917 the matter was referred to a committee to report next year.

And somebody on the floor of the Senate said, "That is the record of the American Medical Association," but they did not tell the Senate that the great American Medical Association was so uncertain about its position of 1917 that they did not dare to even reaffirm the action they took in 1917, but referred it to a committee for investigation, to report next year. This action can mean only one thing—the American Medical Association in 1921 is not satisfied with the action taken by it in 1917. Yet the Congress of the United States, in anticipation of the future action of the American Medical Association next year, wants to penalize the good doctors of this country because they may want to give, forsooth, a gill of whisky more than the Congress of the United States in its wisdom is willing that they shall give.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. POMERENE. I yield.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I might observe at this point that perhaps the doubts which overtook the American Medical Association, and which were evident at their convention this year, as contrasted with their attitude of 1917, may be due to the fact that in the interval of time the country has suffered from two tremendous influenza epidemics, when every physician, or nearly every physician, found himself compelled to prescribe whisky.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, carrying out the thought that was expressed by the Senator from New York, I have on my desk two letters from one of the ablest physicians in Ohio, in which he said, "Years ago, when I could treat my patients and give them the liquor that I, as a physician, thought they ought to have, I was having very much better results than I am now under the restrictions which are permitted by the law."

Mr. BROUSSARD. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. POMERENE. I yield.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Will the Senator permit me to read just a very short paragraph of the action taken by the American Medical Editors' Association in Boston in June of this year?

Mr. POMERENE. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. BROUSSARD. This is from the Medical Record of June 18, 1921:

PROTESTS AGAINST THE VOLSTEAD ACT.

At the annual meeting of the American Medical Editors' Association in Boston last week resolutions were adopted declaring that the medical restrictions of the Volstead Act, together with its various administrative and other interpretations, are obstacles to the free practice of therapeutics, and have reacted to the detriment of society and the public health; that the American Medical Editors' Association protests against further undue regulation of therapeutic procedure by statute or by administrative interpretation or regulation; and that the association requests of the proper authorities a review and revision of such existing statutes, rules, and regulations as may be unduly restrictive of the therapeutic judgment and procedure of physicians.

Mr. POMERENE. But this has not had the approval of the Judiciary Committee of the Senate yet.

Let me read again from the same authority from which I was reading a moment ago, George Eliot Flint, in the book, "The Whole Truth About Alcohol." This is interesting as applied to the limitations in this bill:

A girl of 7 years I found in about the same condition 30 years ago. She was a patient of one of our great physicians who, when he died suddenly a year ago, proved to the world that there are some men who are indispensable. He said, "Now, here I have given your whisky, but she will die." How much is she taking? "Besides her other drugs she is taking as much as half a pint each of these two days, and retains it." Very well, just continue, and I will give her my additional half pint. So we did. She took a pint or more daily and got well.

Again:

A boy of 3 years with the formidable symptoms of mixed infection was "given up." I held out the hope of recovery provided the doctor would succeed in getting into him, with other appropriate medication, at least a pint of whisky daily. He did succeed. Five days afterwards the father called in despair, saying his child was alive but insane. So he was. The boy was better, in fact on the way to recovery, but drunk. To me that was a welcome occurrence, for I knew, and want my readers to know, that no amount of whisky will lead to intoxication when its effect is wanted to combat sepsis. I repeat: No amount of alcohol will intoxicate a thoroughly septic person. As soon as my little patient did not longer require his big dose of alcohol, it made him "insane," intoxicated. I had enjoyed that experience before in many cases and have since. Maybe my first case of the kind was that of a refined lady who had typhoid fever 50 years ago. I learned the alcohol practice from Dr. Ernst Schilling, who 60 years ago treated many hundreds of cases of typhoid and typhus among the immigrants on Wards Island. My lady patient, thoroughly septic, took a quart of whisky daily 10 days in succession until the beginning of her recovery; no other drop since.

Again the doctor was a criminal. He should not have saved that patient's life, if this bill is right. He ought to have let that patient die.

The doctor goes on to say:

I want these specimens of alcohol treatment to suffice for my purpose, which is to make facts tell their stories. My cases of thorough sepsis relieved or cured by alcohol extend over more than half a century. My cases have not all been cured. I belong to the class that has to meet failures. But I have seen what was considered hopeless cases to take a favorable turn. There are in diphtheria cases which are not influenced by antitoxin in small or big doses. That class of cases is not always hopeless when the doctor has hope and discrimination and the courage to fight infection and to cheat an undertaker. I refuse to deal in theories. I can not tell the cause of the antiseptic action of alcoholic beverages when administered in sufficient doses. I merely refer to occurrences and observations extending over half a century and more. Let somebody else explain. Meanwhile take the hint.

Now, I wish to read something which my memorandum shows was copied from "The Whole Truth About Alcohol," pages 124 and 125:

Dr. Beverley Robinson, emeritus clinical professor of medicine, University Bellevue Hospital Medical College, remarks anent alcohol medication in severe cases of grippe pneumonia:

"For stimulants or heart tonics there are only two worth considering—one is strophanthus, the other is old brandy. The strophanthus should be given in small doses, 1 to 2 minims, every two or three hours, at the same time as the brandy. The latter may be given in doses from a teaspoonful to a tablespoonful in a very little water, or Vichy water, ice cold."

And so there are physicians of the highest standing who still believe in alcohol as a stimulant, as a tonic, and as a saver of life when all other medication fails.

Dr. Kate Mitchell, member of the British Medical Temperance Association, in her book, "The Drink Question: A large majority of the drugs in the Pharmacopoeia—the extracts and tinctures and spirits—are made from alcohol, which we are taking in small doses when we are prescribed these different medicines. The claims of alcohol are indisputable and manifold. In our denunciation of its use as a beverage we must not overlook its value in other directions, as such a proceeding would rather weaken than enforce the arguments of temperance reformers."

Let me read from another authority, "Personal Hygiene Designed for Undergraduates," and I recognize that there are different opinions which may be expressed in some of these authorities. This is by Alfred A. Woodhull, brigadier general, United States Army, lately colonel, Medical Department, United States Army. I read only a paragraph:

The important difference between starch or sugar and alcohol as food is that the former may be taken up to the limits of digestion and assimilation, but the latter acts upon the nervous system in health so peculiarly that it is impossible to take enough to be of any nutritive value. But in certain conditions of disease large quantities of alcohol are not only tolerated but sustain life through a stimulating and a possibly nutritive effect.

Mr. President, I still have some other medical authorities, and, because we have in the Senate a committee that has not examined into the scientific side of this question, and has tried to minimize the effect of alcohol in its various forms in the treatment of disease, I am going to take the time to read from a few more of them.

Dr. Horatio C. Wood, LL. D., emeritus professor of materia medica and therapeutics in the University of Pennsylvania, member of the National Academy of Science, in his work on Therapeutics, Its Principles and Practice, as revised by Horatio C. Wood, Jr., M. D., associate professor of pharmacology in the University of Pennsylvania, assistant physician to the Philadelphia General Hospital, fourteenth edition, beginning on page 202, discusses the therapeutics of alcohol, as follows:

"Therapeutics: Our knowledge of the physiological properties of alcohol shows that its chief therapeutic value in acute disease is as a stimulant, a temporary impartor of power, which will enable the system to stand some strain of short duration, to bridge over some period of weakness.

"The cases to which it is especially adapted may be divided into three classes:

"First. Those in which there is a temporary loss of heart power, as in fainting from exhaustion, loss of blood, or other cause. In these cases the alcoholic stimulant should, if possible, be given hot and not much diluted; with it should also be exhibited some more rapidly acting diffusible stimulant, such as ammonia.

"Second. Those acute diseases in which the powers of the system are in danger of being used up; to aid in the digestion of food and in the maintenance of power. Alcohol, as has already been stated, is to a certain extent a food—but it will not of itself sustain life for a long time, and should in adynamic disease always, unless for special reasons, be combined with milk, or occasionally with eggs. One great source of its value in these diseases is the power it imparts of assimilating food, and in milk punch are furnished the stimulant to digestion and the most perfect food known for digestion. This use of alcohol is apart from its office in the lowest stage of fever as a heart and nerve stimulant. Employed for this purpose it is useful in all stages of the adynamic fevers, such as typhus and typhoid. By the exhibition of 3 or 4 ounces of milk every two hours, with 1 or 2 drachms of brandy or whisky, from the beginning of the attack, in many cases the development of the severe adynamic symptoms may be prevented."

Some of our congressional doctors deny that—

A. Ott claims to have experimentally determined upon a fever patient that the value of alcohol as an albumin-saving food is equal to its isodynamic equivalent of a pure food hydrocarbon:

"In the advanced stages of pneumonia, pyemia, exanthematous fever, and other acute diseases, when the typhoid state is well developed, alcohol should be given boldly, to quiet by stimulation the nervous and circulatory systems, to afford a food which will in a measure replace the natural pabulum, to aid in the digestion of milk and other simple nourishment, to aid in lowering temperature; in a word, to enable the system to stand the drain upon its vital powers, and at the same time to check such drain."

Roberts Bartholow, M. A., M. D., LL. D., professor emeritus of materia medica, general therapeutics, and hygiene, in the Jefferson Medical College, of Philadelphia; formerly professor of materia medica and therapeutics and of the practice of medicine in the Medical College of Ohio, etc., in his work A Practical Treatise on Materia Medica and Therapeutics, eleventh edition, discusses the physiological action of alcohol, beginning on page 570, 571, 572, 573, 574, 575. On page 575 he discusses the therapy of alcohol. Among other things he says:

"Alcohol in small doses is a useful stomachic tonic. It is best taken for this purpose after or with meals. It is especially serviceable in the feeble digestion of old people, the atonic dyspepsia of the sedentary, and in the slow and inefficient digestion of convalescence from acute diseases."

"Excellent results are obtained from the use of brandy in the apoplexy of infants."

"Alcohol in some form is constantly prescribed in low conditions in fevers, acute inflammations, and depressing maladies of all kinds."

"It may be used to relieve pain, to promote sleep, and to quiet delirium."

"When wakefulness is due to a condition of cerebral anemia, a full dose of some alcoholic fluid, whisky or brandy, will procure sound and refreshing sleep. In some subjects a glass of ale or beer answers better."

But you can not use it under the pending bill. Let these sick people die. That is what this bill means, that they shall have no relief. I shall have something to say a little later on that subject.

On page 577 he says:

As alcohol stops waste, promotes constructive metamorphosis by increasing the appetite and the digestive power, and favors the deposition of fat, it is directly indicated in chronic wasting diseases, especially in phthisis. Clinical experience is in accord with physiological data: Alcohol is an important remedy in the various forms of pulmonary phthisis.

So far as the alcohol is concerned, beer, ale, and porter correspond in physiological actions to the spirituous liquors and to wines. As they contain malt extract, their nutritive value is greater than spirits and wines. An important constituent, the hop, being an aromatic bitter, the tonic and stomachic qualities of these malt liquors are also greater than their congeners. The process of fermentation, however, lessens in a remarkable degree the nutritive and stomachic qualities of the constituents which enter into the composition of malt liquors. Their value as foods is much exaggerated by the habitual consumers.

That is what troubled Dr. Wiley when he testified before the House committee. He said, in substance, it spoiled his manly form, and after he acquired the habit he became obese.

They increase the appetite and favor the deposition of fat. Although the malt beverages do not cause to anything like the same extent the alterations in the nervous centers produced by the spirituous, they induce other and almost as important structural changes. They set up in the organism fatty degeneration of various tissues, notably of the liver and heart. The habitual beer consumer is known by his obesity, his flushed face, embarrassed breathing, puffy hands, yellow conjunctiva, etc.; he is usually short lived, and the end is reached by hepatic and cardiac disorders. It is certainly true that a moderate amount of beer may be taken daily for a lifetime without any obvious impairment of the functions, but excessive use produces with great certainty the unfavorable effects above described.

I am not contending that men should be permitted to drink to excess. I have no interest in the subject as a beverage. My belief is that the medical profession should not have its hands tied at this stage of legislative knowledge on the subject.

In discussing the therapy of beer, ale, and porter, he says, on page 583:

Beer, ale, and porter are not usually prescribed in acute maladies. They are, however, much and justly esteemed as stomachic tonics and restoratives in chronic wasting diseases—for example, in convalescence from acute diseases and surgical injuries, in cases of profuse and protracted suppuration, prolonged lactation, diseases of the joints, scrofula, phthisis, etc.

When wakefulness is due to cerebral anemia, a glass of beer or ale at bedtime will frequently produce satisfactory sleep.

Dr. Alfred A. Woodhull, A. M., M. D., LL. D., brigadier general, United States Army, retired, lately colonel, Medical Department, United States Army, in a little book entitled "Personal Hygiene," printed in 1906, discusses the subject of alcohol, beginning on page 183.

I shall only quote a few sentences as indicating his view of alcohol and beer.

On page 185 he says:

As stated, alcohol has qualities under certain circumstances that belong to food, but it is not the best food, and beyond very narrow limits it creates pernicious conditions. Still, when acting as food, the various exhibitions of energy proceed in an orderly way and neither antagonize each other nor take on irregular forms.

Again, on page 186, he said:

But in certain conditions of disease large quantities of alcohol are not only tolerated but sustain life through a stimulating and a possibly nutritive effect. The foregoing states the whole case in favor of alcohol as nutriment. Its potential food value lies within three or four glasses of highly diluted whisky or as many glasses of beer, taken with meals in the course of 24 hours by fully developed men, and it only considers its possible nutritive value under very favorable conditions. Some authorities limit the permissible amount to a glass of wine or a pint of beer in 24 hours.

On page 187 he said:

Small quantities of spirits may act as supplementary fuel food, but it is more expensive than ordinary food and dangers accompany it.

There is no one of these authorities from whose lines I have quoted that does not condemn—so far as I have been able to read them, and I went over them rather cursorily with the aid of an assistant—excessive drinking. I am talking about alcoholic remedies at the bedside of the sick patient, and I do not desire any other construction to be placed upon the remarks which I may be making.

Now, Mr. President, let me go a step further. I wish to say, so there may be no misunderstanding about it, that about two weeks ago I dictated a letter to every county medical society in Ohio. There are 88 counties, and presumably one society in each of those 88 counties. This is a season of the year, I have been told by several of them, at which they do not have meetings. I have not heard from a good many of them. I have heard probably from eight or nine. In some of those societies, two or three of them, they were unanimously opposed to beer and favored the bill. In some others they appeared, perhaps, as two-thirds and one-third. I am going to read a few observations from some of those men.

The statement has been made here on the floor of the Senate, and it is correct on the face of it, that a very large majority, I do not remember the figures, but a very large majority of the physicians have not taken out any license to prescribe intoxicating liquors, and the inference is drawn that only those who did take out the license believe in it. How manifestly unfair that is. I say that not on my own authority, but because certain prominent physicians in Ohio have said to me that they preferred not to prescribe any liquors rather than to have the Congress of the United States say to them, "You shall only prescribe so much." In other words, they felt they had more confidence in their own judgment than they have in the judgment of a congressional Æsculapius.

However, I do not think that position is right. My own judgment about it is that a physician, if he has a patient whom he thinks needs liquor, ought to comply with the law to the extent that he can, and prescribe it.

In further support of the position which I have taken as to what may be the sentiment prevailing in the medical profession, I am going to read a letter from the secretary of one of the county medical societies:

In re your inquiry, not one of the physicians of ——— County has a permit to prescribe alcoholics in any form. They all thought that it would be a nuisance and did not want to make themselves liable to the temptation of the urgings of their friends, but each and every one of us would like to have the privilege of being in a position to furnish in some legitimate manner such form of alcohol as the occasion might demand.

Further, I believe every man of us does not believe alcohol to be indispensable, but on most occasions a better substitute can be employed, but there are times when each one may feel that it is [needed] indicated. I am not speaking now officially for the society, but believe I express their feelings in the matter, and, as we do not have a meeting until September, I take it upon myself to answer your inquiry.

Mr. President, I have here a statement which was printed in the Lancet, which is one of the leading medical journals of Great Britain. I have compared it with the text in the journal and know it to be correct:

We have received the following document for publication in the Lancet. As an expression of scientific opinion it deserves to be considered carefully by medical practitioners. The signatories are well-known members of the profession, and the importance of the questions involved, alike from the medical and social point of view, can hardly be overestimated.

I read now the statement:

In view of the statements frequently made as to the present medical opinion regarding alcohol and alcoholic beverages, we, the undersigned, think it desirable to issue the following short statement on the subject, a statement which we believe represents the opinions of the leading clinical teachers as well as of the great majority of medical practitioners.

Recognizing that in prescribing alcohol, the requirements of the individual must be the governing rule, we are convinced of the correctness of the opinion so long and generally held, that in disease, alcohol is a rapid and trustworthy restorative. In many cases it may be truly described as life-preserving, owing to its power to sustain cardiac and nervous energy, while protecting the wasting nitrogenous tissues.

As an article of diet we hold that the universal belief of civilized mankind that the moderate use of alcoholic beverages is, for adults, usually beneficial, is amply justified.

We deplore the evils resulting from the abuse of alcoholic beverages; but it is obvious that there is nothing, however beneficial, which does not by excess become injurious.

I ask that the names of the prominent physicians at the end of this paper may be incorporated in the Record in my remarks without reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JONES of Washington) in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The names referred to are as follows:

T. McCall Anderson, M. D., regius professor of medicine, University of Glasgow; Alfred G. Barrs; William H. Bennett, K. C. V. O., F. R. C. S.; James Crichton-Browne; W. E. Dixon; Dyce Duckworth, M. D., LL. D.; Thomas R. Fraser, M. D., F. R. S.; T. R. Glynn; W. R. Gowers, M. D., F. R. S.; W. F. Halliburton, M. D., LL. D., F. R. C. P.; F. R. S., professor of physiology, King's College, London; Jonathan Hutchinson; Robert Hutchinson; Edmund Owen, LL. D., F. R. C. S.; P. H. Pye-Smith; Fred. T. Roberts, M. D., B. Sc., F. R. C. P.; Edgemoor Venning, F. R. C. S.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, thus far I have seen fit to quote from leading medical writers. I have some letters here which bring the subject down to date. I desire that we may understand this question, and I want to be perfectly fair about the matter. I am not a physician, though I believe I know a little about the subject; and if I am wrong about this I should like to be set right.

The other day there was read on the floor of the Senate a letter from Dr. J. H. J. Upham, chairman of the committee on public policy and legislation, professor of medicine in the Ohio State University, to Representative VOLSTEAD, under date of May 10, 1921. That letter has been previously read and Senators will have it in mind. Before I knew of that letter I wrote to Dr. Upham, among others, and I want Senators to note his reply. He confirms what he said in his letter to Representative VOLSTEAD, and he is one of the men who evidently does not believe in alcoholic treatment. I think I will read, so that there may be no misunderstanding, the text of his letter to Representative VOLSTEAD:

The Ohio State Medical Association, representing 4,500 regular physicians, indorses overwhelmingly the prohibition of the liquor traffic for beverage purposes, and can see no excuse for the use of beer or other malt liquors as medical remedies. Personally, as a teacher in a medical school, I have taught for years that any supposed indications for their use would be satisfactorily met in other ways.

Under date of July 20 he wrote me:

In reply to your letter of recent day concerning proposed antibeer legislation, I can only reiterate my statement to Mr. VOLSTEAD that the Ohio State Medical Association has gone on record as supporting prohibition, and believes that beer never had any standing as medicine, and the attempt to classify it as such is clearly a misrepresentation.

Then follows this paragraph:

There is a growing feeling of resentment at the continued imposition of restrictions on medical practice, however, inasmuch as relatively very few physicians in Ohio have violated the letter or the spirit of the prohibition laws; certainly no more than the natural incidence of moral crookedness in any group of a thousand men. Many of our members feel that they could be safely trusted to prescribe spirituous liquors with judgment and propriety, and perhaps a few conscientiously believe in the efficacy of beer in carefully selected cases. The general sentiment, however, I believe, is that, while it might be welcome to some as a beverage, the medical profession is opposed to bearing the onus of the return of beer under the cloak of medicine.

Mr. President, I do not favor the return of beer as a beverage; it can not, I think, be returned under our Constitution, if for no other reason. I am talking about the efficacy or the inefficacy of different intoxicants as medical remedies.

Now, let me go a step further. Dr. Upham, I believe, was at one time the president of the association. He signed his letters to me as chairman of the committee on public policy and legislation of the Ohio State Medical Association. He is an honorable gentleman; but I have a letter here from Wells Teachnor, M. D., of Columbus, Ohio, who is now the president of the Ohio State Medical Association, and there are no abler doctors anywhere than there are in the State of Ohio. He says:

DEAR SENATOR: Beer is and has been a recognized medicinal agent for many years by all therapeutists and should be standardized and classified as such. Reference: Roberts, Bartholow, or other standard textbooks on materia medica—

I read from Dr. Bartholow's work a while ago—

This is my view of the question: No one has been officially authorized to speak for the Ohio State Medical Association as an organization.

Very sincerely, yours,

WELLS TEACHNOR.

Mr. President, let me go a step further. Another prominent Ohio doctor, of State-wide reputation, writes me—and I am only going to read two paragraphs from his letter—as follows:

I believe the medical profession unanimously approve of prohibition of whisky as a beverage and legislation against the saloons. To all honest physicians 100 prescriptions for prescribing whisky in 90 days are more than adequate.

I think that is true. I believe if I were drafting this bill I would place a lower limit on the number of prescriptions that can be given than this bill contains.

The majority of the profession know that good beer, with a low grade of alcohol, is of great benefit to a vast number of people.

Beer made with distilled water, containing hops and malt, is a tonic and is very beneficial in many wasting diseases. I have many patients who I believe have been benefited by the daily use of good beer.

Let me read from another reply in answer to a letter which I wrote to a physician who has a standing in his profession which no man who knows him would dare to question. He says:

I shall not stop to argue the question, but content myself with saying that I am absolutely convinced that I have seen good from beer administration to the sick. Right now I have on my list several aged patients who are slowly sinking; can't take nourishment; thoughts of any food or medicine repulsive. In every one I have experimentally suggested article after article of food, bringing only expressions of disgust. In every one, without a single exception, when I mentioned beer the facial expressions brightened up and promptly came the responses, "Can you get me some? I believe that would taste good."

Beer judiciously used is without doubt beneficial. Not one of these old people has been a beer drinker. I am somewhat doubtful as to the prescription business as to beer. It ought to be placed on sale under a high license, the license to be forever revoked in case the dispenser sold to any one individual above a statutory limit.

This prescribing business in narcotics, as well, is disgusting; for example:

The red tape wound around morphine administration. Do you know that the Harrison Act includes on its list "apomorphin"? Apomorphin is an emetic. Can you imagine anyone becoming addicted to the use of a drug that is emetic only?

In my judgment many legislators' views are formed not by the right or wrong of a question, not by the sense or the nonsense involved, but by the way the political wind at home is blowing.

Let me read from another. This is from an Ohio physician, also a prominent physician:

The society here feels that no layman can with right say that a doctor can or can not prescribe anything which he may think of value to a patient.

I shall not read the rest of it because I do not want to offend the rules of the Senate.

Another doctor in Columbus writes:

In answer to your communication of a few days ago, I will say that I am sure there are some cases of illness that are benefited by beer. If legislation could be enacted whereby such a medicinal agent could be prescribed without the abuse of such privileges it would be commendable.

Personally I believe it is an extreme view of the matter to say that beer has no place as a medicinal agent.

Mr. President, I am going to read one more letter, not from a physician, but from a man who is known to most of you, who lost his father some years ago. He was the victim of a cancerous growth that involved all his vital organs. He writes me with regard to this case:

My father, a resident of another State, died on March 31, 1917, of cancer of the abdomen. At the time of his death he lacked a few months of being 80 years old. During the close of his illness, under the progressive stages of the disease, he was without appetite and grew constantly weaker. He had intermittent spells of nausea, attended with very great sickness and suffering. It became almost impossible to get him to take food at all. We tried in every way to coax his appetite by setting before him the table delicacies he once enjoyed, but he repelled them one after another. Nothing tasted good to him—that is, nothing but beer.

Our family physician—

may have belonged to the type of doctors who would now be called old-fashioned, for he prescribed beer for my father, and advised us never to be without a supply in the house. Whenever my father was asked if he would enjoy a little beer, he nearly always would reply, "I believe I would." He would become brighter and stronger after partaking of this tonic, and it was apparent that it had a beneficial effect in aiding digestion, and particularly in dispelling the gases that caused the nausea. So, on the advice of the old-fashioned doctor, I had the best bottled beer sent to my father during his long illness, and I personally know he derived much benefit from it.

Can any of our over-zealous reformers really have the heart to say that I am guilty of moral obliquity because I provided this beneficial tonic and restorative for a dying old man? Does not this typical case strike you as affording some proof, at least, that it would not be right nor in the best interest of society to put an absolute ban on beer as a medicinal agent?

Assume, for the sake of the argument, that a dear old father or any of the dear ones at home in the family of any of the Senators who are now trying to put an inhibition upon beer, ale, and porter was on a sick bed, it may be a dying bed, and the doctor said, "A little beer would comfort; it would do some good"; I wonder what those Senators would think of this legislation under those circumstances?

Mr. President, in discussing this subject with a gentleman who favors it insistently, he met the objections against it by saying: "Beer is no good. Alcohol is better. Pure malt that is nonintoxicating will supply the food value. Alcohol can be taken in other forms." In other words, each of these ingredients taken separately, in his judgment, would bring about the same result that would happen in the proper combination. Who believes that kind of silly twaddle? On the same theory the good housewife could take the flour and bake it separately, and take the yeast and the salt, and instead of making bread let her family eat the baked flour, and then take the yeast and on top of that take the salt. It would be just as good. It would be relished by the family.

Let me illustrate again. In the all-pervading atmosphere we have the life-giving and the life-sustaining oxygen. In the mechanical world and in the medical world we have carbon, and pure carbon is administered to many patients for certain stomachic troubles. The oxygen is life-giving and life-sustaining; the carbon is itself a remedial agent; but you combine the oxygen with the carbon as carbon dioxide and you have a most vicious poison.

Oh, yes; some of these medical agents have come around—no, not medical agents; men who know nothing about the subject—trying to tell us what should be done. Senators, I think the wickedest speech I ever heard in my life was made by a prominent lawyer of the West who one day made a "wet" speech. He discussed the evils of excessive drinking. He gave the argument used by temperance advocates to the effect that strong drink got control of the appetite and drove men and women to untimely graves. After painting this picture, he said: "What of it? What use is a man of that kind to the country? Let him go to his grave, and let us give him a kick and help him into it more quickly."

That was the most wicked speech I ever heard. And now what is the situation here? The family physician comes in. There is the sick, perhaps dying, patient. He needs some life-sustaining food, it may be. He needs some stimulant. The old doctor is the only hope of the sick man and his grieving friends. He says: "I think a little beer, or ale, or porter would do this patient good," and we have Dr. Congress saying: "Let the patient die." What is the difference in principle between the two cases?

I have nothing to say in favor of liquor as a beverage. Prohibition of liquor as a beverage is here to stay. I want the law against intoxicating beverages enforced, and there can not be any reasonable regulation brought in here that I will not support. If Senators have not read the hearings on this bill in the House, read them, and I challenge any man to say to me that there was a real effort to find out whether beer and ale and porter have any medicinal virtue; and when the bill comes before the great Judiciary Committee of the Senate they do not call in a single scientist to give them the benefit of his views.

I have not read all of the parts of the hearings before the House committee which are related to pharmacy, but I think I have read all that relate to beer as a medicine. There were some witnesses for the bill, one witness against it, and I believe I state the exact truth when I say that they were extremists on both sides of the problem.

Let us assume, for the sake of the argument, that a vote of the physicians would show that two-thirds may think that beer has no therapeutic value. Suppose the one-third, out of the abundance of their own experience, say, "Yes; it is a medicinal agent. We ought to have the right to prescribe it under such circumstances." In my judgment, we should not deprive that one-third of what they honestly believe should be their right in their ministrations to the sick.

That is my position, and who here can say, in view of all these medical and other authorities I have cited, that neither ale nor beer nor porter has any therapeutic value; and who here can say, in the light of the authorities which I read as to the administration of whisky and brandy, that one-half of 1 pint of alcohol in 10 days shall be the maximum that any of this great, noble profession can administer to their patients? Who can say it? Who would run that risk if it was in his own family and the physician was there?

Mr. President, it might be that if this subject were thoroughly examined into by a commission of real scientists, they could present a report which would be all-persuasive to us here who now differ on the subject. In my judgment, Senators, we had better haste a little slowly in this matter. Let us not destroy the good while we are destroying the evil.

Mr. President, would it not be better for humanity's sake, instead of this prohibition against the prescription of beer and this extreme limitation on the prescription of whisky and brandy, to provide for the appointment of a commission of real scientists, not of extremists, let them examine into it, let them make their report, and then, with that before us, let us draw a bill in harmony with it? Is not that the better course to pursue? Meanwhile, you say, there is danger from the opening up of breweries and distilleries. If there is, let us curb it, let us stop it as nearly as we can, so far as it relates to beverages.

This bill is inconsistent in its provisions. I think everybody must admit that more harm comes from the drinking of whisky than from the drinking of beer, and yet you prohibit the administration of the lesser of the two evils, and you permit the other. Is that right?

I am ready at all times, Senators, to accept the judgment of men who know their subject, but I have not seen anything in the record of this bill which persuades me that we should go to the extreme which is intended. I think that the proponents of the bill will live to regret it if it passes. I recognize that when it comes to drastic legislation, like the prohibition laws, we can not expect to enforce them to the extent that there shall be no violation, and do it in a day or a year. Conditions will improve with experience, with time, with vigorous enforcement. But when you seek to advance prohibition by denying relief at the bedside, you are going to create a hostility, not only against this bill but against all regulatory measures.

I have said what I have said because I believed I ought to say it in behalf of the medical profession, and in behalf of the sick, the old and the weak of the land, and I am willing, if this privilege can be continued, to vote for any reasonable regulation which will prevent physicians from prescribing illegally, or outside of the letter and the spirit of the law. It is easy enough to find those who violate the law. If any physician is plying an illegal trade, it will be only a short time before he will be found out. His brother physicians will know it; the authorities will know it. Why, then, should we select the medical profession as if they were the worst violators of the law, and put this prohibition against them? In the name of real temperance, I think it is a mistake.

Mr. President, I hope the committee having this bill in charge will modify it in the two respects to which I have referred, and then place around it all the strict provisions that they can think of which are practicable, and I will support it. In any event, I feel that, in view of the fact that the committee held no hearings as to the therapeutic value of these agencies, this bill ought to go back to the committee, and they ought to come in with a report from the real scientists of the country, and not from the extremists on one side or the other.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, as a preface to my brief remarks on this bill I wish to say that for years I have been a consistent Prohibitionist. I voted for submission of the eighteenth amendment to the Constitution and for all prohibition measures submitted to the Senate since I became a Member eight and one-half years ago. I am a strong believer in the good effects of prohibition and anxious to assist in the passage of whatever laws are necessary to make the eighteenth amendment fully effective.

I can not support the pending bill unless it be materially amended, for in my judgment the clause attempting to regulate and control the use of intoxicating liquors in the practice of medicine is unconstitutional and wholly beyond the power of Congress. I refer particularly to section 2, which reads in part as follows:

SEC. 2. That only spirituous and vinous liquor may be prescribed for medicinal purposes, and all permits to prescribe and prescriptions for any other liquor shall be void. No physician shall prescribe, nor shall any person sell or furnish on any prescription, any vinous liquor that contains more than 24 per cent of alcohol by volume, nor shall anyone prescribe or sell or furnish on any prescription more than one-fourth of one gallon of vinous liquor, or any such vinous or spirituous liquor that contains separately or in the aggregate more than one-half pint of alcohol, for use by any person within any period of 10 days.

This provision forbids doctors from prescribing malt liquors of any kind, such as beer, ale, porter, mead, and so forth, and it limits the amount of any vinous or spirituous liquor which a doctor may prescribe, both for external and internal use, to not exceeding one-half pint of alcohol for a patient within a period of 10 days.

The legislator in this act assumes the province of the doctor, says that no malt liquors can ever be prescribed, and that no matter how critical the case, nor how much alcohol may be required, under no circumstances can more than one-half a pint be prescribed for any patient within 10 days.

I am unable to find any authority in the Constitution for this invasion of the rights of the medical profession, one of the oldest, most highly respected, and honorable of all the learned professions. Even among savage tribes the doctor—the medicine man as he is called—always occupies a commanding position of the highest importance and influence, and the practice of medicine dates from the very dawn of the human race.

Congress is a body of limited powers, exercising such authority only as is especially delegated to it by the Constitution, being different in that respect from State legislatures, which can enact laws upon any subject unless prohibited by their constitution. Prior to the passage of the eighteenth amendment, Congress had no power to legislate in regard to the use of intoxicating liquors as a beverage, or otherwise, but thereafter it was vested with full and complete authority so far as beverage uses are concerned. The eighteenth amendment provides:

SEC. 1. After one year from the ratification of this article the manufacture, sale, or transportation of intoxicating liquors within, the importation thereof into, or the exportation thereof from the United States and all Territories subject to the jurisdiction thereof for beverage purposes is hereby prohibited.

The whole spirit and purpose of this amendment was to prevent the use, and especially the abuse, of intoxicating liquors as a beverage, not their use for any other purpose. Mention of the one purpose, "beverage," clearly excludes other purposes such as medicinal, sacramental, industrial, and scientific. This principle of legislative construction is so well established by innumerable decisions of the courts that argument to sustain it is unnecessary, and no one will contend that the power to regulate the use of intoxicating liquor for beverage purposes conveys power to regulate its use for medicinal, sacramental, industrial, and scientific purposes. They are clearly apart, separate and distinct from the other, and not connected with nor controlled by it.

As a layman, I do not assume to say that doctors should ever prescribe malt liquors to their patients, or that one-half a pint of alcohol in 10 days is not a sufficient amount in the most extreme case; but I have not the slightest hesitation in saying that these matters belong to the medical profession, not to the lawmaking; that they should be decided by doctors, not by lawmakers.

The point at issue is that the pending bill seeks to regulate the practice of medicine in so far as the use of intoxicating liquors is concerned, and the Constitution does not furnish the slightest authority for so doing. Hence if I vote for the bill, ardent Prohibitionist as I am, it would be violating my oath to obey the Constitution.

However, I am forced to the conclusion that, aside from the unconstitutional character of this provision, it is unwise, radical in the extreme, will not be obeyed if enacted, and will do a great deal to bring prohibition into contempt. It is going entirely too far, is too great an invasion of personal rights and liberties, and arouses a just fear that if allowed to go on without check other and more sacred rights will be invaded. If under the authority of the eighteenth amendment Congress can legislate in regard to the use of intoxicating liquors for medicinal purposes—not for beverage purposes, but purely for medicinal, as is sought to be done by the pending bill—then beyond any question it can legislate regarding the use of intoxicating liquors for sacramental, industrial, and scientific purposes. If the entering wedge be driven and the strong log of medicine be rent asunder by the pending bill, then no one who uses alcoholic liquors for sacramental or scientific purposes can feel safe.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RANSDELL. I am very glad to yield.

Mr. STERLING. I should like to ask the Senator if he supported the original Volstead bill, now the national prohibition law?

Mr. RANSDELL. Yes; I voted for it.

Mr. STERLING. Will the Senator point out in what respect the present bill is more drastic than the original Volstead Act was supposed to be?

Mr. RANSDELL. In the original bill there was no prohibition whatsoever against the use of malt liquors.

Mr. STERLING. But the Senator knows that for a long time, and up until the time the Attorney General rendered his opinion, it was generally supposed that only spirituous liquors could be prescribed for medicine, does he not?

Mr. RANSDELL. I am not very familiar with that. I have had practically nothing to do with the enforcement of the prohibition law, but we certainly did not put any prohibition of that kind in the bill, and if there had been, and it had been called to my attention I would not have voted for it.

Mr. STERLING. Does the Senator recall having heard of any particular complaint because physicians were not permitted to prescribe beer?

Mr. RANSDELL. No; I have not heard of any particular complaint; but I do not propose, let me say to the Senator, to have anybody tell me what I shall do, or wait until there has been some complaint. As I read the Constitution, it teaches me that we have absolutely no right to regulate the use of liquor for medicinal purposes. It is a medicinal purpose if doctors wish to prescribe malt liquors, and whether I have heard complaint or not does not enter into the question at all, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. STERLING. But, if the Senator will allow me, the Senator said that he had supported the original Volstead Act.

Mr. RANSDELL. I did.

Mr. STERLING. I thought he was proceeding in his argument on the theory that the present bill is much more drastic than the Volstead Act was originally supposed to be.

Mr. RANSDELL. There was not a word said in the original law prohibiting the use of other than vinous and spirituous liquors.

Mr. STERLING. That is true.

Mr. RANSDELL. I will ask the Senator whether there was any such provision in the original law.

Mr. STERLING. No; the Senator is correct in that.

Mr. RANSDELL. Certainly.

Mr. STERLING. But by implication it was thought that the prescribing of wine and beer for medicinal purposes was prohibited. It was generally so believed up until the time the Attorney General rendered his opinion.

Mr. RANSDELL. I did not so understand it, but even if it was understood that way, the plain language of this bill prohibits the prescribing of malt liquors, and there can not be any question about that.

Mr. STERLING. There is no question about it.

Mr. RANSDELL. And even if it were originally intended to carry the purpose, it was not there in plain terms. When I voted for the Volstead bill I had no idea that it would be defined in a way which would make it illegal. I am not responsible for a definition placed upon a statute by the law officers of the Government, but I am responsible, I will say to the Senator, when the language is plain and unequivocal, and the language in this bill plainly says, as plainly as it can, that it is unlawful under any circumstances to prescribe malt liquors.

It further says, and in that it goes further than the original bill, that not to exceed one-half pint of alcohol can ever be prescribed for a patient within a period of 10 days. I will say to the Senator that I was once the victim of a very severe attack of typhoid fever, and they gave me alcohol baths, which perhaps saved my life. If this bill were enacted in its present form it would be impossible to give anyone a series of alcohol baths.

Mr. STERLING. I think the Senator from Louisiana is mistaken in that respect. There is no question but what alcohol can be prescribed for alcohol baths, denatured alcohol, and it will be just as good for an alcohol bath as spirituous alcohol.

Mr. RANSDELL. If the Senator from South Dakota wishes to have his person rubbed with denatured alcohol, which has been poisoned in such a way as to make it entirely bad for internal use, then, I say to him, he can take it, but no denatured alcohol will ever, with my consent, be applied to my body.

Mr. STERLING. I recall reading in the hearings the testimony of one Mr. Doran to the effect that alcohol so treated—it may be said to be denatured or medicated or whatever term is proper to use in that connection—was just as efficient as spirituous alcohol for the purpose of an alcohol bath.

Mr. RANSDELL. I do not so understand it. If that be true, what would be the objection to writing in the bill in plain language that the limitation of one-half pint in 10 days is confined to alcohol for internal use? Would the Senator have any objection to putting that amendment in the bill? It would be much less objectionable to me, I will say, if the Senator would add that amendment, although even that would not make me vote for it, because I consider that the bill is a clear invasion of the rights of the medical profession. I have said that plainly and do not care to repeat it.

Let me say to the Senator that if he will draw the bill in a form which is clearly in accord with the eighteenth amendment as I understand it, which is clearly confined to beverage purposes, I will vote for his bill, and gladly do so, because I am just as ardent a prohibitionist as he is or anyone else. I yield to no man in my belief in the eighteenth amendment and in my desire to see the eighteenth amendment fully and fairly enforced.

As a sincere believer in prohibition, and one who has proved his faith by his works, I appeal to my prohibition brethren not to insist upon these radical provisions in regard to medicine, but to amend the pending law so as to accomplish desired results without going to this extreme. Far more good will come from a fair, just, reasonable enforcement of the eighteenth amendment under laws which we have a clear right to pass, and which would be respected if enacted.

In conclusion I wish to say that I regret, Mr. President, that I can not vote for the measure; that I am obliged to part company with my prohibition friends and vote against this measure in its present form.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD] in behalf of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED].

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President, I offered an amendment previously which I desire to withdraw, and I now offer the amendment which I send to the desk, which is substantially the same as the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED].

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] is the pending amendment.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Inasmuch as practically the same amendment is to be offered by the Senator from Kentucky, which, I understand, meets with the approval of a great many Senators on the other side, I wish to withdraw the amendment which I offered in behalf of the Senator from Missouri.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no objection, the amendment of the Senator from Missouri is withdrawn. The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY] submits an amendment, which will be read.

THE READING CLERK. Add as an additional section the following:

SEC. 6. That any officer, agent, or employee of the United States engaged in the enforcement of this act, or the national prohibition act, or any other law of the United States, who shall search or attempt to search the property or premises of any person without previously securing a search warrant, as provided by law, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be fined not to exceed $1,000 or imprisoned not to exceed one year, or both so fined and imprisoned in the discretion of the court.

Any person not a duly authorized officer, agent, or employee of the United States, who, under color or claim to be acting as such in the enforcement of this act, or the national prohibition act, or any other law of the United States, subjects or causes any person to be subjected to the deprivation of any rights, privileges, or immunities secured or guaranteed by the Constitution of the United States, shall be deemed guilty of a felony, and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by imprisonment for a period of not more than five years or by fine not exceeding $10,000, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, the amendment is satisfactory and I accept the same.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

THE READING CLERK. On page 3, line 18, add the following additional proviso:

Provided further, That the commissioner may authorize the return to the United States, under such regulations and conditions as he may prescribe, of any distilled spirits of American production exported free of tax and reimported in original packages in which exported and consigned for reexport in the distillery bonded warehouse from which originally removed.

The amendment was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE—ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Overhue, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills, and they were thereupon signed by the Presiding Officer (Mr. CURTIS) as Acting President pro tempore:

S. 252. An act to amend an act approved February 22, 1889, entitled "An act to provide for the division of Dakota into two States, and to enable the people of North Dakota, South Dakota, Montana, and Washington to form constitutions and State governments, and to be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States, and to make donations of public lands to such States"; and

S. 732. An act to extend the provisions of section 2455, Revised Statutes, to the lands within the abandoned Fort Buford Military Reservation in the States of North Dakota and Montana.

THE DYE INDUSTRY.

Mr. KING addressed the Senate. After having spoken for some time, he said:

Mr. President, it was my purpose to discuss at some length the dye inquiry and the dye situation, the dye lobby, its pernicious and sinister activities; but since I have taken the floor it has been suggested by friends of this measure and by opponents, both sides, that they would be very glad to have a vote this afternoon. I do not want to interfere with action upon this bill, and I shall yield the floor, but I shall resume tomorrow morning at the earliest opportunity and conclude what I intended to say this afternoon.

AMENDMENT OF NATIONAL PROHIBITION ACT.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill H. R. 7294, an act supplemental to the national prohibition act.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, is there an amendment pending?

THE PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JONES of Washington in the chair). There is no amendment pending now.

Mr. SPENCER. I desire to call attention to one provision of the bill to which I personally can not agree, and I believe it is as unwise in its principle as it is unnecessary in its procedure.

The bill provides that a physician can not under any circumstances prescribe more than what amounts to a fifth of a pint of wine a day for any patient, because there is the limitation of 2 pints within a period of 10 days.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Two pints of wine?

Mr. SPENCER. Two pints—a fifth of a pint a day for any patient. My own experience has been what doubtless that of any other Senator has been, that again and again that would mean the dividing line between life and death. It is a ridiculous interference with the right of the practitioner of medicine. It is an attempt to substitute the judgment of Congress, that never has seen the patient, that knows nothing about his condition, and to make a prescription limitation in regard to that patient which only the physician is qualified to make. If that provision remains in the bill, we will live to see the ridicule that it will occasion cause far more harm to the cause of temperance than its omission will ever cause.

I submit, therefore, an amendment to that part of the bill and only that part of the bill, and ask that the Secretary may read it, and that it may be voted upon.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri offers an amendment, which will be stated.

THE READING CLERK. On page 2, line 1, it is proposed to strike out commencing with the word "nor" and including lines 2, 3, 4, 5, and the first seven words on line 6, and to insert in lieu thereof the following:

And all such prescriptions shall be limited strictly to cases in which such prescriptions are clearly necessary for medical purposes as defined in Title II, section 7 of the national prohibition act.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President, I should like to have the amendment of the Senator from Missouri read again. I was trying to follow it and I could not catch its import.

Mr. LODGE. Let the Secretary read it as it would read if amended.

Mr. SPENCER. I suggest that the Secretary commence at the beginning of the sentence, beginning on line 11 of page 1, and read it as it would read with the amendment added.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as requested.

THE READING CLERK. Commencing on line 11, page 1:

No physician shall prescribe, nor shall any person sell or furnish on any prescription, any vinous liquor that contains more than 24 per cent of alcohol by volume, and all such prescriptions shall be limited strictly to cases in which such prescriptions are clearly necessary for medicinal purposes as defined in Title II, section 7 of the national prohibition act.

Mr. LODGE. That strikes out what?

THE READING CLERK. Striking out the words:

Nor shall anyone prescribe or sell or furnish on any prescription more than one-fourth of 1 gallon of vinous liquor, or any such vinous or spirituous liquor that contains separately or in the aggregate more than one-half pint of alcohol, for use by any person within any period of 10 days.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I trust that amendment will not prevail. The striking out of the language suggested and the insertion of that proposed by the Senator from Missouri would, as I understand the proposed amendment, leave unlimited the amount of wine that might be prescribed for medicinal purposes. I do not think we can afford to do that.

I have called attention again and again to the fact that Senators seem to be laboring under a misapprehension as to this bill. It is assumed that it is a tremendously drastic measure as compared with the present national prohibition law. As I have said again and again, it is not as drastic as the original law was supposed to be, because that law was supposed to prevent the prescribing of wine as well as beer, and never until the opinion of the Attorney General was it generally thought otherwise.

I am satisfied that the physicians of this country, having declared themselves already as they have, especially through the American Medical Association, are not asking that they, for the safety and health of patients, shall be allowed to prescribe wine in any quantity. There may be now and then, I grant, a physician who is asking that, who thinks that wine is good for medicinal purposes and that a physician ought to have the right to prescribe wine. The bill gives the right to prescribe wine, and it is different from what the Volstead Act was supposed to be in that respect, and gives the right to prescribe wine in a reasonable quantity. It gives the right to prescribe wine with the same amount of alcoholic content as the spirituous liquors which can be prescribed under the national prohibition act. The same quantity of alcohol may be contained in the amount of wine prescribed under this law as was allowed to be prescribed in spirituous liquors under the Volstead Act.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, is the Senator quite sure of that?

Mr. STERLING. I am quite sure.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Then what is the meaning of the language of the bill which says that no one may make a prescription for more than one-fourth of a gallon of vinous liquor, regardless of the alcoholic content?

Mr. STERLING. Because wine of the very highest alcoholic content contains 24 per cent, and this will include the great bulk of wines of various kinds manufactured in this country or imported from other countries, because the maximum of alcoholic content in any wine is about 24 per cent. Nearly all wine contains less than that.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Senator is mentioning maximums.

Mr. STERLING. I am mentioning maximums.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; but the language on line 3 has nothing to do with alcoholic content, maximums, averages, or minimums. It says, "No more than one-fourth of 1 gallon" of any kind of wine.

Mr. STERLING. But the doctor is privileged, if he wants the alcohol, to prescribe the wine that has the highest alcoholic content.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Suppose the doctor does not want to do that?

Mr. STERLING. Then he can prescribe less.

Mr. WADSWORTH. But no more than a certain amount.

Mr. STERLING. Certainly.

Mr. BALL. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. STERLING. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BALL. I understand that the Senator from South Dakota is opposed to the amendment?

Mr. STERLING. I am opposed to the amendment.

Mr. BALL. Then the Senator from South Dakota is opposed to physicians prescribing according to their judgment?

Mr. STERLING. Yes. A particular physician might say, so far as that is concerned—I am not saying that of physicians generally—that a gallon of spirituous liquor should be prescribed for use in a period of 10 days.

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator another question. The Senator certainly realizes that under certain conditions more liquor is required or a greater number of prescriptions are required than under other conditions. Take an epidemic such as the Spanish influenza, where hundreds of patients in every physician's practice needed alcohol each day.

There are cases of intense depression where a life is saved by alcohol, and yet under this bill you are limited to 100 prescriptions in 90 days, or if you should attempt to get the right to issue more your patients would all pass away, of course, before that time, and it would do you no good. By such an act, if you are not going to trust to the physician's judgment,

Congress is taking the responsibility for the future life of the physician's patients.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, the Congress did not quite trust to the physician's judgment in the original prohibition act when it provided that the amount of spirituous liquor that might be prescribed within any period of 10 days should be 1 pint. They did not take the physician's judgment in that case.

Mr. BALL. Mr. President—

Mr. STERLING. If the Senator will permit me—

Mr. BALL. I should like to ask a question; that is all.

Mr. STERLING. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BALL. Did not the original Volstead Act apply to liquor used as a beverage? That was my impression, and I voted for the Volstead Act in the belief that it controlled the use of alcohol as a beverage. This bill controls its use as a medicine.

Mr. STERLING. That bill controlled its use as a medicine—

Mr. BALL. Then why do you want further control?

Mr. STERLING. And in the very way in which I say it controlled its use as a medicine, by limiting the amount of spirituous liquor that could be prescribed, we can now allow wine to be prescribed, and with the same amount of alcohol in the wine to be used within a certain period of time as was allowed to be used in spirituous liquor in the Volstead Act.

Now, Mr. President, it is for Congress to determine. One-half of 1 per cent of alcohol in a beverage is not intoxicating. Everybody, I think, admits that it will not intoxicate; and yet Congress saw fit in the national prohibition act to provide that no beverage containing as much as one-half of 1 per cent of alcohol would be permitted to be manufactured or to be sold. Why that restriction? It was for the purpose of preventing the use of alcoholic liquors as a beverage. Why, Mr. President, do we limit the amount that may be prescribed by a physician and prohibit altogether the use of beer for a medicine? It is in order to secure the end provided for in the constitutional mandate itself, and in the law enacted for the purpose of carrying out that mandate—namely, to prevent the use of alcohol as a beverage. These are the means that we have used, and the Supreme Court of the United States has said virtually in the Ruppert case and in the consideration of the Purity Extract case, brought up from Mississippi, that Congress has the right to determine the means that should be used for the purpose of preventing the use of alcohol as a beverage.

Mr. BALL. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Dakota further yield to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. STERLING. I yield to the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. BALL. I, of course, am not going to discuss the constitutionality of the measure. The question with me is whether it is good legislation, whether it is fair legislation for the general public. Much legislation would be constitutional for which I think no Senator here would want to vote; but it is a question of legislating for the best interests of the people, and it seems to me that physicians, from their training from all points, should be allowed to prescribe those medicines which in their judgment are most needed. Certainly there is some manner of enforcing this law so as to prevent physicians from prescribing alcohol as a beverage, but when you limit the number of prescriptions as you do in this bill you are preventing a physician from practicing medicine along the lines which in his judgment are necessary for the saving of life. That, to me, is not only class legislation but it is almost criminal.

Mr. STERLING. As to limiting the number of prescriptions, I will ask the Senator if he has noted all the provisions of the bill with reference to the number? The bill provides:

No physician shall be furnished with more than 100 prescription blanks for use in any period of 90 days, nor shall any physician issue more than that number of prescriptions within any such period unless on application therefor he shall make it clearly apparent to the commissioner that for some extraordinary reason a larger amount is necessary, whereupon the necessary additional blanks may be furnished him.

Mr. BALL. The Senator from South Dakota certainly knows that if a physician had to go through the routine prescribed in this bill there would be no necessity for acquiring alcohol for the patient. Even the funeral rites would be all over. We prescribe in cases of emergency, and only in cases of emergency.

Mr. STERLING. I suppose the prevalence of any disease for which spirituous liquor might be a remedy at all, in any community, like the influenza, for example, would afford the extraordinary occasion when a physician might apply to the commissioner for permission to issue more prescriptions.

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, I am glad the Senator brought up the Spanish influenza, which is the best instance, probably, we have had in medicine. Ordinarily in my practice I did not give 10 prescriptions a year for liquor. I doubt whether I gave five; but during the attack of influenza I believe for a week or 10 days I averaged 50 a day, and I could not have given those under the provisions of this bill. I did save life by it. Now you are going to pass an act which, if it had been a law then, would have prevented me, as a physician, from performing what I believed to be my duty as a physician, my honest duty to the public.

Mr. STERLING. We have the testimony of one physician. I value it, and I have great respect for the opinion of the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. BALL. I would like to state, if the Senator will permit me, that I have tried to make a canvass of the physicians of my own State. I have not completed it, but I find that more than 90 per cent of the physicians of my State hold exactly the same views I hold myself.

Mr. STERLING. With respect to what, may I ask the Senator?

Mr. BALL. With respect to the prescribing of alcohol, and its absolute necessity under certain conditions.

Mr. STERLING. Then the Senator's objection goes to the original act, which limits the amount of alcohol to 1 pint for every 10 days, which is not the measure before us. The objection goes to that. Let the Senator attack that, or offer an amendment to it.

What does the amendment of the Senator from Missouri imply? That we shall restrict the amount of spirituous liquor that can be prescribed to a pint for every 10 days, and make the amount of wine which might be prescribed unlimited. That is the proposition, and if that is agreed to we shall absolutely let down the bars.

Mr. WADSWORTH. He withdraws the limit from both.

Mr. STERLING. It is so much the worse if he withdraws the limit from both—the amount of spirituous liquor which may be prescribed, as well as the amount of wine.

Mr. President, if there is an unlimited amount of wine or an unlimited amount of spirituous liquor to be prescribed, you will simply nullify the national prohibition act, and every drug store will be made a saloon, and a saloon, too, without the ordinary police supervision which accompanies the sale of intoxicating liquors in a saloon. That is what you will have.

The druggists, the pharmacists, are not clamoring for this legislation. Indeed, so far as beer is concerned, they protest against any law allowing the prescribing of beer for medicinal purposes. Five hundred physicians in the great State of Massachusetts signed a protest against the prescribing of beer for medicinal purposes.

Mr. President, I can not help but think that there is a great deal of what we call camouflage, for want of a better word just on the instant, in this cry for the protection of the people from any disease or illness for which intoxicating liquor may be said to be a remedy. The American Medical Association thought that there was no therapeutic value in it beyond what could be found in some other way, and they so declared, and they said that with reference to beer.

Mr. WADSWORTH. When?

Mr. STERLING. They said it in 1917, and they have not taken it back.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. STERLING. I yield.

Mr. SPENCER. I have at present no disagreement with the distinguished Senator from South Dakota about the right of Congress to pass this law; but I appeal to his sense of fairness, which is so characteristic of him, to ask him if, when we have once provided in this bill that wine does have some medicinal property, there may not be occasions when the prescription of wine is necessary? It is admitted in the bill that wine has some medicinal value. When you have taken that step and provided that physicians shall be allowed to prescribe wine under certain conditions, I appeal to the Senator from South Dakota if it is not ridiculous to say to a physician, who may think that a patient needs the stimulant of wine three times a day, "Yes; we will allow you, by law, to prescribe wine, but you can not prescribe more than one-fifteenth of a pint of wine at any one of the three meals a day for any 10-day period?"

The arithmetic is simple. The result of it is that you give permission for the prescription with one hand and withdraw its efficacy with the other. If wine can be prescribed there ought to be a reasonable concession to the discretion of the physician who prescribes it, and that is the purpose of the amendment which I have offered.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I do not know how many States which have adopted prohibition and passed prohibition laws have forbidden the prescribing of wine, or the manufacture or sale of wine for medicinal purposes, but a very great many of them have. A great many of them have laws more drastic than the national prohibition law or than this measure, and I want to call attention to the State of Mississippi.

The Purity Extract Co., of the State of Mississippi, manufactured a malt beverage without a particle of alcohol content in it. Its manufacture and sale were prohibited by the State law of Mississippi. The company brought an action, and the case went to the Supreme Court of the United States, which upheld the act of the State of Mississippi, and I want to quote briefly from the decision in the case of Jacob Ruppert against Caffey:

Purity Extract Co. v. Lynch (226 U. S., 192), determined that State legislation of this character is valid, and set forth with clearness the constitutional ground upon which it rests: "When a State exerting its recognized authority undertakes to express what it is free to regard as a public evil, it may adopt such measures having a reasonable relation to that end as it may deem necessary in order to make its action effective. It does not follow that because a transaction separately considered is innocuous it may not be included in a prohibition the scope of which is regarded as essential in the legislative judgment to accomplish a purpose within the admitted power of the Government. It was competent for the Legislature of Mississippi to recognize the difficulties besetting the administration of laws aimed at the prevention of traffic in intoxicants. It prohibited, among other things, the sale of 'malt liquors.'"

And this, as I say, was a malt liquor without any alcohol in it at all.

Turning to the conclusion which the court draws as applicable to a law passed by the Congress of the United States, this is what the court said:

That the Federal Government would, in attempting to enforce a prohibitory law, be confronted with difficulties similar to those encountered by the States is obvious; and both this experience of the States and the need of the Federal Government of legislation defining intoxicating liquors, as was done in the Volstead Act, were clearly set forth in the reports of the House Committee on the Judiciary, in reporting the bill to the Sixty-fifth Congress, third session, Report 1143, February 26, 1919, and to the Sixty-sixth Congress, first session, Report 91, June 30, 1919. Furthermore, recent experience of the military forces had shown the necessity of fixing a definite alcoholic test for the purpose of administering the limited prohibitory law included in the selective service act—

And so forth.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. STERLING. I yield.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator will excuse this interruption, I know, because this is the second time in the debate when a State statute and a decision upon its constitutionality has been quoted in connection with the contention here. Of course, the Senator is too good a lawyer not to know, as every lawyer does, and as three-fourths of the laymen of America do, the immense difference between the power of a State in the exercise of its police power and the power of the Federal Government in the exercise of its delegated powers.

Mr. STERLING. Yes; and I will say to the Senator from Mississippi that I was just dwelling on that point.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I said I knew that. The case from which the Senator just quoted was from the State of Mississippi, and the State has also said that no physician should prescribe wine or beer, or even whisky, I believe. The State of Mississippi could pass a law, if it wanted to, saying that duck eggs should never be hatched under hens. The State of Mississippi could pass a law, if it wanted to, saying that no article containing carbonic-acid gas should be sold for beverage purposes or for medicinal purposes. The right of the State of Mississippi to legislate for its people is absolutely plenary, except in so far as it may be directly and expressly limited by something in the Constitution of the United States or by something in the constitution of the State. Mississippi has the right to deny any man the right to drink beer in its limits, as medicine or as a beverage, regardless of whether it has alcohol in it or not, but the United States Government has no power in relation to this subject except that which is delegated to it under the constitutional amendment, and that power is simply to regulate and to prohibit the manufacture, importation, and sale of alcoholic liquors used for beverage purposes.

The State of Mississippi has a perfect right to say that no man in the State of Mississippi should prescribe beer or wine or whisky as a medicine, if it chose to say it. It has a right to say that he shall not prescribe quinine, if the legislature were asses enough to say it. The power is there, undoubtedly. Whenever this sort of argument is made, gentlemen forget the character of the dual governments under which they live.

The State of Mississippi might pass a law that men should not dye their hair; and, by the way, it would be a very good law; most hair dyes are partially poisonous; but the Federal Government could not do such a thing.

Mr. STERLING. But, Mr. President, let the Supreme Court of the United States answer the argument of the Senator from Mississippi.

In the Ruppert case, I call the Senator's attention to a few further sentences from the opinion:

The police power of a State over the liquor traffic is not limited to the power to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors supported by a separate implied power to prohibit kindred nonintoxicating liquors so far as necessary to make the prohibition of intoxicants effective; it is a single broad power to make such laws, by way of prohibition, as may be required to effectively suppress the traffic in intoxicating liquors.

That is the power the State of Mississippi has.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is the power of the State.

Mr. STERLING. The Senator will agree to that.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The power of the Federal Government to suppress its use as a beverage.

Mr. STERLING. I read further:

Likewise the implied war power over intoxicating liquors extends to the enactment of laws which will not merely prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors but will effectually prevent their sale.

The object of the national prohibition act with its restriction of prescriptions of spirituous liquors is to prevent the sale and the use of intoxicants as a beverage—

Mr. WILLIAMS. Ah!

Mr. STERLING. Just bear with me a moment, please.

Furthermore—

Now, note this—as stated in Hamilton v. Kentucky Distilleries & Warehouse Co., ante, 156, while discussing the implied power to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors: "When the United States exerts any of the powers conferred upon it by the Constitution"—

Is this power conferred upon it by the Constitution?

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is what we are talking about.

Mr. STERLING (reading):

When the United States exerts any of the powers conferred upon it by the Constitution, no valid objection can be based upon the fact that such exercise may be attended by the same incidents which attend the exercise by a State of its police power.

I think that is a complete answer to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. WILLIAMS. No; it is not. Undoubtedly that is true. When the State has the power, and Mississippi had full power in the cases referred to, not to prohibit merely the use of intoxicants as a beverage but to forbid their use as medicine or for sacramental purposes or for anything else, then everything absolutely necessary or reasonably necessary to be done in order to accomplish that purpose, though it may hurt somewhere else, falls within the State's power. But when the Federal Government has the power only to prevent the manufacture and sale or importation of intoxicants, its power is confined to that particular sort of use of them which is expressed by the language "for beverage purposes."

If the United States Government, in undertaking to execute its constitutional rights to forbid the use for beverage purposes, should incidentally touch upon something which would, not as its purpose but by incident purely, prevent something else from being used which was not even intoxicant, of course that would have to go. But if the Federal Government undertakes to prevent or to limit the use of intoxicating liquors for sacramental purposes or for medicinal purposes, then it has undertaken something for which it has no grant and concerning which it has no implied power.

The Senator would not contend here for one moment that the Congress had the right to say that a church could administer wines for sacramental purposes, but could not administer more than half a pint a month or more than half a pint a week or more than half a pint at a single meeting of the congregation, regardless of the size of the congregation or anything else. Even if the congregation were only four persons, the Senator would not contend that Congress could do that. Why? Because the Congress has no power whatsoever, granted or incidental, expressed or implied, to regulate the use of wines for sacramental purposes in the church, nor has it any right to do the same thing for medicinal purposes by a doctor. Both may be abused.

I heard some time ago, though I do not know how true it was, that some people were getting up a new church with the idea of getting wine for sacramental purposes. But if that abuse shall occur, or if the abuse shall occur with a doctor, there are the grand juries of the States, there is the neighborhood, with its public opinion, there are the petit juries of the States, there is the public opinion that knows almost at once that the man is abusing his power as a physician in order to become a saloon keeper, and they will indict him. There are the medical fraternities, the most honorable men in the world, guarding their honor. They can be trusted to do something.

I am tired of the idea that the only thing in the world that can legislate or accomplish anything is this miserable Federal Government at Washington. If the President and all the Members of the Senate and the Members of the House died tomorrow, the American people would get along very well for six months through the States.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from South Dakota if it is his purpose to press the bill to a vote this evening. There are a number of Senators who desire to discuss this rather important question, but I understand an executive session is desired.

Mr. STERLING. No; I do not desire to push the matter to a vote to-night.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Vote! Vote!

Mr. STERLING. I think I shall not press for a vote to-night.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. SPENCER].

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I merely wish to suggest to the Senator from South Dakota that for a week or more various Senators who desire to go away and others who have been away and have come back have had their movements interfered with by the uncertainty of having a vote on this bill. Certain Senators want to go away to-night and others to-morrow. I hope we can dispose of this measure to-night. I am willing to sit late if the Senator desires further time, and I think we should dispense with an executive session this evening.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President—

Mr. STERLING. I yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. PENROSE. I sincerely hope that we can vote this afternoon. I concur in the view of the Senator from Connecticut. The Finance Committee adjourned in the midst of important hearings to permit the Members to come here on the assumption that they were to vote on various phases of the bill. That great committee is in session from 10 o'clock in the morning until 5 or 6 in the evening, and if they are to break up their meetings every 20 minutes to come to the Senate and vote, we shall never get through the gigantic task reposed in us. I sincerely hope that we can vote this afternoon.

Mr. STERLING. I hardly expected to reach a vote on the bill this afternoon. I now ask the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] if it is desired to have an executive session.

Mr. CURTIS. We do want a short executive session, and I wish to have an amendment to a Senate joint resolution reconsidered and the joint resolution passed if possible, but I do not wish to interfere with the vote on the pending bill.

Mr. STERLING. I will yield for the purpose of an executive session.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Mr. President, reserving the right to offer further amendments, I move that the bill be recommitted; and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Gooding	McCumber	Shortridge
Ball	Harrel	McKellar	Simmons
Borah	Harrison	McLean	Smith
Brandegee	Heflin	McNary	Smoot
Broussard	Johnson	Moses	Spencer
Bursum	Jones, Wash.	Nelson	Stanfield
Capper	Kellogg	Nicholson	Stanley
Caraway	Kenyon	Norbeck	Sterling
Curtis	Keyes	Oddie	Townsend
Dial	King	Overman	Wadsworth
Dillingham	Ladd	Penrose	Warren
Earnest	La Follette	Phipps	Weller
Fernald	Lenroot	Pomerene	Willis
Fletcher	Lodge	Ransdell
Gerry	McCormick	Sheppard

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-eight Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Mr. President, I demand the yeas and nays on my motion to recommit.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CARAWAY (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. McKINLEY]. My colleague, the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], if present, I am told, would vote as I am going to vote. Therefore I wish to transfer my pair with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. McKINLEY] to my colleague and vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. DILLINGHAM (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], who is necessarily absent. I transfer that pair to my colleague [Mr. PAGE] and vote "yea."

Mr. FERNALD (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES]. On this matter, I understand, he would vote as I shall. I shall therefore vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. KENYON (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED]. I strongly suspect, however, that if present he would vote to recommit the bill, and consequently I am not at liberty to vote.

Mr. LODGE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] and vote "yea."

Mr. MCCORMICK (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK]. I understand that if he were present the Senator from Wyoming would vote as I propose to vote. Therefore I feel at liberty to vote, and vote "nay."

Mr. McLEAN (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Maryland [Mr. FRANCE] and vote "yea."

Mr. TRAMMELL (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT], but, understanding that if present he would vote as I propose to vote, I shall vote. I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I desire to state that if the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] were present he would vote "nay."

Mr. GERRY. I desire to announce that the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] and the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] are absent on business of the Senate, and that the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], not understanding that there was going to be a vote this afternoon, has been called to one of the departments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JONES of Washington) (after having voted in the negative). The present occupant of the chair desires to state that the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] is necessarily absent. The Chair promised to take care of that Senator; but the Chair understands that if present the Senator from Virginia would vote as the Chair has voted. The junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT] is necessarily absent, and the Chair finds that he can transfer his pair with the Senator from Virginia to the Senator from Delaware, who, if present, would vote "yea." So the Chair allows his vote to stand.

Mr. HARRISON. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS]. I understand that if he were present he would vote as I intend to vote; so I shall vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. GERRY. I desire to announce that the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] is absent on business of the Senate. If present, he would vote "nay."

I also wish to announce that the Senator from Georgia [Mr. WATSON] is absent because of illness.

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] with the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH];

The Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS];

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. NEWBERRY] with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW];

The Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER] with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARRIS];

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SUTHERLAND] with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH];

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX] with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK]; and

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN].

The result was announced—yeas 23, nays 38, as follows:

YEAS—23.

Ball	Johnson	Penrose	Stanley
Brandegge	King	Phipps	Wadsworth
Broussard	La Follette	Pomerene	Warren
Cameron	Lodge	Ransdell	Weller
Dillingham	McLean	Shortridge	Williams
Gerry	Moses	Spencer

NAYS—38.

Ashurst	Gooding	McCumber	Simmons
Borah	Harrell	McKellar	Smith
Bursum	Harrison	McNary	Smoot
Capper	Heflin	Nelson	Stanfield
Caraway	Jones, Wash.	Nicholson	Sterling
Curtis	Kellogg	Norbeck	Townsend
Dial	Keyes	Oddie	Trammell
Ernst	Ladd	Overman	Willis
Fernald	Lenroot	Polindexter
Fletcher	McCormick	Sheppard

NOT VOTING—35.

Calder	Glass	Myers	Shields
Colt	Hale	New	Sutherland
Culberson	Harris	Newberry	Swanson
Cummins	Hitchcock	Norris	Underwood
du Pont	Jones, N. Mex.	Owen	Walsh, Mass.
Edge	Kendrick	Page	Walsh, Mont.
Elkins	Kenyon	Pittman	Watson, Ga.
France	Knox	Reed	Watson, Ind.
Frelinghuysen	McKinley	Robinson

So the Senate refused to recommit the bill to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. SPENCER].

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is still before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment. If there be no further amendment as in Committee of the Whole, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

Mr. BROUSSARD. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk as a substitute for the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Louisiana will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

That section 1 of title 2 of the national prohibition act is hereby amended by adding at the end of said section the following: "Provided, however, That the above construction of the word 'liquor' or the phrase 'intoxicating liquor,' so far as it relates to beer, ale, porter, and wine, shall not apply in those States which through a referendum vote shall adopt a different construction for the word 'liquor' or the phrase 'intoxicating liquor,' and any State may, through a referendum vote of the people, place such construction upon the word 'liquor' or the phrase 'intoxicating liquor' as shall not include, within the operation of this act, beer, ale, and porter up to 5 per cent alcoholic content by volume and wine up to 14 per cent alcoholic content by volume, and the Federal Government hereby concurs in such construction, said referendum to be placed upon the ballot at any special election for that purpose called by the governor of any State, or at any State or national election whenever the governor of such State, in his discretion, may so direct or whenever 15 per cent of the voters of such State shall so petition the secretary of state of such State at least 30 days before said election."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator from Louisiana that the Chair is of the opinion that the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole should be first concurred in in the Senate, before his substitute is voted upon.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Reserving my right to the privilege of having a vote on the amendment, I yield for that purpose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendments were concurred in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on the amendment in the nature of a substitute offered by the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I simply want to say a word with reference to the proposed substitute. It would give to each State the power by referendum vote in the State to nullify the Constitution. That is plain upon the face of the proposed amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I do not desire that my vote or my attitude should be misunderstood. I want to enforce the power which Congress has, and I have been protesting against Congress usurping power which it has not; but the particular motion now pending is a motion to have the Congress nullify the eighteenth amendment. Congress can not do that. Whenever Congress passes a law leaving the enforcement of the eighteenth amendment to the States or to each State individually and refuses to obey that part of the eighteenth amendment which grants to Congress the power to enforce the amendment it is a suspension by Congress, at any rate pro tanto, of a constitutional provision—a nullification of it to the extent that any one particular State may choose to nullify it. Congress has no power to do anything of that kind. The action now proposed would be as unconstitutional as attempting to take jurisdiction over liquor administered for medicinal or for sacramental purposes, and even more so. I hope the amendment will be voted down.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Vote!

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Louisiana as a substitute for the bill as amended.

The amendment was rejected.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill having been read three times, the question is: Shall it pass?

Mr. WILLIS. On that question I ask for the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were ordered, and the reading clerk proceeded to call the roll:

Mr. CARAWAY (when his name was called). Making the same explanation concerning my pair and its transfer as on the last vote, I vote "yea."

Mr. DILLINGHAM (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS]. I do not know how he would vote on this question, and in his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. FERNALD (when his name was called). Making the same announcement concerning my pair and its transfer as on the last roll call, I vote "yea."

Mr. HARRISON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS]. I understand that if he were present he would vote as I intend to vote. I therefore feel at liberty to vote and vote "yea."

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JONES of Washington). The senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] is necessarily absent. If present he would vote "yea." The junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT] is also necessarily absent. If he were present he would vote "nay." The present occupant of the chair transfers the pair he has with the senior Senator from Virginia to the junior Senator from Delaware and votes "yea."

Mr. KENYON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED], and hence withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. McCORMICK (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK], which I transfer to the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX], and vote "yea."

Mr. CURTIS. I should like to state that the junior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK] asked me to announce that, if present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. McLEAN. As on the preceding vote, I transfer my pair with the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS] to the Senator from Maryland [Mr. FRANCE], and vote "nay."

Mr. LA FOLLETTE (when the name of Mr. NORRIS was called). The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] is absent on account of illness. I ask that this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. TRAMMELL (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLE], but I feel at liberty to vote upon this question. I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. FERNALD. My colleague, the junior Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], is necessarily absent from the Senate. If he were present he would vote "yea."

Mr. SHEPPARD. If the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] were present he would vote "yea."

Mr. GERRY. I desire to make the same announcement as on the last roll call in regard to the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] and the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN]. If the Senator from Virginia were present he would vote "yea" on the passage of this bill. The Senator from Georgia [Mr. WATSON] is absent on account of illness.

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] with the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH];

The Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS];

The Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER] with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARRIS];

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX] with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK];

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SUTHERLAND] with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH]; and

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN].

The result was announced—yeas 39, nays 20, as follows:

YEAS—39.

Ashurst	Gooding	McCumber	Simmons
Borah	Harrell	McKellar	Smith
Bursum	Harrison	McNary	Smoot
Capper	Heflin	Nelson	Spencer
Caraway	Jones, Wash.	Nicholson	Stanfield
Curtis	Kellogg	Norbeck	Sterling
Dial	Keyes	Oddie	Townsend
Ernst	Ladd	Overman	Trammell

NOT VOTING—37.

Calder	Glass	New	Swanson
Cole	Hale	Newberry	Underwood
Culberson	Harris	Norris	Walsh, Mass.

So the bill was passed.

Mr. STERLING. I move that the Senate request a conference with the House of Representatives upon the bill and amendments, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to, and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. STERLING, Mr. NELSON, and Mr. OVERMAN conferees on the part of the Senate.

CONTRACTS FOR FUTURE DELIVERY OF GRAIN.

Mr. CAPPER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of H. R. 5676, known as the future-trading bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 5676) taxing contracts for the sale of grain for future delivery, and options for such contracts, and providing for the regulation of boards of trade, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, with amendments.

Mr. CAPPER. On behalf of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, I offer a substitute bill which I ask to have printed and lie on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That order will be made.

Mr. CURTIS. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business may be temporarily laid aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

IMPORTATION OF WOOD PULP FROM CANADA.

Mr. CURTIS. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate reconsider the vote whereby it agreed to amendment No. 6 with an amendment to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 36), authorizing the appointment of a commission to confer with the Dominion Government or the provincial governments thereof as to certain restrictive orders in council of the said Provinces relative to the exportation of pulp wood and paper therefrom to the United States. The amendment to amendment No. 6 was to correct a clerical error, changing the word "said" to "the."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas moves to reconsider the vote whereby amendment No. 6 was agreed to with an amendment.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate concur in the House amendment No. 6.

The motion was agreed to.

DEATH OF REPRESENTATIVE RORER A. JAMES.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Overhue, its enrolling clerk, communicated to the Senate the intelligence of the death of Hon. RORER A. JAMES, late a Representative from the State of Virginia, and transmitted the resolutions of the House thereon.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I ask that the resolutions of the House be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the resolutions of the House of Representatives, which were read as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, August 8, 1921.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, day unto day Thy voice uttereth speech and night unto night it showeth knowledge. We bless Thee for its message and in all of our ways may we be led by its truth.

A laborer in our own vineyard, who needeth not to be ashamed, has returned from the field bringing his sheaves with him. O, bless and receive them. Reach forth Thy arm of infinite love and encircle those who are in the shades of the silent tomb. Over the sea and through the storm may they see Thy face and hold Thy hand. When sorrow has done its work, when grief has left its sting, give them great peace. So when the tale of our years is told and our time is run out, when we have passed through the afternoon of life and faced the sunset skies, O, may the morning skies scatter the shadows and may it be daylight everywhere. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Thursday, August 4, 1921, was read and approved.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, August 9, 1921.

The Chaplain, Rev. J. J. Muir, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father, we thank Thee for the brightness of another morning. We thank Thee for the way along which Thou art leading us, that we can recognize that the goodness of God never fails. Help us so to understand Thy ways with us and through us that we may fulfill the tasks committed to us to Thy glory and to the highest interest of our loved country. We ask in Jesus Christ's name. Amen.

NAMING A PRESIDING OFFICER.

The Secretary, George A. Sanderson, read the following communication:

UNITED STATES SENATE,
PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE,
Washington, D. C., August 9, 1921.

To the Senate:

Being temporarily absent from the Senate, I appoint Hon. IRVING L. LENROOT, a Senator from the State of Wisconsin, to perform the duties of the Chair this legislative day.

ALBERT B. CUMMINS,
President pro Tempore.

Mr. LENROOT thereupon took the chair as Presiding Officer.

The Assistant Secretary, Henry M. Rose, proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of the legislative day of Friday, August 5, 1921, when, on request of Mr. CURTIS and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

CALL OF THE ROLL.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Assistant Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ball	Glass	McCormick	Smith
Borah	Gooding	McKellar	Smoot
Brandegge	Hale	McNary	Spencer
Broussard	Harrell	Nelson	Stanfield
Bursum	Harrison	New	Stanley

Gerry	Lodge	Simmons

Mr. CURTIS. I wish to announce the absence of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] on official business, attending hearings before the Senate Committee on Finance. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I was requested to announce the absence of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] on account of illness.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-seven Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The Senate will receive a message from the President of the United States.

A message in writing from the President was transmitted to the Senate by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

CARE AND TREATMENT OF WORLD WAR VETERANS.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Mississippi will state it.

Mr. HARRISON. On July 20, after the House had passed the bill known as the Sweet bill, the Senate passed it, it being a bill to improve the facilities and services of the bureaus affecting disabled soldiers. That has been some three weeks ago. I was wondering if the President has signed the bill yet. I thought perhaps the message that has just come to the Senate from the President was one approving that bill, it now being three weeks since it passed the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will inform the Senator that the bill having originated in the House, the House will be notified of its approval by the President.

Mr. HARRISON. Has it yet been signed and become a law?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That notification would go to the House.

Mr. HARRISON. Is it still in the House?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It being a House bill, the message will go to the House and not to the Senate.

Mr. HARRISON. So I presume it has not yet been signed.

Mr. CURTIS. The bill was only signed by the Presiding Officer of the Senate three or four days ago.

Mr. HARRISON. Then it has not yet become a law. It was rushed through here quickly in order to give some relief. I do not know why it has not yet become a law.

AMENDMENT OF NATIONAL PROHIBITION ACT.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, I was detained from the Chamber yesterday when the final vote was taken on the bill (H. R. 7294) supplemental to the national prohibition act. The Record shows that I was paired on that bill with the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARRIS]. If I had been present I would have voted against the bill. If the senior Senator from Georgia had been present he would have voted for it.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, I desire to make an announcement similar to that just made by the Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER]. In view of the request made for unanimous consent last week, when a final vote on the bill was asked for Monday and denied, I assumed that there would not be a vote yesterday. I wish it clearly to appear in the Record that if I had been present I would have voted against the amendment of the Volstead Act.

MISSISSIPPI BARGE LINE.

Mr. MCKELLAR. Mr. President, I wish to have inserted in the Record a statement of the earnings of the Mississippi Barge Line. I am happy to state that during the past four months that institution has steadily made profits to the Government, and very good profits, after allowing for depreciation and all charges. They have made such an excellent showing that I ask unanimous consent that the figures for April, May, June, and July be inserted in the Record.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to have inserted in the Record the statement referred to. Is there objection? The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

GOVERNMENT OF MEXICO.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I ask that a resolution passed by the Legislature of Texas favoring the recognition of the present Government of Mexico be read at the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Secretary will read the resolution.

The Assistant Secretary read the resolution, as follows:

House concurrent resolution 18.

Whereas for a period of nearly 10 years, beginning in 1910, the neighboring Republic of Mexico has been in the throes of revolution which made for political instability and which constantly jeopardized life, liberty, property, and the pursuit of happiness; and

Whereas by legal methods as provided for by the constitution of the land there has been elected to and installed in the presidency of our sister Republic across the Rio Grande His Excellency the Hon. Alvaro Obregon; and

Whereas President Obregon has the confidence, respect, and support of the people of Mexico to a degree almost unprecedented in the history of that country, with the result that to-day Mexico is enjoying peace and stability; and

Whereas through the efforts of President Obregon a new era of cordiality and friendly relations has been initiated between the peoples on either side of the Rio Grande, who for so long misunderstood and distrusted each other; and

Whereas the friendly attitude toward American citizens and American interests so uniformly manifested by President Obregon since becoming the President of the Republic of Mexico eight months ago is of that sincere nature and of that evident good faith which makes the best feeling between nations, strengthened by the promise of President Obregon in frequent utterances that Mexico will meet every just obligation for which Mexico as a Nation is responsible; and Whereas it is altogether fitting and appropriate that the Lone Star State of Texas should join her sister States of California, Arizona, Oklahoma, Michigan, and Illinois in a formal expression of friendship to the people of Mexico and of commendation and confidence in President Obregon: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the house of representatives (the senate concurring), That the Legislature of the State of Texas declare itself pleased with the election of and administration by President Obregon and congratulate the people of Mexico upon the new era of peace, prosperity, and amicable relationship which have been established; and be it further

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Legislature of Texas that the best interests of our Nation and our State will be served and the restoration of order in world affairs will be hastened by the immediate official recognition on the part of the Government of the United States of the Government of Mexico, as administered by President Obregon; and be it further

Resolved, That the clerk of the house be, and is hereby, directed to forward copies of this resolution to the President of the United States, to the President of the Senate of the United States, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to each of the Texas Senators and Representatives in Congress; and be it further

Resolved, That the clerk of the house be, and is hereby, directed to send a copy of this resolution to His Excellency the Hon. Alvaro Obregon, President of the Republic of Mexico.

CHAS. G. THOMAS,
Speaker of the House.
LYNCH DAVIDSON,

I certify that house concurrent resolution No. 13 was adopted by the house July 30, 1921.

CARL PHINNEY,
Chief Clerk of the House.

I certify that house concurrent resolution No. 13 was adopted by the Senate August 1, 1921.

W. V. HOWERTON,
Secretary of the Senate.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, what action was taken on the resolution which has just been read?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas merely asked that it be read at the desk.

Mr. LODGE. And that it lie upon the table?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas made no request as to the disposition of the resolution, but it will lie upon the table unless some further request be made in reference to it.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I ask that the resolution may be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I ask that a letter containing a resolution recently adopted by the Supreme Forest Woodmen Circle Convention in the city of New York, in behalf of the so-called Sheppard-Towner bill for the protection of maternity and infancy, be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SUPREME FOREST WOODMEN CIRCLE,
Omaha, Nebr., August 5, 1921.

Senator MORRIS SHEPPARD,
The Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: At the recent meeting of the Supreme Forest Convention in the city of New York the following resolution was unanimously adopted:

"Whereas the Sheppard-Towner bill for the protection of maternity and infancy is now pending before Congress; and

"Whereas the purpose of this measure is to enable the Federal Government, through the Children's Bureau, to cooperate with the States in the distribution of information and instruction relating to the hygiene of maternity and infancy; and

"Whereas the need of such an enactment is shown by the fact that about 200,000 infants and from 15,000 to 20,000 mothers are dying in the United States every year through lack of proper instruction and care, a fact brought out by the Children's Bureau and other child-welfare organizations at the recent hearings in Congress on this bill: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That the Supreme Forest Woodmen Circle, an organization with local units in every section of the United States, hereby indorse this bill and urge Congress to adopt it as soon as possible or practicable; and be it further

"Resolved, That copies of this resolution be sent to Senator MORRIS SHEPPARD and Representative H. M. TOWNER, at Washington, for presentation to Congress."

Fraternally, yours,
[SEAL.]

MARY E. LEA ROCCA,
Supreme Guardian.
DORA ALEXANDER TALLEY,
Supreme Clerk.

Mr. CALDER. I present a petition signed by a number of citizens of the city of Binghamton, N. Y., praying recognition of the independence of the Irish republic. I ask that the petition be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the petition was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed in the RECORD without the names attached, as follows:

To the Foreign Relations Committee of the Senate of the United States,
Washington, D. C.:

We, the undersigned citizens of the United States, residing in the city of Binghamton, New York State, representative by birth or origin of various nations of Europe, including Czechoslovakia, Ukraina, Lithuania, Poland, France, Greece, Russia, and Rumania, have, after a careful and impartial study of the heroic struggle now being made by the dauntless people of Ireland for liberty, and having been convinced of the justification of their demand, cheerfully subscribe to the following:

"Whereas England's brutal policy toward the people of Ireland deserves the condemnation of the justice-loving people of the world; and

"Whereas it appears that a very large percentage of the citizens of America are in favor of and deeply sympathize with the Irish in their aspirations for liberty: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That the Foreign Relations Committee of the United States Senate be, and hereby are, respectfully urged to give their full and unstinted support to joint resolution (S. J. Res. 1) declaring that the independence of the republic of Ireland ought to be recognized by the United States of America."

BINGHAMTON, N. Y., May 20, 1921.

Mr. NICHOLSON. I present a petition from the North Park Stock Growers' Association, of Colorado, relating to legislation regulating the meat and meat-products trade. As this petition is rather brief and contains a great deal of information, I should like to have it printed in the RECORD in full, if there is no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado asks unanimous consent that the petition referred to by him be printed in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. WADSWORTH. May I ask the Senator how long it is?

Mr. NICHOLSON. It is very brief. If the Senator desires to have it read, I will have it read. It is very brief, however.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I do not ask to have it read.

There being no objection, the petition was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

At a meeting of the North Park Stockgrowers' Association, held at Walden, Colo., on August 4, 1921, the following resolution was unanimously adopted:

"Whereas the live-stock industry of the United States is in a deplorable financial condition, involving banks, merchants, and other related lines of business. The producer is selling his cattle for 25 per cent less than the cost of production. The average retail market is taking a gross profit of 100 per cent. The hotels and restaurants are taking a gross profit of from 200 to 400 per cent over the prices that they pay to the wholesalers from whom they buy.

"For many years it has been the pet hobby of the cheap politicians and other unsophisticated persons to cry, 'Stop thief!' at the packers. While the packers may have been guilty of some unfair practices in the past, an investigation of the entire meat industry of the country shows that all the injustices of the packers combined amount to a mere bagatelle compared to the practices of the retail markets, hotels, and restaurant keepers. The excessive prices demanded are placing meats beyond the reach of the average consumer, whereas, considering the wholesale prices, meats should be about the cheapest foods and within the reach of everyone.

"The best illustration of the enormous profits made in retailing meats are the large number of markets in residential sections of our cities, doing a small amount of business but operating under heavy overhead expenses. An investigation of many of these places and their fixed charges prove that they are making a gross profit far exceeding 100 per cent.

"We believe that a great mistake was made by the Federal authorities in restricting the packers to the wholesale meat trade. We know that the large packers, with their knowledge of the trade and business organizations, can distribute every pound of meat for 25 per cent of the present profits made by retailers. The distribution of meats by the smaller packers in the States of Oregon and Washington absolutely prove this contention. When the wholesale price of beef or the prices on the hoof are the same in Oregon and Washington as in the rest of the United States, meats can be purchased 25 to 40 per cent cheaper from the packer-operated retail markets in the Pacific coast cities than in the cities where there are no packer-operated markets. We believe that the retailer should be licensed and limited the same as the packers. If it is fair to limit one, it is fair to limit the other.

"We believe that 40 per cent would be a liberal gross profit for any retail market doing a reasonable amount of business. We also believe that if 30 per cent of the 100 per cent profit now being taken by the retailer were given to the producer that the producer could remain in a state of solvency. We further believe that if the remaining 30 per cent taken by the retail markets were given to the consumer meat products would be placed within the reach of all classes of consumers. The consumption of meat products would increase to such an extent that everyone connected with the live-stock industry would be benefited. As a result of the increased volume of business the overhead percentage charges of both packer and retailer would be materially reduced; railroads would be enabled to reduce rates.

"The live-stock industry is perhaps the most essential basic industry of the United States. The fertility of the soil of a country can only be measured by the amount of live stock that it carries. The present crisis in the live-stock industry is placing it on the brink of destruction, and can only be averted by immediate and intelligent legislation: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That we request the Congress of the United States to immediately enact such legislation as may be necessary to stop excessive profiteering in the retail sale of meats and meat products; be it further

"Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to all Members of Congress from Colorado, requesting them to take prompt action in the matter and help save the live-stock industry from complete destruction."

Mr. NICHOLSON presented a memorial of sundry citizens of La Junta, Colo., remonstrating against the enactment of Senate bill 2135, which they allege gives unlimited authority to the Secretary of the Treasury to deal with the payment of the British war debt to the United States; also questioning President Harding's statement that granting a bonus to ex-service men at this time would disturb the finances of the United States, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the department encampment of Colorado and Wyoming, Grand Army of the Republic, held at Golden, Colo., June 23, 1921, favoring an amendment to the pension laws allowing soldiers' widows a pension although their marriage was at a date subsequent to June 27, 1905, which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the department encampment of Colorado and Wyoming, Grand Army of the Republic, at Golden, Colo., June 22, 1921, favoring the enactment of legislation making monthly payments to soldiers of the Grand Army of the Republic and their widows, which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a petition of the Graphite Corporation, of Greeley, Colo., praying for the enactment of legislation placing a tariff duty on crude amorphous graphite, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition signed by sundry citizens of Glenwood Springs, Colo., praying for the recognition of the republic of Ireland by the Government of the United States, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. NELSON presented a resolution adopted by the convention of the Minnesota Game Protective League, at Gull Lake, Minn., July 15, 1921, and also a resolution of the Gopher Campfire Club, of Belle Lake, Minn., favoring the enactment of Senate bill 1452, to establish shooting grounds for the public, refuges for migratory birds, etc., which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented 67 letters in the nature of memorials from sundry bankers in the State of Minnesota, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation providing for the use of revenue stamps on bank checks, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. TOWNSEND presented memorials of sundry citizens of Grand Haven, Mayville, Elkton, Reese, Ann Arbor, Munith, Stockbridge, and Van Buren County, all in the State of Michigan, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation making stringent regulations for the observance of Sunday in the District of Columbia, which were referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented a resolution adopted at a recent meeting of the Michigan Milk Producers' Association, favoring the enactment of the so-called Fordney filled milk bill, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a resolution adopted by officers and members of Detroit (Mich.) Chapter, Salve Regina, favoring international disarmament, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a resolution adopted by Charles A. Learned Post, No. 1, the American Legion, of Detroit, Mich., favoring an amendment to the Constitution of the United States giving Congress the power to regulate the use for travel of all air space over the earth and within the borders of the United States and its Territories, etc., which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. JONES of Washington presented three memorials of sundry citizens of Mount Vernon, Seattle, and Carrolls, all in the State of Washington, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation making stringent regulations for the observance of Sunday in the District of Columbia, which were referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. McLEAN presented a petition of the Women's Benevolent Association of the Macabees, of Ansonia, Conn., praying for the passage of the so-called Norris resolution relative to Ireland, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a resolution adopted by Benjamin Franklin Council, American Association for the Recognition of the Republic of Ireland, of New Haven, Conn., calling upon Congress not to agree to any settlement of the British debt or further postponement of interest thereon until England recognizes the republic of Ireland, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a petition of sundry candy manufacturers of New Haven, Meriden, and Bridgeport, all in the State of Connecticut, praying that the excise tax on candy imposed under the revenue act of 1918 be repealed, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented memorials of Hannah Benedict Carter Chapter, Daughters of the American Revolution, of New Canaan, and Green Woods Chapter, Daughters of the American Revolution, of Winsted, both in the State of Connecticut, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation commercializing the national parks, which were referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. FERNALD, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to which were referred the following bill and joint resolution, reported them each without amendment:

A bill (H. R. 6514) granting Parramore Post, No. 57, American Legion, permission to construct a memorial building on the Federal site at Abilene, Tex.; and

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 67) stating the true meaning and intent of the provisions relating to the erection and use of the George Washington Memorial Building in the act entitled "An act to increase the limit of cost of certain public buildings; to authorize the enlargement, extension, remodeling, or improvement of certain public buildings; to authorize the erection and completion of public buildings; to authorize the purchase of sites for public buildings; and for other purposes," approved March 4, 1913, as amended.

Mr. KENYON, from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, to which was referred the resolution (S. Res. 110) to investigate activities of the National Grain Dealers' Association and other organizations engaged in combating legislation for the relief of agriculture, reported it without amendment.

Mr. SPENCER, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 157) for the relief of the Rosen Reichardt Brokerage Co., of St. Louis, Mo., reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 245) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (S. 165) for the relief of Hans Weideman, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 246) thereon.

Mr. TRAMMELL, from the Committee on Claims, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 1940) for the relief of the Southern Iron & Metal Co., Jacksonville, Fla. (Rept. No. 247); and

A bill (H. R. 2117) for the relief of the city of West Point, Ga. (Rept. No. 248).

Mr. STANFIELD, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 2356) for the relief of Clarence L. Reames, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 249) thereon.

Mr. BRANDEGEE, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (S. 2272) to amend the act approved October 29, 1919, known as the national motor vehicle theft act, reported it without amendment.

TRADE WITH CHINA.

Mr. BRANDEGEE, from the Committee on the Judiciary I report back favorably with an amendment the bill (H. R.

4810) to authorize the incorporation of companies to promote trade in China. I ask consent of the Senate that I may have leave to file a written report on this bill at some time within a week.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut asks unanimous consent that he may have leave to file a report upon the bill known as the China trade bill within a week. Is there objection?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I inquire of the Senator whether there is a minority report on that measure?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. No. The bill reported by the Senate Committee on the Judiciary is a substitute for the House bill. No member of the committee who voted against it announced his intention to file a minority report. There were several members of the committee who voted against it.

Mr. KING. This is the granting of a charter by the Federal Government to private individuals to engage in private business in some other country, is it?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. No; not exactly, if the Senator will permit me to answer the question by stating my view of it. It is practically the creation of a general Federal incorporation act, under which any five persons may, with the approval of the Secretary of Commerce, file articles of incorporation and become a body corporate for the purpose of transacting business between the people of the United States and the people of China. It proceeds upon an entirely different theory from that upon which the House bill proceeded. The House bill attempted to incorporate citizens of the United States as a corporation for the purpose of conducting business wholly within China. The Committee on the Judiciary of the Senate did not think that Congress, under the commerce clause of the Constitution, which confers the right to regulate foreign commerce among other things, would be constitutionally authorized to incorporate a company for the transaction of business exclusively within the Chinese Republic; but they did take the view that under the right to regulate commerce with foreign nations we would have a right to incorporate a company for the transaction of business between citizens of the United States and citizens of China. However that may be, it is a constitutional question, and can be argued on the floor at the time the Senate acts upon the bill. I do not want to take up the time of the Senate with it now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Connecticut? There being no objection, it is so ordered.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

SAVING OF GOVERNMENT FUNDS.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, Gen. Dawes—who has been doing, I think, admirable work, and I hope his powers may be increased if he can effectuate any reforms—made a statement recently in which he said that the budget bureau had saved substantially $112,000,000. My opinion is that the general is in error, and that he will suffer a rude awakening when the Federal agencies of the executive departments make up their final report for the year. He will find that some of these bureaus in which he reports gains will demand further appropriation and report deficiencies. The distinguished general does not yet know the habits of Government departments and bureaus. However, giving full credence to the general's report, I am offering a bill requiring that the savings referred to by Gen. Dawes be covered into the Treasury. We should "grab" them while we can. I am afraid they will prove illusive, but let us see whether they have been or can be saved. I ask the reference of the bill to the Committee on Appropriations.

The bill (S. 2375) to repeal authorizations for the expenditure of certain moneys for the fiscal year 1922, and to cover the same into the Treasury, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, attention has been called repeatedly to the fact that a great many appropriations which were made, particularly during the war, and which were not absorbed, are carried over, and a practice has grown up under which large appropriations are carried over from year to year, and without any further legislation made available for utilization by the various departments. It is a pernicious practice. No business house in the world could carry on business in that way. I offer a bill, and ask its reference to the Committee on Appropriations, which calls for the return to the Treasury of all these amounts.

These unexpended balances, amounting to tens and, indeed, hundreds of millions of dollars, should be covered into the Treasury immediately, and there should be legislation which will in the future compel the return to the Treasury at the end of each fiscal year of all unexpended balances. The practice of making permanent appropriations and appropriations for an indefinite period is wrong. It makes for waste and extravagance, and is contrary to all sound principles of business administration. It is time for reforms in the business methods of the Government.

The bill (S. 2374) to cover into the Treasury of the United States the balance of all appropriations remaining unexpended on June 30, 1922, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

AMENDMENTS TO TARIFF BILL.

Mr. STANFIELD submitted two amendments intended to be proposed by him to House bill 7456, the tariff bill, which were referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed.

Mr. RANDELL submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to House bill 7456, the tariff bill, which was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED.

Mr. SUTHERLAND, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that on August 9, 1921, they had presented the following enrolled bills to the President of the United States:

S. 252. An act to amend an act approved February 22, 1889, entitled "An act to provide for the division of Dakota into two States and to enable the people of North Dakota, South Dakota, Montana, and Washington to form constitutions and State governments, and to be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States, and to make donations of public lands to such States"; and

S. 732. An act to extend the provisions of section 2455, Revised Statutes, to lands within the abandoned Fort Buford Military Reservation in the States of North Dakota and Montana.

DOCKET OF UNITED STATES SUPREME COURT.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, one of the questions with which we shall soon have to deal seriously is the crowded condition of the dockets of the Federal courts. I ask unanimous consent that there may be printed in the Record a brief article from the Central Law Journal which was written by Mr. Thomas W. Shelton, of Virginia, who is the chairman of the committee on uniformity of judicial procedure of the American Bar Association.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri asks unanimous consent to have printed in the Record the matter presented by him. Is there objection? There being no objection, it is so ordered.

The article referred to is as follows:

"THE DANGER OF THE INCREASED BURDEN UPON THE FEDERAL SUPREME COURT FROM ITS CONTINUALLY EXPANDING DOCKET.

"The conservative Harvard Law Review (vol. 32, p. 538, No. 3), the guide and inspiration of thousands of America's greatest jurists and lawyers, gives expression to the statement that 'the Supreme Court (sic. of the United States) has made a number of loose and inconsistent statements, some of which must necessarily be repudiated.' It is worthy of note that the particular issue in which the above observation appeared was dedicated to Hon. Oliver Wendell Holmes 'on the happy occasion of his eightieth birthday.'

"Consciousness of the high authoritative source of the remark drives the mind of thoughtful men to measuring the possible effect of such a condition and sets one in search of the cause, rather than the verity thereof. It is not necessary to go into the latter, since the very suggestion from any respectable source of carelessness or any other inefficiency, or a lack of conservatism or well considered language in America's great tribunal, is sufficiently alarming. The executive and legislative departments might suspend for a stated period without other result than inconvenience but, should the Supreme Court cease to function at all one dares not predict the result. As a governmental agency that great tribunal, said Thomas Jefferson, 'Has the weight of all manner of conflict on its hands because it is the last appeal of reason.' It alone applies the 'legal checks' that makes possible the perpetuation of the American Republic—democracy administered through a strong republican form of government.

"Now it is of first importance to be mindful that its great power is not derived from a Constitution or statutes or duress, but from the voluntary submission of a highly intelligent and patriotic people justified by their faith, respect, and reverence. For that reason one's heart almost ceases to beat at the thought of a possible cause for lack of reverence. The instance calls for the repetition of sentiments long ago expressed and suggestions then ventured for the lessening of the onerous duties of the court so that its important labors might be leisurely and deliberately performed. But before doing this an humble appreciation of the greatest tribunal of justice on earth is permissible.

"It is respectfully submitted that faith in and submission to the Supreme Court is the cohesion binding together the Union of the States. The history of the court is an interesting and vital story of the conflict and evolution of many years of interstate relations and the establishment of interstate commercial regulations. In bringing about this wholesome status the Supreme Court converted an inert parchment into a plastic, flexible tie, profitably binding the States together in amicable relation and automatically disposing of friction as it arises. No code of statutes prepared by a Solomon would have achieved this marvelous result so necessary to the stability of the new and untried Republic, even though the statutes could have been agreed upon. There is no legislative body on earth that could have enacted enough statutes and sufficiently elastic to have momentarily met the kaleidoscopic developments and changes in interstate political and economic relations during the early growth of the Nation, with its diversified interests and keen antagonisms and rivalries. That is the basis of John Marshall's great reputation, daily growing brighter in the hearts of a grateful people.

"Thus the Supreme Court nurtured the Nation in its infancy, trained it in its youth, and is now guiding it in the straight and narrow way in its maturity. It has been to the Nation a pillar of fire by night. It has guided destructive revolutionary doctrines into beneficial evolutions. The violence of anarchy and the persuasiveness of the demagogue have fitted themselves into the constitutional mold. The oppression of concentrated power and the chicanery of corrupt organizations have ceased to trouble and alarm at its simple word. It is the final arbiter between man and his brother, the State and the church, the citizen and the soldier, and even between Congress and the Chief Executive himself. Who may measure the debt of the country to its highest court?

"And, it is well to add, that there abides in the hearts of the people of this country a sublime faith in their highest tribunal that makes of submission the noblest attribute of national character. That faith is the corner stone upon which rests the very existence of the Republic. It is as beautiful as filial bondage and stronger than the duress of arms. Believing these things, is there a more patriotic duty in the noble profession of the law than the sacred obligation to encourage, foster, and make justifiable that faith in the highest court of the country that is the very breath of its life?

"The Supreme Court of the United States is necessarily the most deliberate body within the conception of the mind of man and requires time for mature thought. Haste in its affairs is not conceivable. But it must not be overlooked that it has its economic side as well as commerce, and its humanity may gradually and unconsciously respond to a public demand for dispatch at the cost of the wisdom and careful expression that made its reputation. It is just that possibility, but not probability, that presents the greatest menace to the strength of the court and through it the destruction or weakening of respect and confidence. The public must continue under the conviction that the Supreme Court weighs its words as if each measured life and death and has plenty of time in which to select the most appropriate. Let us give this sentiment a thought.

"John Marshall handed down but 519 opinions during the entire tenure upon the bench of 34 years and 5 months or substantially 12,390 days, from February 4, 1801, to July 6, 1835. (Carson's Hist. Sup. Ct., p. 286). Deducting approximately 1,788 Sundays and a 30-day annual vacation, aggregating 1,020 days, we have left 9,582 working days. Therefore he averaged an opinion every 18 working days.

"The Supreme Court at its October, 1919, term, ending in June, 1920, 'actually considered 501 cases, of which, 210 were argued orally and 291 submitted on printed arguments' (Atty. Gen.'s Rept., 1920, p. 10). There were 1,019 cases actually pending, 609 of which were disposed of during the term (id. p. 10). Dividing the opinions equally amongst the nine members they each wrote approximately 56 opinions in 291 actual working days, which is ascertained by deducting a 30-day vacation and 44 Sundays. Every five days an opinion had to be produced by each member of the court, assuming that no member was absent from duty—a most improbable premise. This is substantially three times the speed required of John Marshall.

"But since these results are predicated on full work time they do not fairly reflect the actual conditions. Time must be taken out for hearing argument of 210 cases at the bar of the court. More than half of its term the court sits from noon to 4 o'clock. We shall put to one side the considerable time consumed in the consideration of motions, petitions for certiorari, and other incidental duties, rapidly multiplying, that call for the most laborious and conscientious thought and research. No effort has been made to set out other than the most obvious duties performed. It is manifest that the Supreme Court is one of the hardest worked organizations in America with daily increasing duties as will now appear from a comparison of its dockets of yesteryear.

"At the beginning of the October term, 1904, there were 282 cases brought over from the past term and 400 new cases added, totaling 682 cases. Of these 402 were disposed of during the term, leaving untouched 280 or just 2 cases less than in the beginning. Passing the eight intervening years it found awaiting it in October, 1913, a docket of 604 cases carried over from 1912—an increase of about 250 per cent—to which were added 524 new cases, making a total of 1,128 cases. By the hardest exertion and application 593 were disposed of, leaving 535 to be carried over to the October, 1914, docket. It will now be observed that a degree of haste had been forced upon the court. The number of cases disposed of in 1913 was nearly double the entire docket of 1904. A big increase in business is reflected and evidences the necessity for relief, for two reasons. The first is in the interest of prompt hearings, and the second is the subject of this discussion.

"But there is another element. No thoughtful person will be unmindful that nearly all of this work is epoch-making and calls for the supreme genius, learning, patience, research, deliberation, and physical power possessed by these great and able jurists. They not only should not be hurried or harried but they must be permitted to proceed under the conditions that made possible the masterful work of John Marshall and under the inspirations that guided his great mind and spirit. It is pertinent to inquire of the effect upon him of crowding and haste and impatience. As a question of psychology, the people must continue to visualize the Supreme Court as the most deliberate and painstaking and most nearly perfect of human organizations. They love to think so, but they also know that it is the final earthly resort for justice.

"The solution of the trouble, without additions to the present membership, is not so difficult if Congress can be induced to act. And it is believed it will. Without going into details the practical mind naturally turns to the administration of justice as a whole, including the circuit courts of appeals, by an uncompensated group of lawyers and judges who would after a careful study, consultation, and inquiry formulate a program that would form an intelligent and scientific basis for final action by Congress. This is the English way, and it is a sound one. The expansion of the country and the growth of business has been phenomenal and problems of administering justice have increased in proportion. If relief is to be given it must be in a way commensurate with the expansion of the Nation. No statutory patchwork will suffice. Congress would thus convince the people of its good intention and would share a great responsibility with the lawyers, where it belongs.

"THOMAS W. SHELTON."

DOCKETS OF UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURTS.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, the article which I have presented, and which has been ordered printed in the RECORD, deals entirely with the overburdened docket of the Supreme Court of the United States. What is true of that court, as Mr. Shelton so clearly outlines, is even to a greater degree true in regard to the United States district courts in the several districts of the United States. I ask that there may also be printed in the RECORD a brief summary of the actual condition of the dockets of the United States district courts which was furnished me within the last day or two from the office of the Attorney General. This summary shows an intensely interesting state of affairs. There were in 1913, the year before the World War, 52,618 cases commenced in those courts; there were at the end of that year 102,012 cases pending.

If we turn from 1913 to the last year, we find that instead of 52,618 cases having been commenced there were 104,000 cases commenced, which is nearly accurate, though it is partly an estimate, because a few of the reports have not yet been received. Of those 104,000 cases which were commenced in the United States district courts in the year 1920 more than 70,000 were criminal cases. The burdening of the dockets of the courts which have to deal with the great questions of the constitutional rights of the individual with a lot of cases the punishment of which characterizes them as misdemeanors is something which should give us great concern.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. SPENCER. I will yield if the Senator will allow me to finish my statement.

This summary also shows that there were pending at the end of the year 1920, 140,000 cases in the United States district courts, as compared with 102,000 cases in 1913. The condition is one that, of course, interests us and one with which sooner or later we shall have to deal.

Mr. President, if there is no objection, I ask that the table of cases I have presented, setting forth the facts I have stated and the data for other corresponding years, together with a statement of the expenditures incident to the Federal judiciary, may be inserted in the RECORD for our information.

Mr. KING, Mr. HARRISON, and Mr. McKELLAR addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. SPENCER. I yield.

Mr. KING. I hope that the table which has been submitted by the Senator from Missouri may also be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. Some time ago, at the request of a member of the Federal judiciary, I called the attention of the Senate to the enormous amount of work which is now devolving upon the Federal judges, resulting largely from misdemeanor cases, as indicated by the Senator from Missouri. Nearly all of the 70,000 new cases are misdemeanor cases, which ought to be tried by a justice of the peace or by some inferior tribunal. I suggested at that time, and I beg leave to repeat the suggestion, that the Judiciary Committee take cognizance of the situation. I think some instrumentality, some judicial tribunal, may be devised, supplementary to the present Federal courts, in order to handle the misdemeanor cases. If that were done, then the Federal courts could go on looking after the important cases and the little misdemeanor cases, the petty cases, which ought not to be in the existing Federal courts, could be disposed of by the inferior tribunals.

Mr. SPENCER. May I say to the Senator from Utah—and doubtless there will come some suggestion from him that will remedy the situation—that the difficulty lies in the fact while everybody would agree that there ought to be some commission or some inferior tribunal created that would immediately proceed to determine these misdemeanor cases, but under the Constitution of the United States every inferior court which has to do with Federal business is a life office, holding during good behavior, and when we appoint a judge to try misdemeanor cases we have in fact created a new Federal judge, whose term of office may run long after the emergency which caused the creation of the office has ceased to exist.

Mr. KING. I appreciate that; but, in my opinion, the business of the Federal courts in the future will continue to increase, and we could well have some permanent inferior tribunal as a sort of an adjunct to the district courts to take up unimportant matters and to act as referee in bankruptcy and in other matters.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. SPENCER. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I wish to say to the Senator, in view of what he has just said about the crowded dockets of the Supreme Court and of the district courts, that the same statement holds true of a number of the circuit courts of appeal of the United States, notably in the circuit where the Senator from Missouri has his home, the eighth circuit, the docket of which is crowded, so that the court is more than two years behind. In like manner in the sixth circuit the circuit court of appeals is about two years behind. In the fifth circuit the court is not so far behind, but in the second circuit it is very far behind. The same crowded condition exists in all the Federal courts, both in the appellate courts and in the district courts.

Mr. SPENCER. I think the Senator from Tennessee is entirely right.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. SPENCER. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. POMERENE. In view of the statement which has been made, it may be interesting to say a word with regard to the conditions in the Federal court at Cincinnati. Some months ago a movement was set on foot to create a new judgeship in that district. The United States district judge, Hon. John Weld Peck, wrote me on the subject. He has been on the bench about two years. When he was appointed the docket was overcrowded. Now, he is up with his docket, and during the last year he was assigned to Memphis, Tenn., and served one month there, and was subsequently assigned by the Chief Justice of the United States to go to New York, where he also served one month. He is on his job all the time.

Mr. KING. We want more judges like him.

Mr. HARRELD. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. SPENCER. I yield to the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. HARRELD. I should like to ask the Senator from Missouri if his investigations did not disclose that because of the congested condition of the court dockets there are being lost to the Treasury of the United States large amounts of money in fees, fines, and forfeitures? I should like also to inquire if, as a matter of fact, it would not be along the lines of economy to have more judges so as to take care of the congested condition of the business of the Federal courts? In my State a short time ago I made an investigation, and have the figures which show that in the eastern district in my State there is such congestion—and great complaint is made of that—that many cases are being held up, and the Government is absolutely losing money in the way of fines and forfeitures. In my judgment, in that State at least, it would be a matter of economy to provide an additional judge. I wish to know if that is not true also in a great many other districts?

Mr. SPENCER. There can be no doubt, I think, as to the truth of what the Senator from Oklahoma has said.

Mr. WADSWORTH rose.

Mr. McCORMICK. I ask for the regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Missouri to print in the RECORD the matter referred to by him.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President—

Mr. NELSON. In connection with the statement which has been made—

Mr. WADSWORTH. I was going to ask for the regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York asks for the regular order. Is there objection to printing in the RECORD the table referred to by the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. HARRISON. I have no objection to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There being no objection, the table will be printed in the RECORD.

The table referred to is as follows:

Comparison of business and expenditures—Department of Justice and United States courts.

(Includes all cases brought before the United States district courts, excluding naturalization proceedings.)

STATEMENT BY REPRESENTATIVE KELLER.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, along the same line as the documents which have been placed in the RECORD by the Senator from Missouri, and which are very instructive, there appeared in yesterday's paper statements by two very distinguished Republican leaders—one by Representative KELLER, of Minnesota, and the other by Representative FREAR, of Wisconsin. I ask unanimous consent that their statements be placed in the RECORD for the instruction of the Senate.

Mr. KING. May I say to the Senator from Mississippi that the letter of Representative FREAR I offered in connection with my remarks yesterday, and made a part of my remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Mr. President, I should like to inquire what the statements are about.

Mr. HARRISON. I will have them read for the information of the Senator.

Mr. KING. They are about the dye monopoly, and other matters.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The regular order has been called for.

Mr. HARRISON. I did not understand that the Senator objected to the statements referred to by me being printed in the RECORD.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I asked for the regular order in the midst of the discussion on the congested condition of the dockets of the Federal courts.

Mr. SMOOT. In view of the fact that one of the statements has been in the RECORD only once, I do not see why it should not be ordered printed in the RECORD every morning.

Mr. HARRISON. While the Frear statement is very interesting, I do not want it to go in twice. I ask that the Keller statement go in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Mississippi asks unanimous consent that the statement referred to by him be printed in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I will ask the Senator from Mississippi if this statement was not printed in the proceedings of the House of Representatives?

Mr. HARRISON. I do not think so. It would not hurt if it was printed on the Senate side, so that some of the Senators might read it.

Mr. POINDEXTER. They are both printed in the same RECORD. There is no occasion for reprinting it. I have no objection to printing it once, but I do object to printing it twice. I wish the Senator would inquire whether the Representative who wrote the statement did not have it printed in the RECORD.

Mr. HARRISON. If unanimous consent is granted, and I find that it has been placed in the RECORD, I shall not incorporate it again; but I should like to get the consent, because the statement is very instructive.

Mr. POINDEXTER. If the Senator will make that inquiry and act accordingly, I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? There being no objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

REPRESENTATIVE KELLER'S STATEMENT.

"Our ability to compete with other nations for world markets—and consequently our prosperity—primarily depends on reasonable transportation charges, cheap power, low interest, easy rents, low taxation, efficient labor, and systematic distribution. We have adopted a policy which has brought about the exact reverse of these ideal conditions. Our exorbitant transportation rates absorb producers' profits and paralyze production. Our great natural water-power resources are monopolized or undeveloped, and power is correspondingly dear. Interest rates are high, credit is controlled, and speculators are favored over producers. Rents are excessive, taxes are crushing, and our manner of distribution is the most costly and cumbersome in the civilized world. The Government has attempted to legislate on every one of these vital problems within the past six months, but instead of honestly searching for the best way out of our industrial difficulties and welcoming the disinterested advice of economists, scientists, engineers, real financiers, and experts in various lines, the machinery of Government has been commandeered by a little clique, ignorant of the A, B, C's of economics, whose blind obedience to Wall Street is responsible for the stupid, selfish, and shortsighted policy that is retarding our prosperity and creating profound distrust and discontent among the people.

"The President has assumed more power than any of his predecessors and tells Congress what bills to pass and what not to pass. Bills concocted at secret conferences are introduced without being referred to responsible committees. The President's advisors seem to think it possible for this country to lift itself by its economic bootstraps and vaguely promise that a half billion dollar gift to the railroads—which in some mysterious manner is not to increase taxes—will 'restore prosperity.' They would do better to busy themselves with lowering rates, taking off the transportation tax, and seeing to it that the railroads are run efficiently with a minimum of waste. But that is not likely so long as railroad executives can depend upon the administration for lavish gifts.

"In the matter of farm credits—absolutely imperative if the purchasing power of the people is to be restored—the President interfered to block a bill designed to eliminate middlemen and directly aid the producers. As a consequence a camouflaged measure has been passed which will benefit bankers, dealers, and speculators more than it will the actual raisers of farm crops.

"I agree with the President that the revenue bill should have been taken up before the tariff. Tariffs should be based upon the difference in the cost of production at home and abroad. Taxation has become one of the largest items of production. How could a fair tariff be framed when its authors did not know the basic elements that entered into the costs of production? But the Ways and Means Committee was more interested in protecting special privilege than in devising scientific schedules, and the tariff bill was driven through the House under a special rule which limited debate and practically prohibited amendment. It was such a bungling job that it must be rewritten by the Senate. I have been informed that it is intended to shove the revenue bill through the House under another special rule—one of those tricks which makes a farce of representative government. Most Members of the House want to carry out the people's wishes, but a little dominant minority has tied down the safety valve of free discussion until an explosion impends which will scatter the Republican Party from Maine to California.

"The Ways and Means Committee has demonstrated its utter unfitness to deal intelligently with the great financial measures on which to a great degree the prosperity of the country depends. Advocates of intelligently constructive measures were hurried through their testimony with scant courtesy, and I am reliably informed that it was actually proposed to hold no public hearings at all on taxation.

"Taxation is the most important matter that confronts the United States. Federal taxes alone now aggregate approximately $4,000,000,000 a year. One-third of the net income of corporate business is put into State and National taxes. Practically all these taxes are levied upon production. This vast tribute can not be taken from industry without the serious danger of disrupting our entire economic structure. There is not the slightest doubt that much of our business depression is directly due to our unscientific methods of raising revenue. High taxes inflate prices and thus decrease the purchasing power of the public. When declining sales prevent the taxes from being passed along to the public they rest with paralyzing effect upon industry itself. The result is industrial stagnation, with agricultural impoverishment, widespread unemployment, and general distress.

"There is no reason why raising necessary Government revenues should not promote production. There are rules of taxation just as well established as the laws of mathematics. But instead of calling in competent experts, the Ways and Means Committee seeks the advice of a multimillionaire Cabinet officer, whose suggestions seem to be based on preselection promises rather than time-tested principles of economics.

"He suggests repeal of the excess-profits tax, reduction of the higher surtax rates on individual incomes, increase of the corporation tax, retention of the ruinous transportation tax and the nuisance taxes, with new impositions on automobiles and bank checks and increased rates on first-class postage.

"This policy will further depress industry and fail to raise sufficient revenue for the Government's needs. The proposal to repeal the excess-profits tax and to lower the higher individual income surtaxes, without providing any constructive substitute, is special legislation of the most vicious character. Less than 5,000 persons—most of them war profiteers—pay the higher surtaxes on incomes of more than $100,000 annually, yet Secretary Mellon wants to cut in half the $500,000,000 which they contributed to the upkeep of the Government and throw the additional burden upon small manufacturers, jobbers, merchants, and workers and farmers.

"Mr. FORDNEY offers no objection to this—he is very sympathetic to wealth—but he sees the political danger in increasing taxes and seriously proposes that this be avoided by borrowing money for current expenses. This is a contemptible subterfuge, which should not be tolerated. We ought to retire our national debt more rapidly, not increase it. It could be paid off in 30 years if the tax program I have proposed were adopted.

"Taxes can not be reduced unless the administration agrees to a drastic cut in its military expenditures. Ninety-three per cent of our revenue goes for war purposes, and the President strenuously objected to any curtailment of this program. It is possible to lighten taxes on industry, however, provided that the administration and its lieutenants on the Ways and Means Committee quit coddling millionaires and monopolists and seriously consider the taxation of inheritances and land values.

"Several billion dollars annually pass by inheritance in this country. Increased rates on these estates would produce between $500,000,000 and $750,000,000. There is no valid reason why this tax should not be increased. A tax on inheritances is not a tax upon industry. It does not have an injurious effect upon business. Instead, it actually will increase business and add more capital for productive purposes by taking money which otherwise would be held by individual heirs or trusteeships, generally in the form of tax-exempt securities, and diffusing it for productive purposes. According to Secretary of the Treasury Mellon, there is $10,000,000,000 invested in tax-exempt securities. Most of this amount can be reached in no way except through an inheritance tax. One of my bills reduces the rates on earned income, and the inheritance tax bill is in effect a deferred income tax to be collected at a point where evaluation is impossible and where the amount of the levy can not check production or retard investment.

"A 1 per cent tax on land values, with all improvements deducted and an individual exemption of $10,000, would raise approximately $1,000,000,000 annually. The deduction of improvements and the exemption of $10,000 would eliminate practically all farmers and city home owners. The bulk of this billion dollars would be paid by the owners of unused natural resources, of vacant city lots, and those who hold agricultural land out of use for speculative purposes. This tax actually would reduce rents, promote building, and stimulate general production. Taxation of land values always has this effect.

"These bills are before Congress. Two other bills repeal all the nuisance taxes; do away with the tax on transportation; abolish the excess-profits and corporation-income taxes, which have inflated prices and add an element of uncertainty to business; distinguish between earned and unearned income by one-half. This program lifts $1,750,000,000 from industry—virtually cutting the present taxes in two—and replaces this sum by levies that will stimulate production.

"This program would go a long way toward restoring prosperity, but it is hardly considered by the administration's inner circle, whose members are so engrossed in legislating for the interests of 5,000 millionaires that they can not comprehend the needs of the 109,995,000 people who carry on the constructive work of this Nation."

INTERSTATE HIGHWAY SYSTEM.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, a few days ago the Washington Star contained an article charging that some of the States had wrongfully disposed of war material furnished by the Federal Government for use in building and improving public roads in the States. I have a telegram on the subject from the State engineer of Alabama which I wish printed in the RECORD. The charge is not true, so far as Alabama is concerned.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama asks unanimous consent that the telegram referred to by him be printed in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I am not going to object. I am simply going to call the attention of the Senate once more to the fact that I do not believe the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD ought to be a public daily printing bulletin. Every day it is getting worse and worse. The RECORD is supposed to be for the purpose of recording what is done in this body and in the House of Representatives. It is getting now so that more than half of the volume of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD is made up of outside publications, newspaper reports, editorials from different magazines, and so on. We did have it stopped for a while. I am not a Member of the Committee on Printing now, or I assure the Senator I would do everything I could to stop it again.

Mr. HARRISON. Of course, the Senator's remarks are not leveled at the statement of Congressman KELLER.

Mr. SMOOT. I am not speaking of any particular article; I am speaking of them as a whole. The Senator ought to pick up the RECORD to-morrow morning and find what the Senate has done, and then find what is in the RECORD outside of the Senate proceedings. As far as the cost is concerned, of course that does not make any difference, because billions are to be spent for anything now; but I want to say to the Senator that every one of those pages costs the Government of the United States $50 and over to print, besides the cost of carrying it through the mails, and I think we ought to begin to take into consideration even hundreds and thousands of dollars a day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Alabama? There being no objection, it is so ordered.

The telegram is as follows:

MONTGOMERY, ALA., August 6, 1921.

Senator J. THOMAS HEFLIN,
Washington, D. C.:

This department has not disposed of any surplus war materials given Alabama. See article in Washington Star, July 31.

W. S. KELLER, State Engineer.

THE TOBACCO SITUATION.

Mr. SMITH. I introduce a Senate resolution and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration. I will state that this matter came up in the Agricultural Committee and I was authorized by the committee to present this resolution. It simply asks for certain information from the Federal Trade Commission in reference to the condition of tobacco and its sale in this country, both in the raw and in the manufactured form. I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina asks unanimous consent for immediate consideration of a resolution which will be read by the Secretary.

The resolution (S. Res. 129) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Federal Trade Commission be, and is hereby, directed to investigate the tobacco situation in the United States as to the domestic and export trade, with particular reference as to market price to producers for tobacco and the market price for manufactured tobacco and the price of leaf tobacco exported, and report to the Senate as soon as possible the result of such investigation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. SMOOT. I want to say to the Senator that I just received the other day from the Agricultural Department a full statement of everything that is asked for in this resolution.

Mr. SMITH. I think the Senator is mistaken, in view of the fact that there is a claim made that the amount of raw tobacco on hand is so far in excess of any demand that the farmers who produce it in every State I have heard from—and I have heard from a good many, and, as a tobacco producer myself, I know it reflects the condition in my State—are actually hauling their tobacco back into the fields, and in fields where fertilizer is needed they are actually using some of their leaf tobacco for that purpose. There is no market at all for such grades of tobacco, and the claim of those who are purchasing is that they have an oversupply, while at the same time inquiry has revealed the fact that all manufactured tobacco, in the form of snuff, cigarettes, cigars, and chewing tobacco, is at the peak of war prices.

Surely, those who produce it are entitled to know if the condition of the market for the leaf tobacco, both at home and abroad, is such that they can not absorb any more, and then to be informed of the conditions that produce that very anomalous condition, where the manufactured tobacco in all forms is at the peak of war prices, while the material out of which the manufactured form is made is without a market, and is begging for a market. As I specify in the resolution, I would like to have a detailed statement as to the reason why that condition exists, if any can be given, based upon natural laws. The Federal Trade Commission is operating, and they will return to the Senate, without any cost to anybody, their findings, whatever they may be, and I hope that the Senator will allow the resolution to go through.

Mr. SMOOT. I have not yet had time to go over it, but the department sent me information, in response to my inquiry, not as to what was produced or the amount on hand, but as to the consumption, in order that I may make an estimate of what revenue the Government will receive out of the sale of tobacco for the next fiscal year. That information, of course, any Senator can get at anytime by asking the Agricultural Department. It is true that they did not give any reason why the prices are high, or state whether they are high or low.

Mr. SIMMONS. That concerns only the prices of manufactured tobacco, not of leaf tobacco.

Mr. SMOOT. They gave the amount of leaf tobacco supposed to be on hand. They estimated what the crop for this year would be.

Mr. SMITH. If the Senator will allow me, what I am desirous of knowing from the commission which we have established is what are the reasons, if any, for this abnormal difference. A little piece of chewing tobacco which, previous to the war, cost 5 cents, now costs 15 cents. Cigarettes are proportionately high. Cigars are proportionately high. All forms of manufactured tobacco are still at the peak, while the producers of it actually can not find a market at all for certain grades.

Mr. SIMMONS. The data which the Senator from Utah has relates to another phase of the question.

Mr. SMITH. Entirely.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator from Utah is interested in the raw tobacco.

Mr. SMITH. The raw material.

Mr. SIMMONS. He is trying to ascertain the production for the purposes of revenue legislation.

Mr. SMOOT. I am interested in all phases of the question.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I shall have to ask for the regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The regular order is called for. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the resolution submitted by the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator should let the Agriculture Department furnish him with the information, as it has it in hand.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

OHIO RIVER BRIDGE.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1934) granting the consent of Congress to the Huntington & Ohio Bridge Co. to construct, maintain, and operate a highway and street railway toll bridge across the Ohio River, between the city of Huntington, W. Va., and a point opposite in the State of Ohio.

The amendments were, on page 1, line 6, to strike out the word "toll" and to amend the title so as to read: "An act granting the consent of Congress to the Huntington & Ohio Bridge Co. to construct, maintain, and operate a highway and street railway bridge across the Ohio River, between the city of Huntington, W. Va., and a point opposite in the State of Ohio."

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

EXTENSION OF RENTS ACT.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The morning business is closed. Mr. BALL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of Senate bill 2131, the District of Columbia rents act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I shall not object to the consideration of the bill; I shall do nothing to obstruct its disposition; but I expect to explain my position in regard to it in due course. For the present, I shall not make any objection.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2131) to extend for the period of seven months the provisions of Title II of the food control and the District of Columbia rents act, approved October 22, 1919, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon the amendment offered by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BALL] to the committee amendment, which the Secretary will state.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 3, the Senator from Delaware proposes to strike out all of lines 12 to 21, both inclusive, and to insert in lieu thereof the following:

SEC. 123. In all cases where the owner of any rental property, apartment, or hotel has, prior to April 18, 1921, collected or received any rent or charge therefor in excess of the amount fixed in a determination of the commission made and in full force and effect in accordance with the provisions of the title, he may within 30 days after this section takes effect return such excess rental or charge to the tenant directly, and if such return is made within such period the owner shall not become liable under the provisions of section 112 of this act. An owner who has obtained a judgment against a tenant for, or which includes, such rent or charge in excess of the amount fixed in such a determination of the commission shall move to vacate such judgment to the amount of such excess, within 60 days after this section takes effect. In case such motion is not made and such owner does not exercise reasonable diligence to have such judgment vacated, such judgment, to the amount of such excess, shall be null and void.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon the amendment proposed by the Senator from Delaware to the committee amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the next amendment reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 5, line 1, the committee proposes to change the number of the section from 4 to 5.

The amendment was agreed to.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 5, lines 4 to 14, inclusive, the committee proposes to strike out section 5 in the following words:

SEC. 5. That in all cases where the owner has, prior to April 18, 1921, collected any such excess rent or charge he may return such excess to the tenant direct, and in default of his so doing, then, upon application by the tenant to the commission, a rule shall be issued against such owner and served in the same manner as other notices from the commission, requiring such owner to refund such excess to the tenant within 10 days from the service of such rule, and in default of such refund within said 10 days the commission shall proceed to recover double the amount of excess with costs and attorney's fee, as herein provided.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading and to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I do not desire to make any extended remarks upon the bill, but I have grave doubts as to the constitutionality of the measure. It does not seem to me that three years after we have concluded the war Congress has authority to pass a bill of this nature, interfering with contracts made by private parties. That is all I care to say about the measure.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator from Connecticut a question. I agree with the Senator; I have very grave doubts myself about the constitutionality of the bill; but what more power had we under the Constitution three years ago to deal with this particular subject than we have now?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I am unable to cite anything more specific in the Constitution authorizing such legislation than that during a war, exercising the so-called war powers, Congress has power to do anything that in the judgment of Congress is necessary to win the war. That is the basis of all such legislation originally, and I think it falls to the ground when we are at peace.

Mr. BORAH. I only desire to say, Mr. President, that in my opinion the whole theory upon which these war powers were extended to such subjects as this has no basis in the Constitution at all. There are certain war powers given Congress in the Constitution, and those powers are defined. The Congress of the United States can exercise no powers in war any more than it can in peace, except those which are provided for in the Constitution. I want to record again, as I have so often recorded, that this entire theory that in some way or other when war is declared the Constitution disappears and reappears when the war is at an end, is wholly fallacious under our theory of government. The Constitution obtains and is our sole source of authority in war the same as in peace.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, the question in the mind of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] and the suggestion by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE], we may get a little light upon by reference to a case which involved the constitutionality of the act of which the bill is amendatory. It is a case decided by the Supreme Court of the United States. Since the matter was up last week I have been furnished with a very comprehensive and clear discussion of the subject in the form of a brief prepared by certain gentlemen here in the city, which I will make reference to a little later.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Was that a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States or of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia?

Mr. FLETCHER. Of the Supreme Court of the United States. The constitutionality of the act was decided in the case of Block versus Hirsh, and the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia in that case held the law to be invalid. The case was taken to the Supreme Court of the United States, and on April 18, 1921, the Supreme Court of the United States held the act to be constitutional by a 5 to 4 decision.

It is to be noted that the majority opinion of the court based the constitutionality of the act solely and entirely upon the ground that there was, quoting from the opinion, an "emergency growing out of the war, resulting in rental conditions in the District dangerous to the public health and burdensome to public officers, employees, and accessories, and thereby embarrassing the Federal Government in the transaction of the public business." That was the ground upon which the court held the act to be constitutional.

Mr. BORAH. Of course, Mr. President, the logic of that statement is that as soon as war is declared the Constitution of the United States is suspended, and nothing is to be considered except the public interest, and what the Congress of the United States or the court deems to be the public interest.

There is no other conclusion to be drawn from that statement than the fact that the Congress must determine for itself what is in the public interest, regardless of any power which may be defined in the Constitution.

Mr. FLETCHER. The Supreme Court in that decision was very careful to say that the decision of Congress as to an emergency, for instance, was not conclusive. They said in the same opinion:

No doubt it is true that a legislative declaration of facts that are material only as the ground for exacting a rule of law, for instance, that a certain use is a public one, may not be held conclusive by the courts. * * * But a declaration by a legislature concerning public conditions that by necessity and duty it must know is entitled at least to great respect. In this instance Congress stated a publicly notorious and almost world-wide fact. That the emergency declared by the statute did exist must be assumed, and the question is whether Congress was incompetent to meet it in the way in which it has been met by most of the civilized countries of the world.

That was the basis upon which the Supreme Court upheld the constitutionality of the act. The court distinctly said that the fact that we may now say that the emergency continues to exist is not conclusive on the court at all.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. FLETCHER. Certainly.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. What was the date of that decision?

Mr. FLETCHER. April 18, 1921.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. It is possible that the court is correct. Of course, whatever the Supreme Court of the United States decides is the law, whether we think it is a proper interpretation of the situation or not. But the legislation that we are now asked to pass is another effort to extend a war statute, and it is being passed after the Congress by joint resolution has declared that we are no longer at war. Whether the reasoning of the court in that case or its conclusion there would obtain in a suit under the present bill is an entirely different proposition.

Mr. FLETCHER. That is just the point I am coming to. I have no objection to the legislation if it can accomplish any good. So far as I am informed, the commission is a very admirable one. Their decisions have been fair and just and reasonable. I have never had any occasion to come in contact with them, one way or another, and know nothing about the actual transaction of business before the commission, but I take it that they are all honorable citizens of great integrity. I believe there is one woman member of the commission, and all of them have done excellent work. I am not questioning that. It is the principle of the thing to which I can not quite agree, and I think we are establishing here a very dangerous and vicious precedent.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. It seems to me not only that but I can not help considering that it shows a lack of faith in ourselves, for the very men who voted that we are at peace to be now exercising war powers in time of peace and passing legislation that it is admitted could only be passed or justified or palliated when we were at war to save the life of the Nation.

Mr. FLETCHER. It is worth considering now that the Supreme Court, at the time this case was before them, recognized that the statute was to terminate at the end of two years. It is specifically pointed out that it was an emergency measure only to last for two years, and they considered that fact as having a direct bearing on the question of constitutionality.

Now, it expires by its own limitations next October, but the proposal is to continue for 7 months longer. If we can do that for 7 months, why not do it for 12? If we see fit before the 7 months expire, why not propose to extend it another 6 or 7 months?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Will the Senator be good enough to send the decision to me, that I may examine it?

Mr. FLETCHER. I have not the decision; I was reading from the brief; and I am glad to send it to the Senator.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President—

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield to the Senator from California.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I venture to suggest to the Senator that the philosophy of the decision referred to is exactly that which proceeds along the same line as the Supreme Court and inferior Federal courts have held to in many cases during the war. The reasoning is this: The Congress having power to declare war, inferentially has the power to carry on war, inferentially has the power to carry on war successfully if possible, and inferentially has the power to enact such legislation as will aid in the carrying on of war successfully. That power is deraigned directly from the specific delegation of power in the Constitution. Subdivision 18 of section 8 of Article I confers upon or delegates to the Government all powers necessary to carry out the specifically delegated powers.

Upon that theory and upon that reasoning the statute in question was upheld. It was an exercise of the so-called war power. The war being over that power ceases, and I claim with deference, agreeing, I think, with the Senator from Florida, that the decision is not authority now for the enactment of such legislation as the pending bill. Congress in time of peace has no power, and I say it with great deference, to enact a statute of that character. During war days it has the power, if in the judgment of Congress such legislation is in aid of the carrying on successfully of the war in which the Government is engaged. That is the philosophy of all the decisions upon these questions. I have been through many of them and argued many of them.

Mr. FLETCHER. The decision is important not only because it has determined the constitutionality of the act which is sought to be amended, but because it has a direct bearing upon this very question now before us. I contend that the decision itself supports the claim here that this proposed legislation is not constitutional, because the decision in that case involving that question as to this act was based upon the fact that there was an emergency existing during the war and that under those particular circumstances the legislation could be justified. Even then it was an opinion by a divided court of five to four.

There was a very serious question even when the war was on, even when we had 100,000 people more in Washington than we have to-day, even when they could not get accommodations in apartment houses or anywhere else and the public business was jeopardized and hampered and hindered in various ways and people were suffering and were crowded in rooms. Under those circumstances even the Supreme Court by a divided vote of five to four said that the legislation was an attempt to meet that emergency and considered it in the interest of the public and upheld it. Certainly that condition does not exist to-day in the city of Washington.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President—

Mr. FLETCHER. There is no war on, there are no war conditions, there is not that crowded situation that we had then, and there is not that justification for this sort of legislation. In my judgment we are doing a futile thing when we pass the bill to extend that act seven months longer.

I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. WILLIS. I dislike to interrupt the Senator, but I happen to have before me the decision of the Supreme Court, from which I should like to read at least a paragraph or two on that point.

Mr. FLETCHER. I am glad to have the Senator do so.

Mr. WILLIS. The court said right upon the specific point the Senator is now so ably discussing:

The statute embodies a scheme or code which it is needless to set forth, but it should be stated that it ends with the declaration in section 122 that the provisions of title 2 are made necessary by emergencies growing out of the war, resulting in rental conditions in the District dangerous to the public health and burdensome to public officers, employees, and accessories, and thereby embarrassing the Federal Government in the transaction of the public business.

The Senator will observe that the court put this on the ground that the situation then existing, and which was sought to be remedied, resulted in an embarrassment to the Federal Government. Then the court goes on to say:

As emergency legislation the title is to end in two years unless sooner repealed.

The court clearly placed it upon the ground which the Senator has just stated, that it was an emergency. That is set forth, if the Senator will permit me further, in the syllabus, which says:

1. The emergency growing out of the World War clothed the letting of buildings in the District of Columbia with a public interest so great as to justify, despite United States Constitution, fifth amendment, such temporary regulation as is made by the act of October 22, 1919, title 2, section 109—to remain in force two years unless sooner repealed—giving a tenant the privilege of holding over after the expiration of the lease, subject to regulation by the commission appointed by that act, so long as he pays the rent and performs the conditions as fixed by the lease, or as modified by the commission.

The syllabus further said:

2. A limit in time to tide over a passing trouble may justify a law that could not be upheld as a permanent change.

Obviously the implication from that is that the court is upholding the act only upon the basis that there was an emergency growing out of the war, and that in time of peace the court would hold, although that is an inference, but the clear inference, I believe, that in time of peace there would be no such emergency and consequently no need for the act.

Mr. FLETCHER. I am much obliged to the Senator. I think that reinforces the position which I took at the outset. I have already referred to the particular point mentioned, set out in that case.

Let us go back a little and see what the legislation is. The act was passed by Congress on October 22, 1919, and by its terms expires at the end of two years from the date of enactment. It is proposed now to extend that for seven months, or until May 22, 1922.

The act created a commission which has the power to fix rents to be charged and paid for all rental real estate in the District of Columbia, irrespective of the contract of lease entered into between the tenant and the landlord.

It further provides that so long as the tenant shall pay the rent fixed by the commission—not by the landlord, not by agreement, but fixed by the commission—he shall be evicted only in two cases; first, in the case in which the complainant landlord desires the property for his own personal use, and, second, where he wants the property for the purpose of tearing it down in order to immediately construct new rental property.

Those are the only two instances where the owner of the property can do what he likes with his own property. There may be an apartment house in which a tenant may become thoroughly objectionable, may be disorderly, may jeopardize the standing of the whole house and thus depreciate the value of the property, and yet the landlord, even though the tenant may be a renter from month to month, would be utterly unable to dispossess that tenant. The commission could not order it done. The commission has no power under the very terms of the act to evict a tenant or allow a tenant to be evicted except in the two instances which I have mentioned, where the owner desires the property for his personal use or where he desires to tear down the building in order to construct new rental property.

These are the only two instances where a tenant can be put out of possession of the premises.

Now, it is proposed to continue that authority and control over the property which an individual may own, may have built, and put his money into, and expected at the time, of course, to control it. The question is, does that condition which existed when the bill was passed in 1919, nearly two years ago, exist to-day in the District? I take it the committee had to find, before they could feel justified in reporting the pending bill, that that emergency continues to exist. I suppose they found that. From the hearings before that committee, however, I can draw no such conclusion. I have had some occasion to look into those hearings, and I do not believe that the testimony shows that condition to exist; certainly as to the main fact it can not exist, and that is we are not to-day at war and we are not operating under war conditions.

As to the other facts, they do not exist; for instance, according to the testimony before that committee given by Mrs. Taylor, she—estimated that at the beginning of the war there were some 300,000 people in Washington; that the peak of population was 600,000; and that, at the present time, there was somewhere between 400,000 and 460,000.

In other words, there has been a falling off in the population of Washington approaching 200,000 since the so-called rent law was put upon the statute books.

There are also the statements of other witnesses before the committee; for instance, of one real estate agent, "that in 1919 his office received from one to twenty-five applications per day for rooms, apartments, and so forth, whereas to-day they are only receiving one or two." Other testimony before the committee, taken from advertisements in the newspapers of people wanting apartments and advertisements in the newspapers by owners of apartments advertising for tenants, shows that there has been a vast decrease in the number of people wanting accommodations and a vast increase in the number of people who have apartments for which they desire to find tenants.

Statements furnished by both electric street railway companies show, for instance, that the total of the decrease of the two companies in the number of passengers carried per month has been 1,982,273 as compared with the number that traveled in 1919 on those electric street railway cars.

Another real estate operator says:

From reports received, however, it appears that there are for rent in Washington at the present time 354 apartments and 280 dwellings.

People built houses after this law went into effect to a considerable extent in the District, but they built them for sale, not for rent. They built apartments, but they built them for sale. Very few, if any, buildings have been erected for rent since this law was passed, because people are not going to invest their money in an enterprise of that sort and place the property absolutely in the control and under the management and direction of outside individuals.

To-day there are any number of buildings which are advertised for sale and any number of apartments which are advertised for rent. There are here in the Government hotels vacant rooms. One whole building near the Union Station, according to my information, is entirely vacant; it is not now occupied at all. There is no existing condition in the District of Columbia to-day that calls for this proposed drastic regulation—more drastic than any of the regulations which I have known with respect to the housing problem anywhere in the country. It is unfair, arbitrary, and unjust to take charge of private property when there is no emergency existing that would warrant such action.

It may be that some rentals are too high; it may be that some people do not get enough salary to pay the rent which they ought to pay; but the remedy in such cases is, in some way, to increase the salaries, to increase the income. It may be that there are some landlords who are grasping. If so, I hope they will lose out, and that they will lose their tenants. They ought to lose them. If there are any Gradgrinds in the District who are oppressing the people they ought to be made to suffer; but this is not the way to remedy that situation. The way to reduce rents is to increase the number of apartments and the number of buildings which will be for rent. The people are not going to put up buildings or apartments, as I have said, for the purpose of renting them if they can not control their tenants and can not by agreement with the tenants fix the rent that they will derive from their investment.

It may be that people are now building to some extent in the District in spite of this law, but they are doing so with the idea that the law is to end. They have not figured that this law is to be perpetuated in peace times by having it continued time after time just before it expires by its terms. It is for that reason, Mr. President, that I oppose the bill. I think it is unsound in principle; I think that it amounts practically to a confiscation of private property when there is no sort of justification for it.

The emergency which, according to my understanding, ought to be kept in mind in dealing with legislation of this kind is not some sort of imaginary, so-called emergency, or one based upon what some people may think is an excessive charge by landlords for apartments or buildings, but "as used in the law, it means that there is a shortage of living accommodations for the renting population of Washington, as augmented and increased by those who came here to assist the Government in the conduct of the war." That is what the Supreme Court had in mind, I think. Or, to put it in another way, the emergency arose at the time this law was enacted "from the fact of the shortage of housing in Washington, caused by the temporary war-time population, created a public interest in such facilities which justified regulation." That was the basis upon which we had to find the emergency to exist. If the emergency is based upon the fact that rents are higher than tenants can afford to pay, the law becomes simply a confiscation of private property, because there is no escape for a landlord from the payment of his taxes when they are due and from the payment of his interest and other fixed charges, and we undertake to tell the landlord that he must accept whatever we fix as a rental for his property.

I have referred somewhat to this brief. I think it is a very clear and very fair discussion of the facts developed before the committee. It is too long to go in the RECORD, but I should like to ask that the conclusions stated in the brief be inserted in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida asks that the matter referred to by him be inserted in the RECORD. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

CONCLUSIONS.

The testimony taken before the Senate committee clearly establishes the following propositions:

First. That whatever the situation may have been in October, 1919, there is to-day no emergency existing in the District of Columbia justifying the extension of the Ball rent law.

Second. A declaration by Congress now that such an emergency exists would be in direct contradiction of the evidence before the committee.

Third. Such a declaration would be contrary to the testimony even of those who favor a further extension of the act, such as the members of the rent commission, for the testimony adduced in this behalf consists almost entirely of opinions, is not supported by any facts, and is generally contradicted by admissions showing that housing conditions in Washington have entirely changed since the rent law was passed and that no shortage now exists.

Fourth. The affirmative testimony of real estate owners and of men long experienced in the business of renting apartment houses and other properties in Washington shows overwhelmingly that the ratio of vacant apartments, dwellings, and rooms to the number of persons desiring them is rapidly reaching the normal; that there is to-day more vacant houses looking for tenants than there are tenants looking for housing; that these facts are not disputed by any of the witnesses who are seeking an extension of the rent law, and that the only menace to this return to normal conditions is the continuance of congressional restriction.

Fifth. Specific facts and figures submitted to the committee, and undisputed, show that the population of Washington has been greatly reduced by reason of the departure of thousands of persons who were here during the war, all of which is shown particularly by the statistics of the Government departments, street railroad companies, telephone company, and from other reliable sources. The uncontradicted testimony further shows that the Ball Act, although passed as an emergency measure to relieve the housing situation in 1919, has not only failed to give any such relief, but has been the most potent factor in preventing a return to normal conditions; that this legislation has actually prevented the building of rental properties in the District of Columbia; that it is impossible to interest investors in the building of houses or apartments for rent so long as Congress enacts that such investor shall have no control over his investment; that it was only because of the belief that the act would be held invalid by the courts, as it was by the court of appeals, that building operations were beginning to recover, and that since the decision of the Supreme Court upholding the constitutionality of the law, and particularly since the present proposal to extend it for two years longer, it has not only discouraged but made practically impossible all enterprise of this character.

Sixth. It is true that in some instances the rents allowed by the rent commission have been reasonable, and that in other instances they did not permit a fair return on the investment; but whether fair or unfair, the mere fact of the uncertainty as to what the present commission or its successors in the future may do defers the investor from financing and the builder from building rental properties, for in these days of high return on money without risk no man will invest where there is an uncertainty of return, and the chief value and attractiveness of real estate investments has always been a sure return and an absence of mere speculation.

Seventh. The proposed extension of the rent law is even worse for the interests of the District of Columbia than its original enactment, because at that time it was held out to be a purely temporary measure, the act itself providing that it should expire at the end of two years unless sooner repealed, and to extend it now for a further period of two years puts before the investor and builder in Washington the specter of an uncertain, unnecessary, and un-American restraint upon business enterprise. Nor is there any hope of lifting this shadow hereafter, for if Congress now extends the Ball Act for two years, there is nothing to prevent its further extension at the expiration of that period.

Eighth. It was stated at the hearing before the committee that one reason for extending the law was the fear that if not so extended the owners of rental properties in Washington will increase their charges next October. There is no testimony making the basis for such apprehension, the facts as shown being that some rents have been going up, while others have been coming down, and that rents will be reduced just as everything else will be reduced by a decrease of abnormal charges in building materials, interest rates, taxes, insurance, and commodities and service of all kinds. But even if it were true that the expiration of this statute next October would result in instances of increased rent, the same thing would occur at the expiration of the extended period, because so long as this rent law is in existence building will be curtailed and the supply of housing will be restricted. The sooner, therefore, the operation of the act expires the sooner new buildings will be built and the sooner conditions will return to normal.

Ninth. Those who advocate extending the Ball Act, having failed completely to show any housing shortage, crowding conditions, or danger of real estate monopoly, which was believed to exist two years ago and which alone, in the opinion of the Supreme Court, empowered Congress to pass this law, now say that even though no emergency exists, still the rents charged in Washington are higher than the Government employees can afford to pay. This puts the contention where it rightfully belongs—a frank proposal to confiscate private property to make up the deficiency in the compensation paid to the employees of the Government caused by the increased cost of living in all directions. It is upon this ground alone that Congress, under the facts disclosed before the Senate committee, could justify the law, and such justification is not only socialistic and destructive of fundamental law and the traditions of this country but it means socialism in its worst form, for it confiscates not all property but the property of a particular class in a particular community. The next step must be the extension of rent laws to other States and other cities, and then the extension of the principle of fixing prices by law for all forms of property and all kinds of labor, for equality and impartiality will not prevail until all industry and all individual incentive is brought to the dead level of soviet stagnation.

Tenth. The testimony before the Senate committee shows that the only way to reduce the housing shortage in Washington is to build more houses. And the only way to reduce rents is to encourage competition. It is just as idle to pretend that buildings will go up and rents will come down by imposing discriminatory burdens upon both as it is to attempt the impossible feat of pulling one's self over the fence by the straps of one's boots. The continuation of a rent-fixing law in the District of Columbia will just as effectually prevent all new building, and thus require far higher rents, as would a statute bluntly making it unlawful hereafter to erect any new structures in this city.

We believe that every member of the Senate and House has the welfare of the National Capital at heart. And it is because we believe in its future, and have confidence in the good faith and the sense of fairness of Congress, that we have undertaken to present this brief discussion of the rent act and this review of the testimony taken upon the question of continuing the operation of that law. It is the policy of the present administration, as defined by the President himself, that there should be less government in business and more business in government, and that the Government should, wherever it is possible, relieve the business of the country of all war-time restrictions; and every business and professional man of this District who is familiar with local conditions and with the practical effect of the Ball Act, knows that the development of Washington into the city we all hope to see it become will remain unrealized so long as its material development is interfered with by legislation of this kind.

Respectfully submitted.

RICHARD A. FORD,
EDWIN A. KRAUTHOFF,
ABNER H. FERGUSON,
*Counsel in their own behalf
and for other property owners.*

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I wish to say a word in regard to the constitutionality of this proposed measure. It seems to me the opinion which was rendered by the Supreme Court of the United States is not an authority for the constitutionality of this particular measure; in other words, if the reasoning of the Supreme Court be accepted, such a law could only be passed during a state of war. If this measure, therefore, is being urged upon the ground that its legality has been determined by the Supreme Court in the case of Block against Hirsh, I do not believe that that decision will be found to be an authority. I have no doubt we can deal with the subject of rents, but not in this way.

I wish to go back just a moment to express the view which I intimated a moment ago, and that is the view which is so often advanced in a vague and nebulous way, that war powers are powers commensurate with any discretion which the Congress of the United States may see fit to exercise.

I can conceive, Mr. President, of such an exigency and such an emergency arising when war is actually being carried on that we might say, "We will abandon the Constitution of the United States entirely; that it is a restraint and we will throw it aside; we will disregard it, and not presume to act under it." I can conceive of such a condition of affairs when that might be said; but I am speaking now of carrying on war in a constitutional way; that is, under and by authority of the Constitution and according to the principles of constitutional government. Of course, the right of revolution always exists. We might establish a dictatorship instead of a representative Republic. And we might say Congress should be that dictator. But, until we overthrow and renounce the Constitution, it, and it alone, is our sole source of authority for legislation. Holding the view that the war powers, the same as all other powers, are defined by the Constitution, the Congress could exercise no power other than that which is defined and granted by the Constitution.

The able Senator from California [Mr. SHORTRIDGE] has suggested that we have the power to declare war, and inferentially, therefore, to carry on war and inferentially to do whatever is necessary to make the war a success. I accept that doctrine so long as in exercising the power which Congress seeks to exercise it finds authority in the Constitution. But I ask this question: Suppose that Congress should conceive it to be necessary to deny all men the right of trial by jury from the hour that the declaration of war was passed; could we do it? Have we power to suspend any provision of the Constitution which a Congress might assume was somewhat embarrassing to the carrying on of the war?

This question was under consideration during the Civil War, and even so great a man as Mr. Lincoln approved a judgment rendered by a court-martial, largely on the theory which had been advanced that during a state of war anything could be done which was necessary to carry on the war. That was not the language which he used, but that was its purport, nevertheless. That case went to the Supreme Court of the United States, and the Supreme Court held, Ex parte Milligan, in language which ought to be written over the doorway of every legislative and congressional body, that the Constitution of the United States was made for war as well as for peace and that its terms and obligations were binding upon the Congress and all branches of the Government in time of war as well as in time of peace, and that the trial of a party not a member of the Army by a court-martial, the courts being open, was void, and that he was entitled to be tried according to the provisions of the Constitution of the United States in a court and before a jury.

That, Mr. President, is a decision which was rendered shortly after the Civil War. To my mind, it states the only true doctrine of constitutional law in a government which is operating under a written constitution. I recognize, of course, that there are certain war powers which we do not exercise during a state of peace; but they are powers which are defined and provided for a state of war. The men who framed the Constitution of the United States were among the greatest soldiers of the modern world. Washington had just carried out a war against the British Government at the head of the Army. Hamilton was a student of war, and had been actively engaged in war as one of the high officers of the Army. Those two men particularly, together with their associates, understood, of course, that at some time or other in all probability the American Republic would be called upon under the Constitution to carry on war, and therefore they devised and provided the method in which the war powers should be exercised. What I contend is that while those powers are called into activity during a state of war, they are nevertheless found in the language of the Constitution, and there is the only place where we can go to search for power.

I think the doctrine announced by the Supreme Court in this case leads inevitably to the conclusion, which undoubtedly is well lodged in the minds of many people, that when war is declared the Constitution of the United States is suspended. Many people believe, and I heard a Senator upon this floor advance the doctrine during the war, that whatever the Congress should see fit to enact during a state of war was its measure of power under the Constitution. Now, with all due respect to that able Senator, a more vicious doctrine was never advanced in a free Government.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, that doctrine was advanced by only one Senator upon this floor, as I recall.

Mr. BORAH. I think only one Senator had the courage to state it, but a great many undoubtedly entertained the same view, because they voted accordingly. Our authority for any act which we may see fit to pass is just the same to-day as it was upon the day after we declared war, and it was just the same after we declared war as it is to-day, and that is the Constitution of the United States.

This very bill shows the viciousness of any other theory. If you say to a body that it may exercise such power as in its discretion seems necessary, it will extend the time for which it may enact as well as expand its authority for enacting. In this instance, after we have declared the war at an end, after the war is actually closed, after a state of peace actually exists and has existed for three years, and after we have passed a resolution declaring a status of peace, we are still assuming to exercise the powers which the Supreme Court of the United States said could only be exercised during a state of war. Why? Because we were given to believe that our discretion and our judgment was the limit of our power in the passage of laws.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. BORAH. I do.

Mr. McKELLAR. Is not the jurisdiction of Congress over the District of Columbia and its affairs precisely the same as the jurisdiction of a State over its affairs? We have unlimited jurisdiction over the District of Columbia unless it is withheld by the Constitution.

Mr. BORAH. Does the Senator mean that we have power over the District of Columbia other than that which is given to us by the Constitution of the United States?

Mr. McKELLAR. The Constitution gives us plenary powers over the 10-mile-square area of territory known as the District of Columbia, and we have full and plenary powers over it, as I understand.

Mr. BORAH. Could we deny a citizen of the District of Columbia the right of trial by jury?

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, no; not where there is an inhibition of the Constitution. I do not mean that; but I mean that in dealing with matters in the District of Columbia such as the rent of houses and the expiration of leases and various things of that sort, unless we are prohibited by the Constitution from dealing with those matters we have a right to deal with them.

Mr. BORAH. But the Congress of the United States could not invalidate a contract in the District of Columbia.

Mr. McKELLAR. Why, surely not. We can not do anything that is inhibited by the Constitution; but anything that is not prohibited or inhibited by the Constitution, as I understand, under the Constitution we have a right to deal with in the District of Columbia.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. BORAH. I do.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The Senator from Tennessee has just announced a rather revolutionary doctrine. How does the Senator reconcile the idea that Congress has the power to do anything in the District of Columbia that is not prohibited by the Constitution of the United States with amendment 10 of the Constitution, which provides that—

The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people.

It not only reserves powers to the State but—what is very frequently overlooked—it reserves powers to the people of the United States except where they are expressly delegated in the Constitution.

Mr. McKELLAR. I will simply read the part of the Constitution of the United States affecting this matter to the Senator and to the Senate, on page 377 of the Rules and Manual of the United States Senate:

The Congress shall have power * * * to exercise exclusive legislation in all cases whatsoever over such district (not exceeding 10 miles square) as may, by cession of particular States, and the acceptance of Congress, become the seat of the Government of the United States, and to exercise like authority over all places purchased by the consent of the legislature of the State in which the same shall be, for the erection of forts, magazines, arsenals, dockyards, and other needful buildings.

Mr. BORAH. The language is "exclusive legislation"; but what legislation? "Exclusive" is not synonymous with "omnipotent."

Mr. McKELLAR. This is legislation, as I understand. We are legislating for the District of Columbia about rents, and unless otherwise prohibited—

Mr. POINDEXTER. There is not any middle ground. There must be some inalienable and fundamental rights reserved to the people, or there are none at all; and if the proposition of the Senator from Tennessee is correct, then we wipe out the Constitution of the United States so far as the people of the District of Columbia are concerned.

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, quite the contrary. The Senator misunderstands me. My proposition is simply that the people of the District of Columbia are bound by the inhibitions of the Constitution, of course—

Mr. BORAH. The provisions of the Constitution.

Mr. McKELLAR. The provisions of the Constitution.

Mr. BORAH. That is all right. I agree with the Senator.

Mr. McKELLAR. But where the Constitution is silent we have absolute and complete jurisdiction and authority to deal with any matter. My proposition is that on the matter of the control of rents in the District of Columbia there is no inhibition in the Constitution against the Congress controlling them, and under that provision of the Constitution it has plenary power. We have the same kind of power over the District of Columbia that a legislature has in dealing with the affairs of a State. The legislature is limited only by the specific provisions of the constitution of the State and of the Constitution of the United States; and so this body, in dealing with the affairs of the District of Columbia, has complete authority and power except as limited by the provisions of our United States Constitution.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. That is the very point. Of course, the fact that the Constitution gives Congress authority to manage the affairs of the District of Columbia and to pass laws in the management of the affairs of the District of Columbia does not, I trust, in the opinion of the Senator from Tennessee, authorize Congress to violate any of the guaranties of the Constitution to protect the rights of the people?

Mr. McKELLAR. None whatever; why, of course not. My only proposition is that we are authorized and empowered to legislate as to any matter in the District of Columbia, limited only by the provisions of the Constitution.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. There is a constitutional provision which prohibits any State from passing any law which would impair the obligation of a contract. The Senator says Congress has plenary power to legislate about the rents that property shall yield in the District of Columbia. Yes; but if in so legislating, Congress violates a property right, guaranteed by the Constitution, of an inhabitant of the District of Columbia, then the Senator would say the legislation was unconstitutional, would he not?

Mr. McKELLAR. I would.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Certainly.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the bill which we are about to pass upon will soon pass away. It will last only for six months, perhaps, if it ever is enacted at all and the Supreme Court does not declare it unconstitutional; and while we may be concerned in that proposition it is not the primary proposition with me in this debate. For what it is worth, I want to record myself just as often as I can against the vicious principle of constitutional law which has come to be regarded in this country as so well established for a great many people—that is to say, that it is practically, in time of war, a government of unlimited and undefined powers.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. BORAH. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. I simply wish to say that in that statement I heartily and absolutely agree with the Senator from Idaho. There can not be any question about it under the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States right after the Civil War in the Milligan case.

Mr. BORAH. I did not have the Senator in mind when I made the statement. I stated a general belief.

The dissenting opinion in this case states the matter as must necessarily come to be the law of the land if we are going to have the Constitution at all. It says:

If its power is superior to article 1, section 10, and the fourteenth amendment, it is superior to every other limitation upon every power expressed in the Constitution of the United States, commits rights of property to a State's unrestrained conceptions of its interests, and any question of them—remedy against them—is left in such obscurity as to be a denial of both. There is a concession of limitation but no definition of it, and the reasoning of the opinion, as we understand it, and its implications and its incident, establish practically unlimited power.

We are not disposed to further enlarge upon the case or attempt to reconcile the explicit declaration of the Constitution against the power of the State to impair the obligations of a contract or, under any pretense, to disregard the declaration. It is safer, saner, and more consonant with constitutional preeminence and its purposes to regard the declaration of the Constitution as paramount, and not to weaken it by refined dialectics, or bend it to some impulse or emergency "because of some accident of immediate overwhelming interest which appeals to the feelings and distorts judgment."

Mr. President, that is all I desire to say.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE obtained the floor.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I want the attention of the Senator from Connecticut for just a moment. I think I made a statement, in answer to a question which that Senator asked me a while ago, which ought not to have been made, but which was made due to my misunderstanding of his question. If I recall rightly, the Senator asked if Congress could impair the obligation of a contract made here in the city of Washington. If he did ask that question, then my answer was wrong, and was made under misapprehension. There is no inhibition in our Constitution on Congress violating the obligation of a contract. It is not done, but there is no inhibition in the Constitution against it. The inhibition in the Constitution is that no State shall pass any law impairing the obligation of a contract.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Does the Senator think that Congress can do so?

Mr. McKELLAR. I think it can, so far as the District of Columbia is concerned.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The Senator based his whole statement upon an erroneous impression of the question asked him.

Mr. McKELLAR. Some Senator called my attention to it, and I was afraid I had made a misstatement about it.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I will repeat, in substance, my question and the Senator's answer. I stated to the Senator that, of course, he was aware that the United States Constitution provided that no State could pass a law which would impair the obligation of a contract. Then I said, "Does the Senator, who claims that the Constitution gives Congress exclusive jurisdiction to legislate for the District of Columbia, contend that Congress can pass any law which will violate any right guaranteed by the Constitution to the people of the District?"

Mr. McKELLAR. If that was the question, my answer was entirely correct.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I do not agree with the Senator that Congress can pass a law which will impair the obligation of a contract; because I think the framers of the Constitution, while they did not directly in terms prohibit Congress from doing it, assumed, of course, that Congress would not do a thing which it prohibited the States from doing.

Mr. McKELLAR. I think they assumed that; but there is no inhibition in the Constitution itself, except the inhibition placed upon the States, and Congress could pass such a law in dealing with the District of Columbia.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I have no doubt that the Supreme Court would decide that Congress had no authority to do that which would impair the obligation of contracts.

Mr. BORAH. Referring to the statement of the Senator from Tennessee, what would become, then, of the fifth amendment?

Where is your due process of law, if the Congress of the United States can impair the obligation of a contract in the District of Columbia?

Mr. McKELLAR. My proposition was that there is no inhibition against it. But, so far as the question of the Senator from Connecticut is concerned, it was properly asked and properly answered, in my judgment.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I wish to call the attention of Senators to subdivision 11 of section 8 of Article I of the Constitution. Among the specific powers delegated to the Federal Government is this power:

To declare war, grant letters of marque and reprisal, and make rules concerning captures on land and water.

Now, subdivision 18 of the same section delegates this power:

To make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers, and all other powers vested by this Constitution in the Government of the United States, or in any department or officer thereof.

I took occasion to suggest a moment ago that it had been decided in many cases, having these two provisions of the Constitution in mind, that inasmuch as Congress had power to declare war, it had the power to carry on war, it had the power to adopt such ways and means as it deemed necessary to a successful carrying on of war.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President—

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I think the Senator and I will agree.

Mr. BORAH. Provided those means adopted do not conflict with the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Precisely. Wherefore it has been held, and I think soundly and correctly, that anything which logically is calculated or intended to enable the Government to carry on war successfully may be enacted or provided for. It was under that theory that many laws were passed during the late war. Those familiar with the decisions will recall that that was the line of argument adopted by the several courts. But manifestly under that theory there must be some limit, or otherwise you wipe out the Constitution itself.

Whether courts have so said or not, I believe it to be true that whether a given act of legislation is designed logically to carry out a war power may be a legislative question, and very likely, where it is debatable, the judicial department of the Government would not intervene to hold that legislation void as contravening some particular section of the Constitution.

The very act passed here yesterday, this act said to be in aid of the enforcement of the prohibition law, is sustained, if it is to be sustained at all, upon that same theory. The eighteenth amendment gives to Congress the power to enforce that amendment by appropriate legislation. It is true the amendment speaks of intoxicating liquors "for beverage purposes," and those who submitted that amendment to the several States—and I assume the legislatures of the several States which voted to ratify it—so understood. But we were told here by learned Senators and learned lawyers that in aid of that legislation Congress has power to enact a law in respect to the use of intoxicating liquors for medicinal purposes, the argument being that thereby you are aiding in the effective carrying out of the confessed power of Congress in respect to the use of intoxicating liquors for beverage purposes.

So, in respect to this so-called war power, any act during war which has for its object the successful carrying on of war, the preservation of the liberty or the very existence of the Nation, may be said to be within the power of Congress to enact. But assuming that to be legally true, there must be limitations, and I will not prolong my remarks to pursue them. When war has ceased, as matter of fact and as matter of law, this so-called implied or delegated power to carry on war which justifies, if it does, a specific act of legislation, ceases with the termination of the war.

Therefore, to conclude, if there be no war, if we have peace, where is this power to enact this specific legislation in respect to and affecting a state of peace?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. The rule of construction to which the Senator has referred, which justifies the exercise of this power, that is to say, that whatever logically in the mind of Congress was essential to the carrying on of the war, is no different, as I conceive, from the rule of construction which would apply to the exercise of any other power granted to Congress.

In the carrying out of any power, peace powers or any other power, whatever Congress does which is within the implied powers is constitutional. The rule of construction, in other words, is the same in both cases, is it not?

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. It would seem to be so. But let me add this, there is the inherent, inalienable right of self-preservation in a nation, and I do not have to read, to quote Lincoln, the Constitution and parse its every word and sentence in order to determine that a nation has a right to its own life. I go this far, I think, generally agreeing with the learned Senator, that if it should appear to be and be necessary, for the life of the Nation, we may, over and above and beyond the written Constitution of this Republic, do a given thing.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, now the Senator and I do not disagree at all. I agree, as I said a moment ago, that the exigency may arise in which we, as a people, would deem it absolutely necessary to put aside the Constitution entirely; but what I am speaking of is the carrying on of war under the Constitution before we have arrived at the point where we conceive that the Constitution is wholly inadequate and therefore put it aside.

The question which the Senator has raised is precisely the question which the great Webster raised in reply to Hayne. He said to Hayne:—"You may do what you propose to do; I grant you that right; but it is revolution. It is not within the Constitution you are proposing to do it; it is the setting aside of the Constitution. But, so far as we profess to have a Constitution and profess to act under the Constitution and profess not to have revolutionized the Government, we can only exercise such powers as the Constitution grants, whether it is in time of war or in time of peace."

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. And with the great Daniel Webster and the great Senator from Idaho I very fully agree.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, in my opinion this bill violates the Constitution of the United States in two particulars; it at least violates in two particulars the Constitution in so far as the Constitution applies to the action of States, and the question would arise, in the matter of Congress legislating for the District of Columbia, whether or not any such emergency exists as to the rental of houses in the District of Columbia at this particular time, more than two years after the war has closed, as would justify Congress in exercising greater powers upon the property and personal rights of the people of the District of Columbia than a State can exercise upon the people of the State.

This bill, if it should be enacted, in my opinion, as in the opinion also of the Chief Justice of the United States and three members of the Supreme Court, who dissented with him from the opinion of the court in a case coming up from the State of New York, would violate the obligations of contracts.

If a man rents his house for a year, the contract is that the lessee should give it up at the end of a year. If you pass a law providing that he can stay in there as long as he wants to, with the permission of a rent commission established by act of Congress, the contract is entirely changed, violated, and the law of Congress is substituted in its place.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington will suspend. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The READING CLERK. A bill (H. R. 5676) taxing contracts for the sale of grain for future delivery and options for such contracts, and providing for the regulation of boards of trade, and for other purposes.

Mr. BALL. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield to the Senator to submit a request.

Mr. BALL. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business may be temporarily laid aside, to see if we can not complete the consideration of the bill which has been under consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made by the Senator from Washington.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, to conclude the observation which I was just about to make upon the bill which we had under discussion before the unfinished business was laid before the Senate, in addition to violating the obligations of a contract, it in a very substantial manner takes private property for private use. That is something that is expressly prohibited by the Constitution of the United States so far as any legislation affecting either the District of Columbia or the States is concerned. It takes private property for private use for the reason that it takes a dwelling house that may be owned in fee simple by a citizen of the District of Columbia at the expiration of the term of the lease which he may have made upon it and turns it over to another private citizen for his occupancy, because the latter considers it a matter of convenience and advantage that he should have the other man's house. It is in plain, direct, diametric conflict with the Constitution.

Mr. President, I reserve some further comment upon the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States and the reasons given in the decision upon the so-called Ball rent act for a future occasion if the bill shall be brought before the Senate again.

Mr. CAPPER obtained the floor.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. CAPPER. I yield.

Mr. KENYON. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum is suggested. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Fletcher	McKellar	Smith
Ball	Gooding	McNary	Smoot
Borah	Harrell	Nelson	Spencer
Brandeggee	Heflin	New	Stanfield
Broussard	Johnson	Nicholson	Sterling
Bursum	Jones, N. Mex.	Norbeck	Sutherland
Calder	Jones, Wash.	Oddie	Swanson
Cameron	Kellogg	Overman	Townsend

Curtis	King	Polindexter	Warren
Dial	Ladd	Ransdell	Watson, Ga.

Ernst	Lenroot	Shorridge
Fernald	McCormick	Simmons

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-eight Senators have responded to their names. A quorum is present. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER] has the floor.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. CAPPER. Certainly.

LAND GRANT TO STATE OF WASHINGTON.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I have been hoping for a couple of weeks that we would reach on the calendar the bill (H. R. 1475) providing for a grant of land to the State of Washington for a biological station and general research purposes. It is a bill that turns over to the State of Washington for the site of a biological station and general research purposes certain lands that have heretofore been reserved for military purposes and never used. The War Department favors it, the Committee on Military Affairs favors it, and I should like to ask unanimous consent to temporarily lay aside the unfinished business for the consideration of this measure.

If it leads to any discussion, I shall not press the request, except that I wish to say this as a justification for urging its passage at this time: I have a letter from the president of the board of regents of the State university, in which he said:

We have certain important work which is being held up at considerable inconvenience as well as expense and are therefore anxious indeed for its early passage.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside for the immediate consideration of House bill 1475. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 1475) providing for a grant of land to the State of Washington for a biological station and general research purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, on page 1, in line 8, after the word "granted," to insert the words "subject to the conditions and reversion hereinafter provided for," so as to make the bill read:

*Be it enacted, etc., That the title and fee to portions of sections 1, 2, 11, and 12 of township 35 north, of range 3 west of the Willamette meridian, being a military reservation at San Juan Island, in the county of San Juan, State of Washington, containing about 484 acres, be, and the same are hereby, granted, subject to the conditions and reversion hereinafter provided for, to the State of Washington for the use of the University of Washington, for the purpose of a biological station and for general university research purposes, subject, however, to the right of the United States to at any and all time and in any manner assume control of, hold, use, and occupy without license, consent, or leave from said State or university any or all of said land for any and all military, naval, or lighthouse purposes, freed from any conveyances, charges, encumbrances, or liens made, created, permitted, or sanctioned thereon by said State or university: Provided, That the United States shall not be or become liable for any damages or compensation whatever to the said State of Washington or the University of* Washington for any future use by the Government of any or all of the above-described land for any of the above-mentioned purposes: Provided further, That if said lands shall not be used for the purposes hereinabove mentioned the same or such parts thereof not so used shall revert to the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

CONTRACTS FOR FUTURE DELIVERY OF GRAIN.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 5676) taxing contracts for the sale of grain for future delivery, and options for such contracts, and providing for the regulation of boards of trade, and for other purposes.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I ask that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with and that the committee amendment be first considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas asks unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with and that the committee amendments be first considered. May the Chair inquire of the Senator from Kansas whether the committee amendment in the form of a substitute is to be considered and the other amendments are withdrawn?

Mr. CAPPER. That is correct. I wish to take up the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute that was offered last evening.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kansas? There being no objection, it is so ordered. The question now is upon the amendment in the nature of a substitute proposed by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, which will be read.

The READING CLERK. Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

That this act shall be known by the short title of "The future trading act."

SEC. 2. That for the purposes of this act "contract of sale" shall be held to include sales, agreements of sale, and agreements to sell. That the word "person" shall be construed to import the plural or singular and shall include individuals, associations, partnerships, corporations, and trusts. That the word "grain" shall be construed to mean wheat, corn, oats, barley, rye, flax, and sorghum. The term "future delivery," as used herein, shall not include any sale of cash grain for deferred shipment. The words "board of trade" shall be held to include and mean any exchange or association, whether incorporated or unincorporated, of persons who shall be engaged in the business of buying or selling grain or receiving the same for sale on consignment. The act, omission, or failure of any official, agent, or other person acting for any individual, association, partnership, corporation, or trust within the scope of his employment or office shall be deemed the act, omission, or failure of such individual, association, partnership, corporation, or trust, as well as of such official, agent, or other person.

SEC. 3. That in addition to the taxes now imposed by law there is hereby levied a tax amounting to 20 cents per bushel on each bushel involved therein, whether the actual commodity is intended to be delivered or only nominally referred to, upon each and every privilege or option for a contract either of purchase or sale of grain, intending hereby to tax only the transactions known to the trade as "privileges," "bids," "offers," "puts and calls," "indemnities," or "ups and downs."

SEC. 4. That in addition to the taxes now imposed by law there is hereby levied a tax of 20 cents a bushel on every bushel involved therein, upon each contract of sale of grain for future delivery except—

(a) Where the seller is at the time of the making of such contract the owner of the actual physical property covered thereby, or is the grower thereof, or in case either party to the contract is the owner or renter of land on which the same is to be grown, or is an association of such owners, or growers of grain, or of such owners or renters of land; or

(b) Where such contracts are made by or through a member of a board of trade which has been designated by the Secretary of Agriculture as a "contract market," as hereinafter provided, and if such contract is evidenced by a memorandum in writing which shows the date, the parties to such contract and their addresses, the property covered and its price, and the terms of delivery, and provided that each board member shall keep such memorandum for a period of three years from the date thereof, or for a longer period if the Secretary of Agriculture shall so direct, which record shall at all times be open to the inspection of any representative of the United States Department of Agriculture and the United States Department of Justice.

SEC. 5. That the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized and directed to designate boards of trade as "contract markets" when, and only when, such boards of trade comply with the following conditions and requirements:

(a) When located at a terminal market upon which cash grain is sold in sufficient volumes and under such conditions as fairly to reflect the general value of the grain and the difference in value between the various grades of grain, and having adequate storage facilities and recognized official weighing and inspection service.

(b) When the governing board thereof provides for the making and filing, by the board or any member thereof, as the governing board may elect, of reports in accordance with the rules and regulations, and in such manner and form as may be prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture, and whenever in his opinion the public interest requires it, showing the details and terms of all transactions entered into by the board, or the members thereof, either in cash transactions consummated at, on, or in a board of trade, or transactions for future delivery, and when such governing board provides for the keeping of a record by the members of the board of trade showing the details and terms of all cash and future transactions entered into by them, summarized at, on, or in a board of trade, such record to be in permanent form, showing the parties to all such transactions, any assignments or transfers thereof, with the parties thereto, and the manner in which said transactions are fulfilled, discharged, or terminated. Such record shall be required to be kept for a period of three years from the date thereof, or for a longer period if the Secretary of Agriculture shall so direct, and shall at all times be open to the inspection of any representative of the United States Department of Agriculture and United States Department of Justice.

(c) When the governing board thereof prevents the dissemination, by the board or any member thereof, of false, misleading, or inaccurate report, concerning crop or market information or conditions that affect or tend to affect the price of commodities.

(d) When the governing board thereof provides for the prevention of undue or unfair manipulation of prices or the cornering of any grain by the dealers or operators upon such board.

(e) When the governing board thereof admits to membership thereof and all privileges thereon on such board of trade any duly authorized representative of any lawfully formed and conducted cooperative associations of producers having adequate financial responsibility: Provided, That no rule of a contract market against rebating commissions shall apply to the distribution of earnings among the bona fide members of any such cooperative association.

(f) When the governing board shall provide for making effective the final orders or decisions entered pursuant to the provisions of paragraph (b), section 6, of this act.

SEC. 6. That any board of trade desiring to be designated a "contract market" shall make application to the Secretary of Agriculture for such designation and accompany the same with a showing that it complies with the above conditions, and with a sufficient assurance that it will continue to comply with the above requirements.

(a) A commission composed of the Secretary of Agriculture, the Secretary of Commerce, and the Attorney General is authorized to suspend for a period not to exceed six months or to revoke the designation of any board of trade as a "contract market" upon a showing that such board of trade has failed or is failing to comply with the above requirements or is not using reasonable diligence in enforcing its rules of government made a condition of its designation as set forth in section 5. Such suspension or revocation shall only be after a notice to the officers of the board of trade affected and upon a hearing: Provided, That such suspension or revocation shall be final and conclusive unless within 15 days after such suspension or revocation by the said commission such board of trade appeals to the circuit court of appeals for the circuit in which it has its principal place of business by filing with the clerk of such court a written petition praying that the order of the said commission be set aside or modified in the manner stated in the petition, together with a bond in such sum as the court may determine, conditioned that such board of trade will pay the costs of the proceedings if the court so directs. The clerk of the court in which such a petition is filed shall immediately cause a copy thereof to be delivered to the Secretary of Agriculture, chairman of said commission, or any member thereof, and the said commission shall forthwith prepare, certify, and file in the court a full and accurate transcript of the record in such proceedings, including the notice to the board of trade, a copy of the charges, the evidence, and the report and order. The testimony and evidence taken or submitted before the said commission duly certified and filed as aforesaid as a part of the record, shall be considered by the court as the evidence in the case. The proceedings in such cases in the circuit court of appeals shall be made a preferred cause and shall be expedited in every way. Such a court may affirm or set aside the order of the said commission or may direct it to modify its order. No such order of the said commission shall be modified or set aside by the circuit court of appeals unless it is shown by the board of trade that the order is unsupported by the weight of the evidence or was issued without due notice and a reasonable opportunity having been afforded to such board of trade for a hearing, or infringes the Constitution of the United States, or is beyond the jurisdiction of the Secretary of Agriculture: Provided further, That if the Secretary of Agriculture shall refuse to designate as a contract market any board of trade that has made application therefor, then such board of trade may appeal from such refusal to the commission described therein, consisting of the Secretary of Agriculture, the Secretary of Commerce, and the Attorney General of the United States, with the right to appeal as provided for in other cases in this section, the decision on such appeal to be final and binding on all parties interested.

(b) That if the Secretary of Agriculture has reason to believe that any person is violating any of the provisions of this act, or is attempting to manipulate the market price of any grain in violation of the provisions of section 5 hereof, or of any of the rules or regulations made pursuant to its requirements, he may serve upon such person a complaint stating his charge in that respect, to which complaint shall be attached or contained therein a notice of hearing, specifying a day and place not less than three days after the service thereof, requiring such person to show cause why an order should not be made directing that all contract markets until further notice of the said commission refuse all trading privileges thereon to such person. Said hearing may be held in Washington, D. C., or elsewhere, before the said commission or before a referee designated by the Secretary of Agriculture, who shall cause all evidence to be reduced to writing and forthwith transmit the same to the Secretary of Agriculture as chairman of the said commission. Any member of the said commission or said referee shall have authority to administer oaths to witnesses. Upon evidence received the said commission may require all contract markets to refuse such person all trading privileges thereon for such period as may be specified in said order. Notice of such order shall be sent forthwith to the offending person and to the governing boards of said contract markets. After the issuance of the order by the commission as aforesaid the person against whom it is issued may obtain a review of such order or such other equitable relief as to the court may seem just by filing in the United States circuit court of appeals of the circuit in which the petitioner is doing business a written petition praying that the order of the commission be set aside. A copy of such petition shall be forthwith served upon the commission by delivering such copy to its chairman or to any member thereof, and thereupon the commission shall forthwith certify and file in the court a transcript of the record theretofore made, including evidence received. Upon the filing of the transcript the court shall have jurisdiction to affirm, to set aside, or modify the order of the commission, and the findings of the commission as to the facts, if supported by the weight of evidence, shall in like manner be conclusive. In proceedings under paragraphs (a) and (b) the judgment and decree of the court shall be final, except that the same shall be subject to review by the Supreme Court upon certiorari, as provided in section 240 of the Judicial Code.

SEC. 7. That any board of trade that has been designated a contract market in the manner herein provided may have such designation vacated and set aside by giving notice in writing to the Secretary of Agriculture requesting that its designation as a contract market be vacated, which notice shall be served at least 90 days prior to the date named therein, as the date when the vacation of designation shall take effect. Upon receipt of such notice the Secretary of Agriculture shall forthwith order the vacation of the designation of such board of trade as a contract market, effective upon the day named in the notice, and shall forthwith send a copy of the notice and his order to all other contract markets. From and after the date upon which the vacation became effective the said board of trade can thereafter be designated again a contract market by making application to the Secretary of Agriculture in the manner herein provided for an original application.

SEC. 8. That the Secretary of Agriculture may make such investigations as he may deem necessary to ascertain the facts regarding the operations of boards of trade and may publish from time to time, in his discretion, the result of such investigation, and such statistical information gathered therefrom, as he may deem of interest to the public, except data and information which would separately disclose the business transactions of any person, and trade secrets or names of customers: Provided, That nothing in this section shall be construed to prohibit the Secretary of Agriculture from making or issuing such reports as he may deem necessary relative to the conduct of any board of trade or of the transactions of any person found guilty of violating the provisions of this act under the proceedings prescribed in section 6 of this act: Provided further, That the Secretary of Agriculture in any report may include the facts as to any actual transaction on any board of trade without divulging the names of the persons therewith connected. The Secretary of Agriculture, upon his own initiative or in cooperation with existing governmental agencies, shall investigate marketing conditions of grain and grain products, and by-products, including supply and demand for these commodities, cost to the consumer, and handling and transportation charges. He shall likewise compile and furnish to producers, consumers, and distributors, by means of regular or special reports, or by such methods as he may deem most effective, information respecting the grain markets, together with information on supply, demand, prices, and other conditions, in this and other countries that affect the markets.

SEC. 9. That any person who shall fail to evidence any such contract by a memorandum in writing, or to keep the record, or make a report, or who shall fail to pay the tax, as provided in sections 4 and 5 hereof, or who shall fail to pay the tax required in section 3 hereof, shall pay in addition to the tax a penalty equal to 50 per cent of the tax levied against him under this act and shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof, be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned for not more than one year, or both, together with the cost of prosecution.

SEC. 10. That if any provision of this act or the application thereof to any person or circumstances is held invalid, the validity of the remainder of the act and of the application of such provision to other persons and circumstances shall not be affected thereby.

SEC. 11. That no fine, imprisonment, or other penalty shall be enforced for any violation of this act occurring within four months after its passage.

SEC. 12. The Secretary of Agriculture may cooperate with any department or agency of the Government, any State, Territory, District, or possession, or department, agency, or political subdivision thereof, or any person; and shall have the power to appoint, remove, and fix the compensation of such officers and employees, not in conflict with existing law, and make such expenditures for rent outside the District of Columbia, printing, telegrams, telephones, law books, books of reference, periodicals, furniture, stationery, office equipment, travel, and other supplies and expenses as shall be necessary to the administration of this act in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, and there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such sums as may be necessary for such purposes.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, it is nothing new that we hear to-day from the producers of food, from grain dealers and millers, and from the victims of speculation carried on without restriction, of the abominations of speculation in these basic products. It has been heard again and again, though this is the first time a bill has come to a vote in the Senate. But the Senate and the other branch of Congress again and again have had their attention called to this thing and inquiries have been held and hearings given at which over and over it has been charged and admitted that gambling constitutes a great part of all the business transacted on these exchanges. It is an immoral practice. But we are attempting to correct it in this bill, not merely because of its immoral character and influence but because of its arbitrary interference with economic laws and its disturbance of the balance that demand and supply of commodities when left to itself brings about. This great law of nature has always appealed strongly to the sense of justice in all men. Anything that tends to destroy or frustrate this great democratic law of nature, any combination or any distorted mechanism of trade is offensive to the sense of common justice and fair dealing which all men, and certainly we as Americans, cherish.

During the past year the price of wheat and corn has been determined to a large extent not by the demand and supply of the commodity itself but by the fabulous quantities sold on the exchange that never had any existence, that no grain farmer in the world ever planted, ever toiled over its cultivation and harvest, or offered for sale. I claim in behalf of this bill that its sole purpose is to eliminate from the exchanges exactly those operations that do not conform to a market place where prices are determined in accordance with the law of demand and supply. The defenders of these practices of gigantic speculation and gambling do not deny the practices; they rest on the proposition, which in the long run is undoubtedly correct, that speculation can not overcome the law of demand and supply. We admit that it can not. But we know that temporarily, at least, the fictitious demand or fictitious supply created by gambling deals on the exchanges distorts true demand and supply and creates a false price; that it causes, and during the past year has caused, violent and unnatural fluctuations; and that when wheat and corn came on the market a year ago the resumption of options dealing was immediately followed by such an orgy of gambling operations as to drive prices within a period of months far below the cost of production.

Mr. President, when trading in wheat futures was resumed in July of last year, after more than two years of its suspension as a war measure, the "traders" of the Chicago Board of Trade began a great "bear" raid. This bear raid was maintained for nearly 10 consecutive months in the face of the greatest export demand for wheat this country ever experienced. When this raid began December futures opened at $2.75 per bushel. Before it ended the farm price of cash wheat in the grain belt had fallen to 85 cents a bushel.

While this steady decline and tremendous fall of wheat prices was going on during the old crop year ending in June this country established new high records for wheat exports, measured both in dollars and in bushels.

I offer these and other facts as my indictment of the grain gambler. His own market statistics convict him. The Chicago Board of Trade pleads guilty to his evil practices and promises, as it often has before, to abate them. On behalf of national welfare, on behalf of fair dealing and honest markets, I ask that the Nation's lawmakers put an end to this great evil.

The purpose of this bill, Mr. President, is to correct some of the evil practices of the professional speculators on the grain exchanges and to authorize supervision of the grain-futures markets, but not to disturb any of their legitimate and useful functions. It will not put any curb upon free and unlimited hedging by elevator companies, exporters, millers, and other manufacturers of grain products.

Briefly summarized, the evils in the marketing system which this bill undertakes to correct are:

- (a) Market manipulation by large operators.
- (b) Promiscuous and unrestricted speculation in foodstuffs.
- (c) Dissemination of false crop information.
- (d) Gambling in indemnities or "puts" and "calls."
- (e) Arbitrary interference with law of supply and demand.

That these evils exist and should be eliminated is not challenged. They all grow out of dealings in futures. The bill does not touch any transaction in cash grain, for it is expressly provided in the definition section that it shall not include any cash grain for deferred shipment.

The plan of the legislation for correcting the evils is that future transactions shall be engaged in only on certain boards of trade, as, in fact, they now are. It then places the duty upon the boards of trade to correct the evils. It does not tell them how to do it. Their past experience has shown that they know how to do it. Their representatives agree that they will undertake to do it, and really all the legislation does is to compel them to do, under supervision of the Secretary of Agriculture, that which they say they ought to do and ought to have done a long while ago.

Every reasonable suggestion for safeguarding the machinery of the trade has been incorporated in the bill now before the Senate. Let me repeat that the bill does not concern itself at all with the sale or purchase of actual grain, either for present or future delivery. The entire business of buying and selling the actual grain, sometimes called "cash" or "spot" business, is expressly excluded. It deals only with the "future" or "pit" transaction, in which the transfer of actual grain is not contemplated. This legislation does not destroy the hedge; but on the contrary its object is to improve the hedge. It is not a regulation of business in the sense in which that term is usually employed.

What it does, very roughly, is this: It says to the eight boards of trade:

Your body, if it wishes to deal in futures, must prevent the artificial manipulation of prices; you must prevent the circulation by your members of false reports as to crops or markets; you must abolish the most vicious and harmful forms of pure gambling.

It vests in a board of three Cabinet officers the power, not of regulation, but of supervision; the power to see that the boards do correct the abuses; and if they do not, these Cabinet officers have the power, subject to court review, to suspend the offending trader or, as a last resort, the board itself from the privileges of trading in futures.

DOES NOT INTERFERE WITH LEGITIMATE GRAIN TRADE.

Let me repeat that the bill does not interfere with any legitimate function of the board of trade. What it does, in brief, is this:

First. It specifically permits dealing in futures by providing that such dealing shall be carried on in certain markets. At present there are eight markets in which facilities are provided for future trading. All of them are located at terminal markets. The measure provides that the Secretary of Agriculture shall designate such boards of trade as "contract markets." It will be observed that no discretion is lodged in the Secretary of Agriculture, but that he is "directed" to designate such boards as meet the requirements as contract markets. If he refuses, he can be compelled, by mandamus, to make the designation.

Second. As a check on the evil of manipulation, the bill requires future contracts to be evidenced by memorandum in writing. It requires that the governors of the boards of trade shall direct members to make and file reports of such future transactions. It makes such records available to the inspection of the Department of Agriculture and the Department of Justice. At the present time no one can tell from the records what part of the trades in futures are speculative and what part are bona fide hedges. No one should object to this provision except the manipulators. Secrecy is necessary to the manipulator of the market, which is probably the reason the Chicago Board of Trade keeps no records. If a big manipulator undertakes to "bear" the market and the whole world knows he is doing it, he is the loser.

Third. The bill requires the boards of trade to use diligence in preventing the dissemination of false crop reports by its members.

Fourth. The bill requires that the privilege of dealing in futures shall be withdrawn from any board of trade unless it enforces rules which will prevent manipulation. Any manipulation of the market would mean the closing of its future trading business.

The bill then vests with the Secretary of Agriculture power, subject to court review, to investigate an individual member who is charged with disseminating false crop reports or manipulating prices, and, upon finding that such individual has been guilty of such practices, to suspend him from the trading privileges of contract markets. This is subject to court review. It then provides that in case a board of trade itself is not using reasonable diligence to correct these abuses a commission of the Secretary of Agriculture, the Secretary of Commerce, and the Attorney General may suspend its designation as a contract market, subject to a review by the courts.

Publicity is a true precautionary measure in reference to public markets, as it is in many other things. Section 5 of the bill is not an inquisitorial interference with the free course of trade, but merely a sanitary provision calculated to purify the atmosphere of the grain pits and to admonish speculators and gamblers of the right of government to protect the public and legitimate commerce from the abuses on these exchanges. I believe that the effect of this section will be salutary and that the requirement that records shall be made and kept on file of every transaction from its start to final completion will of itself greatly tend to deter big and little gamblers from attempting to interfere by their operations with the markets.

There are three additional provisions which should be noted. They are:

First. The taxing out of existence indemnities or puts and calls. Every representative of the board of trade before the committee admitted their evil and approved of their prohibition. A "put" is an option for a contract of sale; a "call" is an option for a contract of purchase. The consideration of the option is a dollar a thousand bushels. If the market closes to-day at $1.30, I may go to a dealer in Chicago and buy of him a "call." He fixes the "call" price. This "call" price is a fixed amount over the close of to-day's market. If it is a stable market, it may be 5 cents over to-day's market; if a fluctuating market, it may be 10 cents. Let us assume that he fixes the call price at 5 cents over to-day's market, or $1.35. The call is only good for the next day's market. The result of the transaction, then, is this: If the market to-morrow closes at $1.35 or over, I can exercise my option and compel the dealer to sell to me the wheat covered by the call at the call price. If it does not reach that point, I have lost the money paid for the option. The abuses to which this transaction are put are many, and the good it does is so remote and theoretical that all agree that they should be abolished.

Second. By amendment made in the House, the bill provides that contract markets shall permit cooperative associations of producers to membership. A great storm has waged over this provision, but I think it is one of the most commendable features of the bill: The boards of trade say that cooperative associations are now welcome to membership, and, in fact, such associations are members of one or two of the boards of trade. The boards of trade, however, have a rule which prohibits rebating or splitting of commissions. They have never permitted a cooperative association to become a member unless that association distributed its profits upon the basis of the capital invested by its members. Most cooperative associations distribute their profits not upon the basis of capital invested, but upon a patronage or earning basis; that is, the more wheat a man sells through an association the greater his share of the profits, without reference to the man who has contributed to its capital. This, the boards of trade insist, is equivalent to a rebating of commissions; but I do not agree with them. If the cooperative system of marketing can handle the grain more economically or more satisfactorily, it will in time prevail, despite any obstacle that may be placed in its way. Whether the cooperatives can or can not do this time alone will tell. In the meantime they should be encouraged and should be given an even chance. It does not seem to me that it is a matter in which the boards of trade are interested, and that they could well afford to welcome them to membership and give them a chance to show that they can do the business more efficiently than it is being done at present.

Third. The bill as originally introduced in the Senate by myself, and in the House by Mr. TINCER, provided for the elimination of so-called private wires. This was stricken out in the House and has been reinserted by the Senate committee.

Mr. President, it is against the law to run a gambling house anywhere within the United States. But to-day, under the cloak of business respectability, we are permitting the biggest gambling hell in the world to be operated on the Chicago Board of Trade. The grain gamblers have made the exchange building in Chicago the world's greatest gambling house. Monte Carlo or the Casino at Habana are not to be compared with it.

More than 500 private-wire houses have direct connection with the Chicago Board of Trade, according to the Federal Trade Commission, and it costs $3,000,000 a year to maintain them. Then come the wire systems of the Chicago brokerage houses, which seek speculative business where they may. One such system has 66 branches in 19 States. Eight years ago it had only 33. The mileage of the private-wire systems of Chicago Board of Trade members having offices in Chicago exceeds 106,000 miles.

This shows how the gambling game is growing.

The extent and completeness of its system for rounding up suckers explains how the Chicago Board of Trade must "sell" more grain every year than the entire globe produces. Approximately from eighteen and a half to twenty billion bushels of grain are sold at Chicago annually at a value ranging from fifteen to more than twenty billions of dollars.

The private-wire houses reap fortunes from the gambling in futures. A single house will in three days sell as much grain as can be delivered on the futures market in a year. When their wires are not otherwise engaged, they are used for transmitting faked or exaggerated statements of market conditions to get the little fellows into the game for the sake of the commission revenue.

Mr. President, the small gambler in futures has no more chance to win than the small gamster in a gambling house where they use marked cards and loaded dice.

In its constant search for victims to play the market the Chicago Board of Trade does more fishing than goes on in all the Seven Seas. Every week day it casts its net over the United States and Canada. Every night it is drawn in. You can hardly imagine the extent of the catch. Some recent instances are impressive.

One is the admitted embezzlement of $1,187,000 by R. J. Thomson, comptroller of the Minnesota firm of packers, the George A. Hormel Co. Thomson is credited with losing a part of this huge sum in operations on the Chicago Board of Trade.

Another is the closing of the Arcola (Ill.) State Bank and the arrest of its president and cashier, father and son, for a shortage of $400,000, due to losses in the Chicago grain pit.

Still another instance is found at Prophetstown, one of the largest grain centers of Illinois. Prophetstown's most prominent citizen and bank president, George E. Paddock, is now a fugitive from justice at the age of 72. His son, the bank's cashier, indicted with him for embezzlement of $150,000 of depositors' funds, has recently given himself up to the sheriff. Behind the bank room proper examiners found a secret chamber with direct wire connections to Chicago brokerage houses.

E. R. Robertson, prominent real estate and insurance man of Newton, Ill., in a fit of insanity caused from brooding over losses on the Chicago Board of Trade, shot and killed Charles Sutton, member of a grain brokerage firm, then killed himself.

When a cashier of the city treasury at Boston was appointed treasurer the other day, it was discovered he was short $40,000. He had lost it in grain market speculation expecting every day to win.

An Omaha grain operator named Rothschild, with offices at Omaha and St. Louis, staked his all in the Chicago Board of Trade's gambling game and lost, then turned on the gas and died.

A widow at Topeka, Kans., is suing to recover $35,000 lost in grain speculation last spring. A bookkeeper in a grain operator's office tells me the country would be shocked if it knew how many women were "playing the market."

At Corning, Kans., only a few weeks ago, after using the money of others in market flyers, and losing it, E. A. Miller, manager of the Farmers' Elevator Co., took strychnine when exposure came, ending his hopeless efforts to win back these losses.

Elevator managers, I am told, are particularly susceptible to the grain gambling mania. At one of our hearings A. L. Middleton, member of a farmers' cooperative elevator company at Eagle Grove, Iowa, testified that so many elevator managers had gone wrong in Iowa that his company had instructed its manager not to use the "hedge" except when requested to by vote of the directors.

This country is strewn with the financial carcasses of thousands of men who have been ruined in the Chicago grain pit. I have had scores of personal letters citing most pathetic cases. The almost constant stream of suicides and embezzlements for this cause in the day's news shows that the board of trade gambling game is widespread and claims many victims yearly.

Mr. President, of what use is it to abolish public gambling or to abolish the lottery when an institution is maintained in the small town to which every man is invited to drop in and gamble a few dollars on the grain market? It has been said many times during the hearings before the committee that his chance of winning was not one in twenty. The effect on the market is certainly harmful, for whether it affects the prices up or down it is an unwholesome and artificial market which is thus created.

It has been argued that it is necessary to have the small gambler in the small town to maintain the hedge. I do not believe it; probably half of the representatives of the boards of trade do not believe it and say so. It is a matter not capable of exact proof. I do want to say this, however: It is unbelievable to my mind that the merchandising of the foodstuffs of the country can not exist without a thousand gambling houses scattered all over the country engaged in gambling in the products of the farmer. I do not want my bread any cheaper if my gain comes from the widow who has gambled away her life insurance money, or from the farmer who has gambled away the savings of a lifetime, or from the bank clerk who has gambled himself into the penitentiary.

BOARD OF TRADE WILL NOT CLEAN UP.

Mr. President, probably the strongest argument that can be used at the moment in support of any contention that the grain exchanges should be placed under Government supervision is to quote the words of the Chicago Board of Trade's president and directors who outlined and described the evils of the trade (Exhibit B, pp. 474-478, hearing before the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, United States Senate, on H. R. 5676) and, as early as April 12, 1921, promised prompt remedial action by the board of trade. In the same volume, page 485, J. P. Griffin, president, in a letter to Mr. Gates, set "July 25, as the date when the proposed amendments will be enacted into rules," but that date has passed and no report has been made by committees. Apparently the board of trade is making no effort to eliminate the evils which everyone admits exist.

Only yesterday I received a letter from a well-known member of the Chicago Board of Trade in which he says:

"Puts" and "calls" are still rampant and "private wires" are endeavoring to stave off action until Congress adjourns. To-day, like all business days for years past, Armour is selling all the "puts" and "calls" in unlimited quantities that the "traders" will buy. If he can manipulate the markets to-morrow, so that they will not advance above "calls" or decline below "puts" the $10,000 or $20,000 which the farmer, the barber, and the blacksmith has bet with him to-day will be "velvet." They call it speculation, but they know and you know it is the cheapest sort of gambling.

Personally, I visited the wheat pit this afternoon ("puts" and "calls" are traded in between 1.30 p. m. and 2.30 p. m.) and Armour's representative, George A. Seaverns, was surrounded by anxious buyers of "puts" and "calls" on wheat, who were taking them as fast as he could write down the transactions. In the corn pit I found H. E. Schwarz, another agent, was performing the same service in corn.

A very large percentage of the membership of the board of trade are criticizing the directors for their failure to keep faith with you gentlemen in Washington, especially in so far as the abolition of "puts" and "calls" are concerned, for every member knows that it did not require the appointment of a committee, nor any delay exceeding 20 days from the date when they declared against further tolerating them, to have utterly abolished "puts" and "calls." All of this spread-eagle stuff is to gain time and quiet any criticism from Washington. In the meantime, Armour is the bookmaker and absorbing the same as a pool room absorbs the suckers' bets which roll in over private wires from every village and hamlet of the great West.

OBJECTIONS TO THE BILL ANSWERED.

Mr. President, what are the objections to the pending measure by the exchanges? First, they say that the law is unconstitutional because of the use of the taxing power. The use of the taxing power for similar purposes has very many times been used by Congress. The cotton futures act is an example. In McRae v. the United States (195 United States, 27), the Supreme Court of the United States expressly said that the power of Congress to tax was its broadest power; and that the courts would not inquire into the reason for the use of the power; and in that case they sustained the law, which taxed artificially colored oleomargarine out of existence, when the entire history of the law shows that it was not, in fact, a revenue measure. I am advised by able lawyers that the proposed law is entirely constitutional.

Aside from their objection to the cooperative section, the great burden of the objection of the exchanges is the well-known cry, governmental regulation. I submit for the careful consideration of the Senate that this is not a regulatory measure. It is a measure which points out the evils, and gives the business itself the right and the power to correct them, and vests in the Government only the power of supervision and says to them that they themselves must correct these evils, or the Government will undertake to do it.

The powers conferred by the bill are as follows:

First. The Secretary of Agriculture is directed to designate certain contract markets. Those markets which comply with the conditions are entitled to be so designated.

Second. Records of their transactions are required to be preserved for three years "or for a longer period if the Secretary of Agriculture shall so direct." Certainly no hughaboo can be made out of vesting the power with the Secretary of Agriculture to require them to preserve their records for a longer period.

Third. Section 5, subsection B, requires the governing board of the contract markets to provide for the making and filing of reports "in accordance with the rules and regulations and in such manner and form as may be prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture and whenever, in his opinion, the public need requires it." It will be assumed that if the records maintained are intelligible the Secretary will be satisfied, and that he will never exercise this power unless some member refuses to keep records which are intelligible.

Every other power is vested in the governing board of the exchange themselves. Every subsection of section 5 that places a requirement commences with the words, "When the governing board thereof."

So much for regulation.

When it comes to the matter of enforcing the law, that power must be in some one. It would be absurd to enact a law without providing for its enforcement. Aside from the usual penalty clause two methods are used. One of them was placed in the bill at the suggestion of the exchanges, and that was to provide that in case one member of a board of trade manipulated prices or circulated false reports the Secretary of Agriculture, after a hearing, shall suspend him from the privileges of future trading. The second method is that if a board of trade are not using reasonable diligence in cleaning up their house a commission of three—the Secretaries of Agriculture and Commerce and the Attorney General—may suspend their privilege as a contract market, and both of these are subject to court review.

Mr. President, the principal complaint growing out of governmental regulation is that the power is, in the last analysis, exercised by subordinates. The powers lodged in this bill to a great extent are such that they can not be delegated. No one but the Cabinet members themselves can sit upon this commission in finally passing upon the question as to whether the contract market shall remain in business.

The fact about the matter is that the objection on the ground of regulation will not bear the test of analysis. There is no regulatory power lodged in the bill except the very minor one as to the manner in which records should be kept. The other powers are vested in the governing boards of the exchanges themselves. Powers of enforcement of the law are vested in officials of the Government, subject to court review, and it is respectfully submitted that powers of enforcement can be lodged nowhere else.

A great many opponents of the measure who appeared before the two committees, representing the grain trade generally, agreed that in view of the storm that has raged about their operations for years some legislation would be helpful to the grain trade. I quote from the statements of some of the representatives of the grain business who appeared before the committees.

The following colloquy occurred between Mr. Julius Barnes and the chairman of the committee, the Senator from Nebraska:

The CHAIRMAN. I think you will agree there are a good many things going on on the boards of trade that ought to be eliminated if they can be.

Mr. BARNES. Yes, Senator. My whole emphasis is that the exchanges have clearly made some progress in eliminating those things. Take these spectacular corners of 20 years ago. The business conscience which thought they were smart has entirely altered.

The CHAIRMAN. Your theory is that it will improve itself if we let it alone?

Mr. BARNES. Yes, Senator. Is it not possible under some conditions that corrective legislation might hasten those things or, even in some cases, it might bring reforms that the exchanges themselves could not possibly reach by their own authority?

Mr. BARNES. Yes; that is true. I must recognize that.

Mr. Barnes had stated that he believed that if the exchanges were let alone they would correct these evils, and that they were getting better. He was asked if the gambling in "puts and calls" had not been going on for many years, and he was then asked:

Senator CAPPER. * * * Have there been any rules and regulations of boards of trade laid down that would tend to eliminate that evil—and everybody admits it is a great evil?

Mr. BARNES. No. I think that is a fair shot at the exchanges. They should have eliminated that some time ago, because the public sentiment of the exchanges is almost unanimously behind their elimination. You are quite right in pointing out that the exchanges have failed to do that, even after public sentiment has formed, but they will do it.

Senator CAPPER. I think you will find the same statement made in the testimony that was given 12 years ago that you have made, and that is the only reason why I think there is more pressure back of this legislation at this time than ever before. There is a feeling, I think, on the part of a great many that the time has come when Congress must step in and undertake to do some of these things that the grain trade itself has failed to do.

Mr. BARNES. Senator, it is because I quite appreciate that that must be the situation—that there is pressure upon your office—that I have made these suggestions in regard to this bill. They are what, I believe, would preserve its constructive features and not make it destructive, although I am opposed to the regulation on principle.

Later on, he said:

Mr. BARNES. Well you see we are quite in accord as to the desirability of all of the enactments in the bill up to the point of intrusting in some hands the authority to close those exchanges. That, I think, is fatal because it undermines the trading.

Senator KENDRICK. That could be done with great discretion; I have no doubt about that.

Mr. BARNES. That is true. If you can alter that so as to put certain safeguards and assurances that it would not have the hasty judgment of any single man, no matter what his office, you have modified that very considerably.

Since Mr. Barnes testified the committee has so amended the bill to meet his objection that the power should not be vested in the hands of a single man.

Mr. Moore, of the Duluth Board of Trade, said concerning this measure:

I feel that the spirit back of this proposed legislation means to be constructive and intends to deal fairly with all interests affected. I am not here to object to Government supervision of exchanges, if Congress feels that the public welfare requires it.

Manipulation is so infrequent and usually obvious when it is in process that the exchanges can easily check it when they see the strong arm of the Government is behind it, with their laws already existing.

Mr. Crosby, of the Crosby Milling Co., of Minneapolis, said:

Mr. CROSBY. I think, Senator, our objection to the bill is to the feature of governmental control.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you not want any governmental control?

Mr. CROSBY. We do not have the slightest objection to supervision.

When Mr. Arnot, of the Chicago Board of Trade, was on the stand his attention was directed to the evil practices which had been enumerated by Mr. Griffin, the president of the Chicago Board of Trade, to the directors. He was then asked if those evils had not been embodied in the general principle of this bill. His answer was as follows:

Mr. ARNOT. Yes, sir; I think you are right, Senator; I think they will be covered, but Senator, there are other things that come up from time to time that might be wrong, some practice, for instance, that was never experienced before which we would want to correct. There is no bill that can cover all of these things that might go wrong on an exchange. However, it is the duty of the men who are there and in touch with conditions to find out and correct those things, and they should be made to do that. That has always been my opinion and is yet. They can do it better with authority back of them than otherwise, but it is up to them to do it.

Mr. Wells, of Minneapolis, summed up his position in a few words:

Mr. WELLS. Senator, I am not opposed to some legislation on the subject of grain trading or grain exchanges. I do not think any grain exchange opposes some legislation which will make that exchange directly responsible to the Government for the proper conduct of its business. I think what they resent is an interference with the internal operations of the exchange which jeopardizes the operation of the market.

Mr. Wells presented the amendment which the exchanges desired, and then said of it:

I do believe that under the bill as amended we can function, and I think we would cooperate in every way to make it a success, but to go further and introduce more drastic features I doubt very much whether it would be anything but a case of strangulation—a slow death.

He also said:

I quite agree with your expression the other day, Senator, that we would gain a certain prestige or gain a certain public confidence if we were directly responsible to some governmental agency.

Senator CAPPER. I think you said you would be in favor of some kind of legislation?

Mr. WELLS. I favor a supervision which does not extend to the point of regulation. I favor making accessible to the proper Government authority such information as he may require when the public interests demand it.

Senator McNARY. If the proposed measure and the amendments that you have submitted this morning were written upon the statute books and became a law, is it your opinion that that law would place such restrictions and difficulties upon the grain markets as to injuriously affect them?

Mr. WELLS. I believe that if the law as proposed were wisely and fairly administered the grain exchanges could continue to function satisfactorily. I think that temporarily the investing public might avoid the exchanges, but I think they would ultimately come back.

These were all statements made before the Senate committee.

At the time the representatives of the boards of trade appeared before the House committee the bill was in the form in which it was originally introduced in the Senate by myself and in the House by Mr. TINCHER. Of the bill as originally introduced, which is in substance the same as the bill now before the Senate, Mr. Wells, of the Minneapolis Board of Trade, speaking before the House committee, said:

H. R. 2363, the so-called Tinchler bill, embodies a great many constructive ideas, and with certain modifications, to make it practical in its operation and to preserve the hedging markets, would, in my judgment, prove constructive legislation.

He also said:

It is rather significant, and I think will give you a little confidence in the position of the grain trade, to know that there is hardly a provision in the bill H. R. 2363, Mr. TINCHER's bill, which has not been covered prior to this hearing and subsequent to the general discussion of this subject by recommendations and resolutions of the boards of directors of the various grain exchanges of this country.

Mr. Griffin, the president of the Chicago Board of Trade, which board of trade, I might say, is the strongest opponent of this sort of legislation, said before the House committee, in opening his remarks, as follows:

I also concur in the statement of Mr. Wells that the Tinchler bill has many elements of a constructive character. In principle, I wish to say to you, I indorse the Tinchler bill. In precise detail I believe it needs amendment, largely to meet practical questions.

The original bill also had the indorsement of a number of other representatives of the grain exchanges.

PRICES OF FOODSTUFFS MANIPULATED BY SPECULATORS.

Mr. President, manipulation of the prices of the foodstuffs of the country by individuals for their own profit does exist, and it is conceded by all that it exists. The circulation of false and misleading crop information does exist. The legitimate machinery of the grain business has been prostituted, particularly in the small towns, to the purpose of pure gambling.

Statistics were presented to our committee, which have not been denied, that during certain periods the speculative market was more than three hundred times as large as the cash market. That is to say, there has been bought and sold in the pit three hundred times as much grain as actually existed, the exact figures being that for every 28 bushels of actual grain available 10,000 bushels have been bought or sold.

The Federal Trade Commission, in its recently published report, finds that future trading in grain amounts some years to more than 20,000,000 bushels, or three times all the grain produced in the world, while the actual amount of grain which changes hands at Chicago, where five-sixths of this trading is done, is a small fraction of 1 per cent of these billions of bushels. Transactions last year amounted to fifty-one times the amount of wheat produced in the United States.

That the abuses of the present marketing system should be corrected is not even open to dispute. It is the claim of representatives of the grain business that their correction should be left to the boards of trade themselves, without any legislation. It is interesting to note, however, that in hearings before the committee of the House of Representatives 12 years ago, when a similar bill was before that committee, the representatives of the boards of trade admitted then, as they do now, the existence of abuses, but claimed then, as they do now, that the correction should be left to the boards themselves. During the 12 intervening years very little has been done to correct the abuses.

This is not the first time an attempt has been made to correct these abuses. The matter has been before Congress off and on for more than 20 years. It has failed heretofore, in my judgment, because this is the first time that the taxing power has been attempted for that purpose. To undertake to correct the evils by use of the power over commerce or over the mails has been unsuccessful because the transactions are not matters of interstate commerce; and to forbid the use of the mails does not prohibit, but only interferes with, their operation, and interferes with the legitimate business as well as with the abuse.

Mr. President, in practically all of the Western States and in many of the other States, statutes have been enacted which have undertaken to remedy some of the evils, particularly that of promiscuous gambling. The police power, which is reserved to the States, has made that possible. The difficulty with these statutes is that in nearly every instance they prohibit a transaction where delivery is not intended. To prove intention is difficult and the statutes have been avoided by a simple provision in the contract for the future trade, reciting that it is the intention of both parties to make and accept delivery. Moreover, the States can not cure the evil. All that a single State could do would be to force the operators into another State.

Future trading in grain, almost exactly as it is carried on in this country, was carried on in Germany years ago. In 1896 the Bourse law was passed by Germany, which absolutely prohibited speculation in futures. This was modified in 1900 to permit such trading by members of grain exchanges only. The public in that country was not and is not permitted to speculate in foodstuffs.

The history of this sort of legislation in the Old World, the statutes of our various States, and the many years of study given to the subject by the committees of Congress and of the various departments should be proof enough that evils exist.

For many years there have been complaints of false crop reports. A report will go out to the grain trade that a bountiful rain has assured a tremendous crop in Kansas. The report will be in fact untrue. These became so frequent in 1920 when the great decline in prices occurred that I caused a number of these complaints to be investigated. In nearly every instance the source of such false information was found to be an operator on the "bear" side of the market.

Reports will come out to-day and be contradicted to-morrow. Certainly no harm can come from a requirement, as is found in this bill, that some supervision over reports of crop conditions shall be had, to the end that truth and not falsehoods shall be scattered broadcast.

Manipulation on the "short," or selling, side of the market by big speculators and "bear raids" by their followers, such as happen every year shortly before or immediately following harvest, play directly into the hands of European importers, who are enabled to buy millions of bushels of wheat in the futures market at a reduced price, which they later exchange for cash wheat. On several occasions during this greatest export year for wheat the raiders of the wheat pit depressed the price of the American crop 12 to 14 cents below the world price, below the cheap wheat of South America.

In playing their game the Chicago wheat gamblers sold something they did not possess to bear down the price of something they did not own. They wrecked the true market, depressed the value of the producer's property, and the big speculators and exporters bought wheat cheaper and cheaper.

Board of trade gamblers make wagers on billions of bushels of grain annually. A single commission house in the Chicago Board of Trade will in three days sell as much grain as can be delivered on the futures market in an entire year. Often an entire crop is "sold" before any of the grain has been harvested. One big market operator was "short" 30,000,000 bushels of corn in December when the price broke 4½ cents. It was a lucky break for the operator, although it subtracted from the value of the corn crop of every State in the Union.

Mr. President, every member of a grain exchange who testified before the Agricultural Committee of the Senate acknowledged that there is at times excessive speculation and undesirable speculation in the futures market. It was brought out that a few big traders at times influence prices—manipulate the market—by the great volume of their operations. Also it was shown that a continually fluctuating, and not a stable, market is the desire of the speculators.

Such a market is against the interests of the producer; he must have stable prices in order to market his crops to the best advantage. The reason for this is that rapidly fluctuating prices can not be fully reflected in the prices paid at country stations, so an additional margin must be allowed when buying in the country, and it comes out of the farmer. Also, when prices are fluctuating as they have done for months past, consignments of grain from country points to the terminal markets are more likely to find the bottom price of the day's range than the top. Fluctuations benefit the scalper, whether in the pit or at the cash grain tables, but work against the producer.

OPERATORS ADMIT MARKET IS MANIPULATED.

Mr. President, the representatives of the boards of trade who have appeared before the committees of both House and the Senate have been frank to admit that manipulation goes on. In order that there may be no possible doubt that this manipulation of prices exists, I want to read you a few excerpts from the testimony of witnesses before the committees. In doing this I confine myself to the representatives of the grain trade, the boards of trade, who have appeared in opposition to the bill. It appears in practically all of the testimony of all of the witnesses, and it would only be duplication to refer to the testimony of some of the other witnesses before the House committee.

Mr. Julius Barnes, grain exporter and formerly president of the United States Grain Corporation and Wheat Director, in speaking of manipulation, said that the officers of the boards of trade know very well when manipulation is going on and who is doing it. I quote from his testimony:

Mr. BARNES. Why don't you drive right at the speculator who uses these market facilities?

The CHAIRMAN. Would we not have to separate his contracts from the others and find out how much he did?

Mr. BARNES. Yes, Senator; and that would be a hopeless project if you tried to analyze all the trades.

The CHAIRMAN. Then, how can you drive at him?

Mr. BARNES. The man who is doing that can be located by the size of his orders and the resources that he has.

Senator REED. How? Now, you come to the question.

Mr. BARNES. The exchange authorities themselves know very well by whom and when that is going on.

Senator REED. Then, the exchange authorities must be able to distinguish between that kind of a deal and other kinds of deals?

Mr. BARNES. Not the deal. They go at the individual who originates the deals, and by tracing his operations they can tell whether they are of a size and character such as to come within the definition of manipulation. Business conscience to-day condemns the manipulator.

Senator CAPPER. Is it not a fact that at various times while that bear market was on large operators went on the market and sold wheat in large volume, some of them possibly several million bushels, in the course of a day or two days?

Mr. BARNES. By common report, and I presume that is correct. It was done, Senator; yes.

Senator CAPPER. Now, would not that have a tendency to aggravate the situation and to further depress the market?

Mr. BARNES. Yes; while it lasted.

Senator CAPPER. And would not that work to the injury, first, of the producer?

Mr. BARNES. At that time, yes; of course, it must be met at some stage by buying an equal weight. They must get those contracts back and induce the buying of equal force. The injustice in that, Senator, lies not so much in that transaction as in the fact, which every reasonable man must admit, that through that process of decline under the influence of those sales some farmer may have his confidence undermined and market his product on the lower basis.

Senator CAPPER. Does that particular transaction that I spoke of on the part of the Armour Grain Co., for example, who, under the present rules, can go on the market any day and sell five or ten million bushels of wheat, assist in stabilizing the market or maintaining a steady market?

Mr. BARNES. No; because that is a transaction of great weight under concentrated direction. It is just like any combination and therefore is not fair, and is a matter which the exchange authorities ought to govern and regulate among themselves. The manipulator is an undesirable factor anywhere. He sometimes injects himself into the business of the exchanges, but not so often as in other businesses, or to such a harmful extent, such as building construction and building materials as recently disclosed.

Mr. Hargiss, the president of the Kansas City Board of Trade, testified as follows:

You want to know something of the abuses. I must admit to you that I think manipulation is a grave abuse on the exchange when it is indulged in. I think, on the other hand, that practically all manipulations, with few exceptions, have been on the long side of the market.

Upon being asked whether or not manipulation ought to be prevented, Mr. Hargiss answered:

Oh! absolutely. (S. Res. 275.)

And again, on page 277, he said:

You could put a very heavy penalty upon manipulation. Personally I believe, if there is not already a Federal statute—I know one man that was indicted for manipulation, I believe, but even a stronger criminal law on manipulation would cure the whole thing.

Mr. Arnot, a member of the Chicago Board of Trade, testified:

Senator CAPPER. Would it not be a good plan, then, to have some sort of governmental supervision, such as we contemplate in this bill, which will give an impartial Government official the opportunity to see the books on such an occasion as we have in mind here, when we think the market is being manipulated by somebody for the purpose of depressing the price of the farmers' product?

Mr. ARNOT. I should have absolutely no objection to that.

Mr. Gates, for years president of the Chicago Board of Trade, testified as follows:

Because the trade recognizes the manipulator as an enemy to the whole organization, to the whole trade, we dislike him just as much as any of you gentlemen do, and if we could find any way of shutting him out absolutely we would be glad to do it. Maybe you can help us on some of these problems.

F. M. Crosby, of the Washburn-Crosby Flour Mills, said:

We are heartily in sympathy with the elimination of manipulation. A man should not be permitted to deal in these large volumes. If by supervision of the Secretary the penalty should fall on that man, I do not think you would have manipulation, at least then.

These quotations are made by the leaders of the opposition to this measure, and they speak for themselves.

Frederick B. Wells, of the Minneapolis Board of Trade, and one of the men in charge of the opposition to this measure, in testifying before the House committee in April of this year, said:

No; I wanted to eliminate manipulation, and I still want to do that. I do not call it gambling. I call it speculation. I still want to eliminate manipulative speculation; that is, where large money interests can go into a market and temporarily affect the trend of values one way or the other, up or down.

Mr. Griffin, the president of the Chicago Board of Trade, testifying before the House committee, said, in a formal report to his board of directors, which is published on page 157 of the hearings before the House committee, as follows:

That manipulation of the grain markets has occurred in the past is an admitted fact. Such manipulation, however, has usually been attempted for the purpose of forcing prices upward. Manipulators have been inspired by the belief that it would be possible for them to buy a greater quantity of contract grades of grain than could be delivered at the time and place of delivery for which the contract called. At times such manipulation has been successful; more often it has failed.

It was said a great many years ago that "facts are stubborn things." However persuasive the argument may be that manipulation is possible, and however persuasive the admissions by the members of the boards of trade themselves that manipulation does exist, the most persuasive proof of it is in the actual facts.

VIOLENT FLUCTUATIONS IN THE MARKET.

Mr. President, the system of exchange now conducted by the Chicago Board of Trade is an economic monstrosity. In the business of separating men from their money without proper return of goods or service, its market manipulators and gamblers are doing that for which hold-up men are sent to prison. No American industry other than agriculture would tolerate such a juggling of markets for a single minute. No other commodity seesaws up or down every day and every hour, month after month, as does the price of wheat on the Chicago Board of Trade. It is a great injustice to the producers of this country and a great injury to the country's welfare, progress, and stability.

I propose to cite to you a few instances of fluctuations in the market which, in my judgment, can not be explained by any of the natural and legitimate forces of supply and demand. I cite these instances for two purposes: First, as showing that other forces are at work than the laws of supply and demand, which forces are and must be manipulative in character; and, second, to show that under our system as it now exists the market is unstable. Every witness who appeared at the hearings, on every side of this matter, agreed that a stable market was desirable not only for the producer but for the consumer and for every intermediate handler. The instances which I am about to show are but few of many, and I think it safe to challenge anyone to explain them by any normal play of the forces of supply and demand.

The first of these instances concerns itself with the two weeks commencing July 15, 1920. This was the first two weeks of future trading, or pit transactions, after they were abolished at the commencement of the war. All future transactions in wheat were abolished for three years—from July, 1917, to July 15, 1920. During a part of that time there was governmental control of prices. Governmental control of prices ended on May 31, 1920. During the six weeks between June 1 and July 15, 1920, there was neither governmental control nor future trading. The extreme fluctuation in prices in that six weeks was 28 cents on any grade and 7 cents on Nos. 1 and 2 grades. This was on the Kansas City market. It was a fairly stable market. Future trading was resumed on July 15, 1920. During the next two weeks the price dropped from $2.75 to $2.10, a break of 65 cents, and worked back to $2.45. In other words, a fluctuation in two weeks of nearly three times the extreme fluctuations of the preceding six weeks.

The exact figures for the Kansas City market for wheat during the six weeks between June 1, 1920, and July 15, 1920, when there was neither a Government price nor a future market, as found in the January and February, 1921, hearings before the Senate committee are as follows:

June 1, following the Grain Corporation's control of the grain business of the country, No. 2 hard wheat sold on the floor of the exchange in Kansas City at $2.89 to $2.90 per bushel. The following Monday, June 7, No. 2 hard wheat sold at Kansas City at $2.88 per bushel. Monday, June 14, No. 2 hard wheat sold at $2.85 per bushel; Monday, June 21, No. 2 hard wheat sold at $2.83 per bushel; Monday, June 28, No. 2 hard wheat sold at $2.78 per bushel; Monday, July 6, No. 2 hard wheat sold at $2.81 per bushel; Monday, July 12, No. 2 hard wheat sold at $2.88 per bushel; and on Thursday, July 15, the day future trading was reinstated, No. 2 hard wheat sold on the cash market at $2.88 per bushel and the December option opened in Chicago at $2.75 to $2.72 and closed at $2.70½ or 15½ cents per bushel below the cash.

From these figures it will be observed that from June 1 to July 15 the range in prices on No. 2 hard wheat was only 7 cents per bushel.

Now, if you will turn to the market after July 15, 1920, you will find the following to be the facts, still on the Kansas City market:

Monday, July 19, No. 2 hard wheat sold in Kansas City at $2.87 per bushel, and the December option in Chicago closed at $2.51, or 36 cents below the cash. Monday, July 26, No. 2 hard wheat sold in Kansas City at $2.80, and the Chicago December option closed at $2.47½. On Monday, August 2, No. 2 hard wheat sold in Kansas City at $2.28 a bushel, or a decline of 53 cents a bushel in one week, and the December option closed at $2.13½, or 34 cents per bushel lower than the week previous.

Mr. President, it is difficult to see in the face of these figures, realizing that the wild fluctuation of the two weeks commencing July 15 was immediately after the stable market ending on the same day, how the facilities for hedging assist in stabilizing the market. Numerous explanations have been made by the representatives of the exchanges to account for this situation. It is probable that the facility of hedging would tend to stabilize the market if there were no outside forces at work, but the fact remains that because of the abuses at which this bill is directed hedging is becoming of little value and the market is not stable.

In part, it was the wild fluctuations following the opening of the future market, compared with the stable condition, when there was no future trading, that was the immediate cause for the great wave of discontent that prompted this legislation. On the 1st day of December, 1920, in a single day wheat went down 12 cents and up 10 cents, a fluctuation of 22 cents. On December 2 it went up 17 cents and down 11 cents, and on the 3d it went down 12 cents and up 8 cents. It is impossible to ascribe to any normal and proper force a break in the market of 11 cents and a recovery of 17 cents in three or four hours. The newspapers carried the report that during these three days a half dozen speculators on the Chicago Board of Trade had profits of more than $3,000,000, all of which was at the expense of producer and consumer. If this bill becomes a law, this manipulation of the market will not be possible.

The day the committee reported this bill out of the House the market broke 11 cents. I do not mean to say that this was a punishment visited upon the constituents of the Congress for their effrontery in undertaking to legislate; I do say that the 11-cent break can not be attributed to supply and demand.

While the committee hearings were in progress the following market situation occurred, as shown by the testimony of Rollin E. Smith, of the Bureau of Markets:

May wheat, as the result of short selling running into stop orders and causing a loss of confidence as prices declined, was forced down 35 cents in a few weeks. The decline terminated on April 14. Then under the influence of speculative buying an advance started and continued until May 25—a bull market; a wild bull market part of the time. The advance from April 14 to May 25 was 67 cents. Then the price broke 20 cents in two days and advanced 22 cents in two days more, 19½ cents of which was on May 31.

The net advance of the May future from April 14 to May 31 was 69½ cents. At the same time July wheat advanced only 35 cents. May wheat was cornered, but let us see what cash wheat did.

On May 31 Nos. 1 and 2 red and hard winter wheat, the contract grades, sold in the Chicago market at 2 cents under May, or 57 cents over July. No. 3 sold at the fixed discount of 7 cents under Nos. 1 and 2. This was 50 cents over July. No. 4, which is not deliverable on contracts at any price difference, sold at 5 cents under to 5 cents over July.

On the next day, June 1, after the May future had expired, cash wheat sold as follows: No. 1 red and hard, 20 to 23 cents over July. This was as compared with 57 cents only the day before. No. 2 red and hard, 19 to 21 cents over July; No. 3 red and hard, 15 to 18 cents over July; No. 4 red and hard, 10 to 15 cents over July. This was a drop over night of from 34 to 37 cents for No. 1, 36 to 38 cents for No. 2; 32 to 35 cents for No. 3, but an advance of 10 to 15 cents for No. 4.

In the face of the market in May of this year it can not seriously be said that trading in futures has stabilized the market.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, May I interrupt the Senator? The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LADD in the chair). Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. CAPPER. Certainly.

Mr. KING. Were the fluctuations in wheat as detailed by the Senator greater than the fluctuations in the prices of other commodities and were they greater than the recorded changes, as shown upon the stock exchanges of various stocks, industrial, railroad, and so forth?

Mr. CAPPER. I have made no inquiry as to that phase of the situation, but I think they were. It was very generally stated at the time of the great bear drive on the wheat market that speculators paid attention especially to wheat.

Mr. KING. There is no doubt but what there have been abuses in the grain exchanges which have injuriously affected the agricultural producers of the United States. Any sane and constitutional measure that will prevent a continuation of practices which are evil I shall gladly support. The bill before us may possess some healing virtues; at least it is to be hoped that it may bring some relief. Referring to the violent fluctuations in the prices of stocks, the Senator knows that on the New York Stock Exchange and the various stock exchanges throughout the United States this condition is almost chronic. The rise and fall has been more than 10 points within 24 hours. The rapid advances and recessions in prices have been incredible. Millions have been lost and won within a few hours.

However, in many instances, let me say, the persons who suffered were the gamblers themselves and it did not affect the intrinsic value of the stocks nor were the railroads or the industrial concerns, whose stocks were being gambled with upon the market, affected. I am inclined to think that the $3,000,000 which the Senator said was made by a number of individuals during one day did not come from the farmers but from the "lambs" who were fleeced by the wheat brokers and gamblers. I am inclined to think the little gamblers were swallowed up by the big gamblers, and they were the ones who were compelled to add to the accretions of speculators and gamblers, whose operations were very extensive.

I have been wondering if the evil upon the grain exchanges is greater than on other exchanges, and if the Government may regulate grain exchanges ought it not regulate all exchanges in the United States, in order that there shall be no stock gambling and no dealing in futures and no dealing in stocks except under the immediate surveillance of the United States Government? Does the Senator think that would be a good thing? I am expressing no opinion one way or the other and am only seeking the view of the Senator.

Mr. CAPPER. I think the Government might very well have supervision over stock markets and exchanges generally to some extent, but first I think we had better start with the grain exchanges because we have the proof there of the harm that is done and the injury that is being worked.

The fluctuations affect the farmer in this way: Every day while that bear raid was on and the market was fluctuating up and down millions of bushels of wheat were going to market. We can not stop, on an hour's notice, or a day's notice, the flow of wheat. The man who reached the market on the day that wheat was down, of course, was the loser. Then the grain dealer or the elevator man or the buyer at the country markets must take into account the possibility of a great fluctuation in the market price, and consequently the price he offers the producer necessarily must be less than he would offer on a stable market. For that reason we are urging conditions that will help to stabilize all the markets.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, while the Senator is yielding, may I say that at some place during or after the Senator's speech I desire to get his opinion touching certain telegrams that have come to me in criticism of the pending measure. I do not desire to inject unfavorable matter into the Senator's speech at this point if he would prefer to yield at some other point, but I do desire his opinion upon the criticisms that are embodied in two or three of the telegrams which I have received, because I have great confidence in his judgment and the judgment of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. Would he prefer that I interrupt at another point?

Mr. CAPPER. Will the Senator wait until I shall have concluded? I shall be through in just a few moments.

Mr. WILLIS. Certainly.

Mr. CAPPER. The plain truth, Mr. President, is that through manipulation of the market the big speculators on the Chicago Board of Trade are undoubtedly a powerful factor in fixing the price of the farmer's wheat. They sell large volumes of wheat futures short during a period before harvest when there is no great volume of buying, and the weight of their selling forces the price down. Then, by continually hammering, they hold the price there until the crop movement begins, when hedging sales place sufficient pressure upon the market to enable the speculators to buy back what they sold without advancing the price.

By this process the farmer loses and the speculator wins nine times out of ten. I fear this country will not long continue to produce the finest wheat in the world if we continue to let the wheat gambler fix the price.

VICIOUS PRACTICES OF COMMISSION MEN.

Mr. President, a particularly vicious form which manipulation takes is that indulged in by commission men. By commission men I refer now to those men who place orders for future delivery for their customers. As agents for their principals they, of course, must know and do know what trades their customers are making. Every principle of common honesty should prevent these commission men from utilizing this knowledge for their own benefit. What they do is even worse than that; they utilize this knowledge not only to benefit themselves, but to benefit themselves at the expense of their customers. They sit by and watch their customers buy and, perhaps, encourage them to buy and by the force of the buying force the market up; then these commission men, when the price is too high, jump in and break the market, ruin their customers, and make themselves rich. I quote from an article appearing in Wallace's Farmer, under date of February 11, 1921, the article being written by Rollin E. Smith, of the United States Bureau of Markets:

Speculative commission houses, or commission houses whose members speculate, are one of the big handicaps under which the market is weighted down. It is just as unfair to the public, or outside speculators, for commission houses to speculate as it is for a poker player to look at the hands of his opponents, for such a commission house knows at all times just how its customers stand on the market. The public has just as much chance of winning as a poker player would if he laid his cards on the table, face up. The reason is this: This professional speculator knows from long observation that 95 per cent of the outsiders lose their money. Therefore the professional—in which class are the speculative commission houses, their employees, and the brokers and scalpers in the pit—takes the other side of the market from the outsiders; not in every instance, of course, but in a large general way.

If, for example, as often happens in a bull market, the public gets the speculative fever and buys heavily, this is of course known to the professionals. As the public becomes more and more excited and continues to buy, the professionals gradually sell out their own holdings and then closely watch for the time when the public buying exhausts itself. That will mean the end of the advance. The public is always craziest right at the top, just when they should be selling and taking their profits.

When the force in public buying has exhausted itself, the professionals begin to sell short. If the advance is checked, they sell more. Soon the market begins to break, and then the professionals "jump on it"—sell millions of bushels; and a great slump follows. Out of the wreck a few stragglers from the public pull out with a little money left, but 95 per cent of them have left their balances with the speculative commission houses, the brokers, and the scalpers.

These are the manipulations that the bill seeks to prevent.

THE "HEDGE" MUST BE PRESERVED.

By the elimination of these abuses, it is also believed that the hedge will not only be preserved, but will be infinitely better. The foundation of all of the arguments of the grain exchanges is that the hedge must be preserved. They argue that a legitimate hedge is insurance and keeps down the margin between the producer and consumer. It is just as true that a hedge that will not work increases that margin. Where the future market on which the hedge is placed goes down while the cash goes up, the hedge is ruinous. It has been said on good authority, and after an examination of the trend of the future and cash markets for several years, that 40 per cent of the time the hedge does not work because the cash and future do not run together. I do not vouch for that figure, but it is a statement found in Wallace's Farmer under date of March 18, 1921, the author being Mr. Rollin E. Smith. Take the market in March and April of this year. The cash advanced 65 cents and the future 35 cents during the same period. You can not use the hedge on that kind of a market. In February the cash was 35 cents over the future and in March only 8 cents over the future and in May the future and cash came together. You can not hedge on that kind of a market. An elevator man or a grain dealer may have contracts to buy wheat in May and on account of the lack of cars or other reasons he is forced to extend the time to his customer so that the wheat is in June. If his hedge has been placed on the May option, it must then be transferred to the July option. On May 31 May wheat closed at Chicago at $1.37½ and July wheat closed at $1.28½.

On May 31 cash wheat sold in Chicago at 57 cents over July wheat. The next day the same wheat sold 20 to 23 cents over July, a break of 34 cents. This is attributed to the fact that there was a corner on May wheat. But you can not hedge on that kind of a market.

This has become of so frequent occurrence that hedging is becoming a dangerous instrument to play with. If the normal forces are left alone, future and cash should go hand in hand. The wild fluctuations of May of this year were because of manipulation by the great operators on the Chicago Board of Trade. It can be stopped and should be stopped.

That it can be stopped, Mr. President, and can be stopped by the boards themselves is proven by this fact: In 1911 the Chicago Board of Trade put in a rule that has practically stopped manipulation of prices upward, sometimes called "corners." This rule is a simple one; roughly, it vests the power in a committee of the board of trade to determine, in case of a corner, what the fair market value of the wheat would have been if there had been no corner. Manipulation of the price upward, or corners, is ruinous to the short sellers upon the boards of trade. The operators upon the boards of trade are victims of corners, and they temporarily help the producer. Since the losses by such manipulation fall upon the members of the boards of trade themselves, more than 10 years ago they put in a rule that has stopped such manipulation. Manipulation downward only hurts the producer, the grower of the grain. The boards of trade could prevent such manipulation, as 10 years ago they prevented manipulation upward. One of the purposes of this law is to compel them to do that.

WHAT THE TESTIMONY SHOWS.

Mr. President, if the Members of this body have the opportunity to read the entire record of the hearings before the House committee in January and the same committee in April, and the hearings before the Committee on Agriculture of this body held in May, June, and July of this year, I believe that exactly this will be found to be the situation:

First. The market which governs the price paid to the farmers for their wheat and correspondingly the price paid for food-stuffs by our people in general, while controlled largely and necessarily by the law of supply and demand, is, nevertheless, seriously and occasionally affected by the manipulation of prices and by promiscuous and unlimited gambling.

Second. These abuses are admitted by everyone, and it is likewise admitted that they should be corrected.

Third. The bodies best able to correct these evils are the exchanges themselves.

Fourth. The most enlightened and the most successful members of those exchanges admit that it would help them to correct the evils if the Government stood behind them.

Fifth. The great body of business men engaged in this business do not object to supervision, nor to punishment if they do not play the game fairly. They do object to governmental regulation.

Sixth. An analysis of the bill will demonstrate that it simply says to the boards of trade, "These are evils; you can correct them; do so; and, if you do not, you can not deal in futures."

The provisions of the bill if enacted into law will deflate gambling and speculation on the exchanges of the land. They will release the law of demand and supply and make these market places subservient to that great law of trade. They will drive out of business thousands of gamblers in puts and calls. They will turn such funds to legitimate uses and the support of industry. They will destroy the infamous influences that, attaching themselves like barnacles to the exchanges of the country, retard legitimate industry and promote vice and too often suicide and crime. And they will protect the producer, whose toil and sacrifice enable all of us to live, from the theft of his well-earned reward by the machinations of professional gamblers, forestallers, and market riggers.

This country exported 365,000,000 bushels of wheat, in the form of wheat and flour, during the 12 months ending June 30 this year. The money value of these exports of wheat was $840,000,000, or $2.30 a bushel. The American wheat raiser averaged something less than $1.30 a bushel, a difference of $365,000,000. This dollar a bushel difference, in the face of such figures, is convincing indication of a prolonged and serious interference with the operation of the great fundamental economic law of supply and demand.

We can not expect to gather grapes from thistles. So long as this juggling of the markets is permitted, and so long as this cancer of gambling in one of the necessities of life is permitted, we can not expect to have permanent prosperity in the United States. For years previous to the present crisis in the agricultural industry the men frequently referred to by orators as the "backbone of the Nation" have averaged barely more than a decent living by working their wives and children as well as themselves, and have realized no return from their capital. The real job we have on our hands is to find out how farming can be made as safely profitable as any other American occupation. Unless that can be done it is simply a question of time when our farmers will be forced to abandon a too hazardous means of livelihood. The one vital industry on which the Nation's welfare and prosperity depend, must have its chance to live and prosper if the rest of us expect to, and if it is to have this chance, the grain gambler must go.

In conclusion, Mr. President, I submit this one thought for the serious consideration of this body. There can be no more solemn duty resting upon the Congress of the United States than to preserve to the farmer and the consumer the free play of economic laws upon the prices which they get for their product and upon the price which the consumer pays for his bread. There is not that free play now. The abuses are certain, definite, and admitted. They can be corrected and will be corrected, if this bill is passed, without Government regulation, but if any situation is serious enough to justify even governmental regulation, the measure now before the Senate meets that situation. As now conducted, the Chicago Board of Trade is the most wanton and the most destructive game of chance in the world. The bill now before you is a legislative mandate to these great exchanges, that if they wish to continue to deal in futures without restriction or regulation, they must eliminate from their midst the man who thrives upon the losses of the gamblers in foodstuffs; they must suppress the man who profits by the circulation of falsehoods affecting the price of wheat and bread; and they must drive from their midst the man who is prostituting the machinery of the grain market for his own selfish purpose by manipulating the price to his own advantage. The bill, in my judgment, is constructive legislation, legislation that has been sorely needed for more than a quarter of a century. If I read the public mind aright, the American people have determined to do away with every serious mischief-making evil that affects the general welfare. They have known about market gambling for a long time, thousands have been "stung" by it. They have their minds about made up that the Chicago Board of Trade's poker playing with the food supply is the most wanton, most wicked, and most destructive game of chance in the world and they are going to stop it.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. CAPPER. I yield.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I have a telegram here that is a sample of quite a number of telegrams I am receiving with reference to certain provisions of the bill. I have examined hurriedly the substitute that is proposed by the committee, and as I read it several of the criticisms, if not all of them, have been taken care of. However, I wish to call the attention of the Senator to them and ask his judgment as to whether or not they are met by the substitute.

First, I have a telegram which reads as follows:

As to Tinscher-Capper bill in its present form this bill if passed will make it impossible for grain houses operating on the board of trade to exist and the grain trade can not furnish satisfactory markets unless the bill is amended in certain particulars. We want to amend section 5, paragraph D, so that exchanges will not be compelled to place definite limits on amount of grain single individuals may trade in.

I take it that is taken care of by the substitute?

Mr. KENYON. It is.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The telegram continues:

Amend section 5, paragraph (e), so that no applicants for membership will have advantage or preference over any other applicant.

I take it that also is taken care of?

Mr. CAPPER. I think it is taken care of, I will say to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The telegram continues:

Amend section 5, paragraph (g), by striking out the paragraph intention of which is to limit private wire service between large terminal markets and prevent such service to anyone outside said markets. The tendency of such clause and the unfairness of it is only too apparent. The bill obligates exchanges to prevent manipulation, but should leave them free to adopt whatever measures to this end may seem to them wise.

That has been omitted, as I understand, from the proposed substitute, although it was included in an original committee amendment.

Mr. CAPPER. That has been omitted from the proposed substitute.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The telegram continues:

It also provides that representatives of farmers' associations must be admitted on a preferential basis. This would amount to practical—

And so forth. I take it that that is not the effect of the substitute?

Mr. CAPPER. That has been modified. I think the senders of the telegram were unnecessarily alarmed as to the effect of that provision.

Mr. WILLIS. Will the Senator again read his telegram? I am anxious to see whether these telegrams from various sections of the country are duplicates.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I think they are duplicates to a great extent.

Mr. KENYON. Over three thousand of them have been sent.

Mr. WILLIS. I have received a number of such telegrams and I wish to see if their language is identical with that of the telegram which has been read by the Senator from Washington.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The concluding portion of the telegram, from which I have been quoting, reads:

The unfairness of it is only too apparent. The bill obligates exchanges to prevent manipulation, but should leave them free to adopt whatever measures to this end may seem to them wise. It also provides that representatives of farmers' associations must be admitted on a preferential basis. This would amount to practical rebating of commission. We bespeak your opposition to this bill, which would be destructive to our business as well as all other grain firms conducting a similar business.

I have several other telegrams. They do not go into the matter so much at length as does this one, but they are substantially the same and point out the same objections.

Mr. CAPPER. The telegrams in reference to this matter have come here from all over the country. They have been inspired by the National Grain Dealers' Association, I think. Possibly there is some basis for some of the objections which they make.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I take it the Senator has tried to obviate all the objections in the substitute as now proposed?

Mr. CAPPER. I think the proposed substitute meets all those objections.

Mr. WILLIS. Will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. CAPPER. I yield.

Mr. WILLIS. I think, perhaps, that the response which the Senator from Kansas has made to the inquiry of the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] covers the question I am about to ask, but I am not sure. I desire to obtain the opinion of the Senator from Kansas, because he is thoroughly informed about these matters. I have not very carefully read the telegrams which I hold in my hand. The one from which I shall now quote is from the City Bank of Lima, Ohio. I think it is substantially the same as the telegram which the Senator from Washington has read. This telegram reads:

LIMA, OHIO, August 3, 1921.

HON. FRANK B. WILLIS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

In reference to the future trading bill, known as House bill 5676, being in touch with grain men, farmers, elevator men, and also mills in this district, they, as well as ourselves, wish to enter protest against this class of legislation unless amended in certain particulars. First, we want to amend section 5, paragraph d, so that the exchange will not be compelled to place definite limits on the amounts an individual can buy.

That is taken care of, I understand.

Mr. CAPPER. It is.

Mr. WILLIS. The telegram continues:

The bill obligates the exchange to prevent manipulation, and should be left free to adopt whatever measure to this end may seem to them wise.

That is already safeguarded in the amended bill, is it not?

Mr. CAPPER. Yes.

Mr. WILLIS. The telegram continues:

Second, amend section 5, paragraph e, so that no applicant for membership will have an advantage or preference over any other applicant.

Is that covered by the bill as the Senator has proposed to amend it?

Mr. CAPPER. I think that is taken care of. Really, the section referred to did not give any one applicant an advantage over another, but we have modified the section referred to so that I do not believe any fair-minded person could object to it.

Mr. WILLIS. There is another suggestion contained in this telegram which I will read:

The bill at present provides that representatives of farmers' associations must be admitted on a preferential basis, which would be the destruction of commission rules, for it would amount to practically rebating of commissions. Third: Amend section 5, paragraph G, by striking out the paragraph, the intention of which is to limit private-wire service on grain to wires between the large terminal markets and to prevent service to anyone outside of the large terminal markets. The tendency of such a clause and the unfairness of it are only too apparent.

Is that objection covered?

Mr. CAPPER. That has been covered.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President—

Mr. WILLIS. Just a moment. I will inquire if my colleague has a duplicate of the telegrams from which I have been reading?

Mr. POMERENE. Yes; I have received substantially the same telegrams, and also a number of letters.

Mr. KENYON. There were several thousands of those telegrams sent.

Mr. WILLIS. I also desire to read the following telegram from Toledo, Ohio:

TOLEDO, OHIO, August 2, 1921.

HON. F. B. WILLIS,
The Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Referring to Tinscher-Capper bill, H. R. 5676, we wish to protest against bill as now written. Paragraph (e), section 5, should be changed. Without any question, cooperative associations should not be allowed memberships except on same basis of other members, and not through act of Congress. Country has had enough of class legislation. Bill should also be amended in section 5, paragraph (d), so that no limitation be placed on amount of trade by any one party. Paragraph (g), section 5, should be eliminated. Let Washington be constructive, and not destructive.

THE C. A. KING & Co.

I have received about 80 telegrams on the subject of the pending bill, the phraseology being exactly the same in each instance. Here is a somewhat different telegram, which I have received from J. M. Smith, of Mansfield, Ohio. It reads:

MANSFIELD, OHIO, August 3, 1921.

HON. FRANK B. WILLIS,
George Washington Inn, Washington, D. C.:

Regarding bill H. R. 5676, dealing with grain trade and methods of control, the writer objects seriously to this bill being passed in its present form. Refer to paragraphs (d), (e), and (g) of section 5. This bill should be amended without a doubt, as it is absolutely class legislation. We hope that you will give this matter your careful and personal attention, and not allow the farmer to be hoodwinked into the belief that the new bill as proposed is a protection to him. It is positively just the opposite.

J. M. SMITH, 30 Douglas Avenue.

Mr. KENYON. The similarity in the telegrams shows how spontaneous they all were.

Mr. WILLIS. Here is another to the same effect. It is from the Lantz Bros. Milling Co., of Mansfield, Ohio, and reads:

MANSFIELD, OHIO, August 3, 1921.

HON. FRANK B. WILLIS,
George Washington Inn, Washington, D. C.:

Regarding House bill 5676, dealing with grain trade and methods of control, the writer objects seriously to this bill being passed in its present form; refer to paragraphs d, e, and g of section 5. This bill should be amended without a doubt as it is absolutely class legislation. We hope that you will give this matter your careful and personal attention and not allow the farmer to be hoodwinked into the belief that the new bill as proposed is a protection to him; it is positively just the opposite.

LANTZ BROS. MILLING CO.

The Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER] has already discussed the objections raised in the telegram.

Mr. CAPPER. I think that everything that really has any basis for any objection in the legislation has been taken care of.

Mr. WILLIS. The Senator from Kansas making that response, I shall desist and not request to put further telegrams and letters into the Senator's speech.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Kansas a question. I regret that a committee engagement prevented my being in the Chamber while he was speaking, so I have not had the advantage of the Senator's argument. I understand, of course, that the pending bill does not forbid future sales?

Mr. CAPPER. Not at all.

Mr. POMERENE. Will the Senator, in brief, state just what the evils are which he is proposing to correct by this legislation? I ask that question for this reason: I had very carefully this morning gone over the bill as reported by the Agricultural Committee about a month ago, and I learned only within a half hour that on yesterday a new bill had been introduced which contains many of the modifications which have been referred to by the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES].

Mr. CAPPER. I will briefly summarize just what we have in this legislation attempted to correct:

- (a) Market manipulation by large operators.
- (b) Promiscuous and unrestricted speculation in foodstuffs.
- (c) Dissemination of false crop information.
- (d) Gambling in indemnities or "puts" and "calls."
- (e) Arbitrary interference with law of supply and demand.

The purpose of the bill is to correct those evils which are admitted by practically everybody.

Mr. POMERENE. In other words, the Senator is trying to prevent in part what are commonly known as "bucket-shop" operations?

Mr. CAPPER. Yes; that is the purpose, in part.

Mr. KENYON. Such operations may still be carried on under private wire.

Mr. POMERENE. The statement is made that the proposed legislation simply corrects "in part" the "bucket-shop" evil. What part of it is left in the bill now?

Mr. CAPPER. If we could get rid of the private wires, we probably could go a little further in the way of eliminating what the Senator calls "bucket shops"; but that is a pretty big problem, and the committee after considering it very carefully thought it best not to undertake that task at this time.

We shall make a start when we put the grain exchanges under the supervision of the Government and say to them that they have got to lay their cards on the table and play the game on the square.

Mr. WILLIS. Did I understand the Senator to say there was no restriction in his bill now relative to private wires?

Mr. CAPPER. No; there is not, except as to the dissemination of false crop reports. Of course, the private wires have been used very extensively for the carrying of all sorts of fake reports intended to influence the market. Under this bill the Secretary of Agriculture will have supervision over the reports that are carried over private wires.

Mr. HARRELD. Suppose we do not get results from this measure, what will be the next move—Government regulation?

Mr. CAPPER. I think we will get some results. This bill has the hearty approval of the Secretary of Agriculture, who has gone into it very carefully and who thinks it is workable. He is hopeful that it will correct the evils about which so much complaint has been made.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, some time ago I submitted an amendment to the cotton futures contracts act. The amendment was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. On the 24th day of May I went before that committee in behalf of the amendment, and the committee appointed a subcommittee to consider the subject, but the subcommittee has not reported. The matter is one of great importance to the section of the country which I in part represent, and I am very anxious to have some legislation adopted at the earliest possible moment.

Some days ago, after a conference with a number of Senators from the cotton-growing States, it was decided that the amendment which I proposed, and which was referred to the Agricultural Committee, was perhaps a little too liberal. I was of that opinion when I proposed the amendment, but I was afraid I could not get any better provision adopted at the time. After a conference, however, with a number of Senators our opinion was that we ought to amend the present cotton futures contract law by requiring the seller of the contract to specify the grade to be delivered at the time the contract was entered into.

Generally, under the present law there are two sections that are considered in this connection; one is section 10, which embodies the idea referred to, and the other is section 5, which is more liberal, and which authorizes the seller of the contract to deliver all the contract in any one or all of 10 grades. That is commonly known, as I have said, as section 5, and that is the section that we thought ought to be repealed. I, therefore, proposed an amendment reading, "That section 5 be, and the same is hereby, repealed"; but upon a more thorough investigation and examination into the present law the conclusion was reached that a wording to that effect would have mutilated the act. Consequently, I submitted the matter to the drafting bureau, and they very kindly consented to put that idea into proper form. Hence I had printed the other day and placed on the desks of Senators an amendment to House bill 5676.

The whole purpose of this amendment is simply to make the seller of the contract specify the grades which he is going to deliver; in other words, it conforms the law to common sense. I know of no other business in the world outside of cotton, and particularly when the commodity is going to be used in manufacturing, where the seller has the right to select the grade and the quality of the article to be delivered. To my mind, by that section of the law great injustice is done our section of the country.

I reluctantly had the amendment printed as an amendment to the pending grain act. I would much have preferred it to be an amendment to the cotton-futures act, because that is where it belongs. I did intend to offer it and press it at this time, but after conference with Senators from the cotton-growing States we have decided to postpone the matter for the present, in the hope that by conference and through the committee we may agree either upon this amendment, the one that is already pending, or some better amendment.

I am not extreme about the matter; I have no particular personal pride as to how the purpose shall be accomplished, but I am trying to get beneficial results. I think the last amendment provides what the law ought to be. By way of compromise, I would have accepted the one that was before the committee, but I have the highest confidence in the ability of the southern Senators on this point, and I have the strongest hope that we will agree upon something that is just and proper, and I believe that our friends on the other side will join with us as soon as we can decide upon the best course to pursue.

I know of no opposition to correcting this law except from one Senator, perhaps, who thinks that by passing it we will destroy the exchanges. As I said the other day, I am not trying to destroy the exchanges. It is a matter of no importance to me whether the exchanges exist or not. I have different views on the exchanges at different times. Sometimes I think they are beneficial, and sometimes I think they are injurious; but the party who needs honest laws is the farmer, the man who produces the commodity. Under the present system I am confident that the producers do not get nearly what they ought to get for what they raise.

Some idea may have sprung up that we southern Senators differ about this matter, but I know of no difference whatever, except upon the part of one Senator, who wants the exchanges retained. My colleague [Mr. SMITH] has taken a great interest in this proposition for many years, and has taken a leading part in the legislation, and he and I are thoroughly in accord as to the necessity of some legislation being passed.

While we are speaking of the exchanges, in order that Senators may have the views of one who is well posted on the subject, I ask the privilege of having printed as a part of my remarks a letter which I received from a member of the New York Cotton Exchange, or at least a man who was recently a member of it. I am not positive whether he is a member now or not, but he was for over 40 years a member of the New York Cotton Exchange. This letter is dated "New York City, N. Y., June 6, 1921." I withhold the name of the writer, but I shall be glad to give it to any Senator upon inquiry. The letter gives his views of the exchange; and I will ask Senators at their convenience to read the letter after it is published as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letter is as follows:

NEW YORK CITY, N. Y., June 6, 1921.

Hon. N. B. DIAL,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Your favor of the 3d instant at hand, with copy of my letter addressed to Mr. Wanamaker, dated August, 1920. As the conditions then existing are entirely reversed from those at present prevailing, I can not permit the use of that letter as expressive of my views at the present time.

The bill you have introduced is a just one, giving an equal basis to both buyer and seller in all contracts made on the exchanges, and will prevent such extreme wild fluctuations as frequently occur under the present laws and rules of what has become "a corporation for speculative purpose," and which admits of manipulations that are calculated to injure legitimate dealings between producer and consumer and unsettle sound, stable values.

The present method of trading on the exchanges is, to say the least, inadequate to conduct its dealings with just and equal regard toward all interests involved. Speculative interests have only in view their profits. They are neither the producer nor consumer—nor the source of real wealth—hence the exchanges are simply methods of clearance for financial security during the transfer of the actual commodity from the producer to the consumer. That being the case, the first requirement is a safe and sound security that can be cleared financially at any and all points of the world, where the financier has the finances and is ready to make the clearance.

Our exchanges, in so far as cotton is concerned, limit their clearance in the actual cotton to that stored at the point of their trade. New York has an actual clearing association, which undertakes to clear all contracts between its members for 12 months, and while it clears thousands of contracts every day only clears actual cotton—or warehouse receipts—that is in its local stores, and then only for the present month. Our New York Exchange is often thousands of bales long or short on margins, while its available stock is much less, and at its best has only a limited storage capacity. As it is mostly speculative in its character of dealings, pools can be formed that take advantage of its condition and make artificial values at their pleasure.

The New York Exchange has made and will make rules that seem to draw speculation—molasses draws flies the same. For the safety and equitable dealings of all interests concerned—viz, producer, consumer, and speculator—the Government at Washington should enact laws that will give equal opportunities to producer, consumer, and the mongrel speculator.

The consumer—manufacturer—long since learned that exchanges were only temporary expedients and does very little trading in its contract. The producers—the South—are now getting their education at considerable expense, and recently the small speculator finds it rather difficult to play the game successfully unless the outsider puts up his margins and gives business orders.

Mr. DIAL. As I stated before, I do not wish to mutilate the grain bill, as it were, by adding this particular section to it; and I am taking the course that I have announced in the hope and the belief that the Agricultural Committee will soon work out this matter on an equitable and just basis, which I feel they are disposed to do on all matters. I must congratulate the Senate, and particularly the Agricultural Committee, on their desire and their effort to help the farmers of this country. I feel that there is a genuine desire to accomplish that purpose, and I am satisfied that great good will result from the laws which we have recently passed. I am happy to note that "behind the clouds the sun still shineth," and I believe we will have a brighter day.

Entertaining these views as I do, I shall not now press the amendment to which I have referred at the present time. I hope Congress will soon take a recess and let us go home and breathe good air and get in a good humor; and as soon as we get back here I hope we will have worked out something that we will all agree upon—at least, practically all, if we can not all agree upon it—anyway, something for the good of the producing interests of this country, and that we will pass it at an early date. I would thank the Senators to do me the favor to read my speech on this subject in Friday's RECORD.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I am in favor of the pending measure. I desire, however, at this time briefly to discuss another bill, which I believe will do much—

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, we are up to a vote on this bill. Will not the Senator let us pass this bill and then discuss the other bill?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I will.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa if he intended to make an appropriation by this language:

There is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such sums as may be necessary for such purposes.

Mr. KENYON. No; that is simply an authorization which passes the matter over to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. OVERMAN. There is no intention to make an appropriation?

Mr. KENYON. No.

Mr. OVERMAN. It is too indefinite; it would not amount to anything.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, let me inquire of the Senator from Iowa, apropos of what has just been suggested by the Senator from North Carolina, what the anticipated cost will be. There seems to be an authorization here for the Appropriations Committee to make an appropriation. I should like to have some idea of how much the blank check is that we are writing.

Mr. KENYON. The Secretary of Agriculture has estimated that it will be under $200,000.

Mr. KING. Has he not machinery enough now to carry out the provisions of the bill?

Mr. KENYON. That is the nearest information I can give the Senator. I hope the amount may be less. Certainly the work will be carried on as economically as possible, but it will save many times that amount to the farmers of the country every week.

Mr. KING. I can not conceive of its costing such a large amount. As to the benefits of the act, I make no prediction. I sincerely hope that benefits will be derived from it.

Mr. KENYON. Of course the expenses of running it will be entirely for the Appropriations Committee to pass upon.

Mr. KING. Except that where you authorize a department to go ahead and engage in certain undertakings with no limitation they may project a very large organization, much larger than is necessary, whereas if they knew the limitations that would be placed upon them and the maximum appropriations that would be made they would formulate different plans, and perhaps utilize organizations that now exist.

Mr. KENYON. No appropriation is carried by the bill.

Mr. KING. However, if the committee has no concrete suggestions to make, I will make none.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LENROOT in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the substitute reported by the committee.

The amendment, in the nature of a substitute, was agreed to. The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I move that the Senate request a conference with the House on the bill and amendments, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to, and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. CAPPER, Mr. KENYON, and Mr. SMITH conferees on the part of the Senate.

EXTENSION OF RENTS ACT.

Mr. BALL obtained the floor.

Mr. McCORMICK. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum is suggested. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ball	Gerry	Ladd	Ransdell
Broussard	Gooding	Lenroot	Sheppard
Bursum	Harreld	McCormick	Shortridge
Cameron	Heflin	McKellar	Smith
Capper	Jones, Wash.	McNary	Warren
Caraway	Kellogg	Nelson	Watson, Ga.
Dial	Kenyon	Overman
Edge	Keyes	Phipps
Fletcher	King	Pomerene

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Thirty-three Senators have responded to their names—not a quorum. The Secretary will call the names of the absentees.

The reading clerk called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. ERNST, Mr. POINDEXTER, Mr. SMOOT, Mr. SPENCER, Mr. TRAMMELL, Mr. WADSWORTH, Mr. HALE, Mr. NEW, Mr. ODDIE, Mr. ASHURST, Mr. STERLING, Mr. WILLIS, Mr. SWANSON, Mr. BRANDEGEE, Mr. STANLEY, Mr. STANFIELD, Mr. LODGE, Mr. GLASS, and Mr. CURTIS entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I desire to announce that the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE], the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER], the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. McLEAN], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SUTHERLAND], the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM], and the Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER], are in attendance at a meeting of the Committee on Finance.

Mr. GERRY. I desire to announce the absence of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] and the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] on official business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-two Senators having responded to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. BALL. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 2131, the District of Columbia rents bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, it seems to me to be rather undue zeal at this late hour of the day, Senators having taken up business in committees and in their offices, for the Senator from Delaware to insist again upon the consideration of this measure.

Mr. BALL. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield.

Mr. BALL. If we vote to take up the bill and make it the unfinished business, I am perfectly willing to have it laid aside until to-morrow morning to accommodate the Senator from Washington.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I understood that the Senator moved to take it up, and did not ask unanimous consent?

Mr. BALL. I moved to take it up.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If that motion is agreed to, it would make the bill the unfinished business.

Mr. BALL. If the bill is made the unfinished business of the Senate, I am perfectly willing to lay it aside until to-morrow morning for the accommodation of the Senator from Washington.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I would not like to see it made the unfinished business. It is not important that the bill should pass; I think it is a vicious bill myself, and I hope the Senate will not make it the unfinished business. I hope the Senator from Delaware will not insist upon his motion this afternoon.

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, it is for Senators to decide whether they are willing to make it the unfinished business.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I want to discuss it somewhat. The measure which the Senator is seeking to bring up, reduced to its simplest form, provides that if one individual wants a house which belongs to another he can take it because it suits his convenience. There is no doubt that there are a great many people in the District who would like to occupy houses which belong to other citizens, and I do not hesitate to say that in time of some great national emergency, when the life of the Nation is at stake, when the convenience and even the rights of individuals are as nothing compared with the national welfare, Congress would be justified in seizing the property of individual citizens and turning it over to other private citizens if the interests of the community and of the Nation as a whole were promoted by that policy.

This is not a bill to take private property for public use, and I think I can demonstrate the soundness of that statement. If a man leases his house for a certain term, that term has expired, and he desires to recover his property for the purpose of selling it, it may be under this bill a tribunal, which is established for the purpose of protecting lessees, may deny him the right to recover possession of his property for the purpose of disposing of it by sale.

I think the legislation is unprecedented in the history of the United States, certainly of the District of Columbia, in time of peace. It is true that the State of New York passed a law of this character during the war as a war-emergency measure, and that law was sustained by the Supreme Court of the United States by a divided opinion of five to four. But no State, nor the Congress legislating for the District of Columbia, has ever in the history of the country undertaken to enact such legislation in time of peace until the Senator from Delaware proposes this measure now.

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator if that law is not still in effect in New York?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I am not advised whether it is in effect or not.

Mr. BALL. This bill only proposes to extend the law until next April. I think it is very unwise that the law should cease to function on October 22, the beginning of winter, when the demand for rental places in Washington is much greater than in the spring. It only continues the operation of the law until next April, giving all the summer months, when the demand is not so great, for the rentals in Washington to adjust themselves.

The constitutionality of the law has been passed upon by the Supreme Court, so I think it is useless for us to discuss that phase of it here. The question to be discussed is as to whether there is any real demand for this extension.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. WILLIS. Will the Senator from Delaware state to the Senate that if this bill is passed there will be no purpose on the part of his committee when the seven months have rolled around to provide for another extension of the law?

Mr. BALL. So far as the chairman of the committee is concerned, unless there is some unreasonable condition existing, I will state frankly that no further extension will be asked for.

Mr. WILLIS. Is there any reason, in the Senator's opinion, why there should be legislation of this character for this city which would not also apply to Boston or Wilmington or Cincinnati or Seattle or New Orleans?

Mr. BALL. I certainly think that there is, Mr. President.

Mr. WILLIS. I should like to know what it is.

Mr. BALL. Washington is the seat of the government, and the city was founded exclusively for that purpose. Seventy-five per cent of the people living in Washington are dependent upon the Government, directly or indirectly. The Government, to get efficient service from its employees, must properly house and care for those employees. Congress has exclusive jurisdiction over the District of Columbia, and Washington is the only city in the world under such a government as we have here. Therefore the conditions, so far as the housing conditions are concerned, differ from those of any other city of the world. The Federal Government, in my judgment, is responsible for the proper care of its employees.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. WILLIS. I desire to ask a further question of the Senator from Delaware. The argument the Senator is now making simply goes to the constitutional authority and obligation of the Congress of the United States to legislate for the District of Columbia. I will put my question in just a little different form, then. Is there any reason why legislation of this character should be enacted by the Congress to apply to the city of Washington that would not apply also to the proper law-making body, the common council, the board of aldermen, or whatever it may be, in the city of Wilmington, the city of Boston, the city of Cincinnati, or the city of Seattle?

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, I can conceive of conditions existing, and I understand that they do exist in New York, similar to those in Washington, and I understand that a similar law has been passed in New York, and is in force and is functioning now in that city; and that the Supreme Court has declared that law to be constitutional, the same as it has declared the law relating to the District of Columbia to be constitutional. Therefore, probably the same conditions which exist here do exist in certain other cities; but Congress has no right to legislate for those cities, while it is responsible for Washington. Therefore legislation for this city is the only legislation that would come under our jurisdiction.

Mr. WILLIS. Can the Senator state what the population of the city of Washington was at the time the legislation was enacted? He was here at the time and is the author of the original bill. Approximately what was the population of the city then and what is it now?

Mr. BALL. The greatest population in Washington at any time, I understand, was 600,000, and probably now it is about 500,000.

Mr. WILLIS. Does the Senator think it is as great as 500,000? It is my opinion that it is not so great as that, but even if it is as much as 500,000, what I am seeking to get at is whether there is now a shortage of houses? I am seeking to get at the facts.

Mr. BALL. We held hearings off and on for probably two weeks to definitely ascertain whether there was any necessity for an extension of the provisions of the law. It was the unanimous opinion of the committee, I think, with the exception of the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], that there was a demand for its extension; that conditions were decidedly better than they were two years before when, for instance, they were housing from six to eight girls in one room. Now we find that there are not more than two or three in one room. However, the demand for houses is such that the rentals have advanced within 18 months and have not been reduced.

We found that now a number of notices have been given, which were submitted to the committee, and almost each day I have similar notices submitted to me, coming from landlords stating to tenants that after October 21 their rents will be advanced.

I should like to state that to-day the manager of a business house came to me with a notice, representing a business house which is relieved under the proposed extension. His notice was that after October 22 his rent will be increased from $150 to $400 per month, more than 100 per cent increase.

Mr. WILLIS. I have been told by a Member of the Senate within an hour that when the decision was made by the local court—and as I recall that decision in the local court it was against the constitutionality of the so-called Ball Rent Act—indicating that probably the act would be held unconstitutional ultimately, that rents immediately were increased. Is that the fact?

Mr. BALL. That is true. Mr. President, I ask for a vote on the motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] has the floor.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I have seen a great many emergencies arise in various cities of the country creating a shortage in houses. I remember that in 1898 the greatest gold stampede that the world has ever seen precipitated itself upon the city of Seattle. People gathered there from all parts of the world, having heard of the strike in the Klondike the preceding year. It was practically impossible for anyone to get a room to stay overnight. People considered themselves fortunate if they secured the privilege of sleeping on a cot in a whitewashed cellar in a hotel. There were a great many houses in Seattle at that time that had vacant rooms and a great many dwellings that were not fully occupied, but it never occurred to the municipal authorities of Seattle or the State authorities of the State of Washington that because there were some people there who were not fully accommodated with dwelling space, that they should go out with the strong arm of the Government and take away the private property of one citizen and turn it over to others. That is what the bill proposes to do.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President—

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. FLETCHER. I wish to ask the Senator a question which came to my mind during the colloquy between the Senator from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS] and the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BALL].

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I have just yielded to the Senator from Florida, who has not completed his inquiry.

Mr. BALL. I hope the Senator from Washington will yield to me when the Senator from Florida shall have concluded.

Mr. FLETCHER. It is quite a serious question, it seems to me, that goes to the root of the whole matter, so far as those of us are concerned who object to it on the ground of its being unconstitutional in our judgment, as to whether there is any difference in passing a bill like this which extends the operations of a statute and, on the other hand, passing an original bill creating the commission and doing the same thing as the original act. In other words, the Supreme Court held that the act was constitutional because of the existence of an emergency at that time under war conditions. Now, we have passed through that emergency undoubtedly. If the proposition came up now as a new and original proposition to pass the original Ball Act with the amendment on it that is carried in the pending bill, would it not be the same thing that is now proposed to amend that act by extending the time for its operations? Is there a difference?

Mr. POINDEXTER. The point which the Senator from Florida makes is exceedingly important and does credit to his acumen as a lawyer. The original act was sustained by the Supreme Court on the ground of the existence, as found by the Congress, of an emergency. That emergency, of course, was the war. I do not claim that the court laid down the general rule that no such legislation could be enacted in any emergency except the emergency of war, but the fact was that in that case the emergency that existed was the war.

Furthermore, in rendering their decision the Supreme Court laid great emphasis upon the fact that by its own terms the act was to come to an end in two years after its enactment unless it was sooner repealed. That was one of the important elements which entered into its decision. Now, the Senator from Delaware proposes to extend that period of two years, and I do not think it follows at all because the original act was held by the narrow margin of one in a division of the Supreme Court to be within the power of Congress, that Congress should be held to be within its powers in making a further extension of it under the present circumstances.

I now yield to the Senator from Delaware.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Delaware for that purpose?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield for that purpose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion now made by the Senator from Delaware.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 35 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

PROPOSED RECESS.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I move that the Senate take a recess until to-morrow at 12 o'clock.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Assistant Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Gerry	Nelson	Smith
Ball	Heflin	Nicholson	Spencer
Brandegge	Jones, Wash.	Oddie	Stanley
Broussard	Kenyon	Overman	Townsend
Caraway	King	Phipps	Wadsworth
Curtis	Lenroot	Poinexter	Warren
Edge	Lodge	Pomerene	Watson, Ga.
Ernst	McKellar	Sheppard	Willis
Fletcher	McNary	Shortridge

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Thirty-five Senators having answered to their names, there is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the roll of the absentees.

The Assistant Secretary called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. CAMERON, Mr. CAPPER, Mr. KEYES, Mr. NEW, Mr. RANDELL, Mr. STANFIELD, and Mr. TRAMMELL answered to their names when called.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Sergeant at Arms be directed to request the attendance of absent Senators.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Sergeant at Arms will execute the order of the Senate.

Mr. BURSUM, Mr. CALDER, Mr. STERLING, and Mr. SUTHERLAND entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-six Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is not present.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, August 10, 1921, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS.

Tuesday, August 9, 1921.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Heavenly Father, from whom all blessings flow, again we are persuaded that nothing can separate the love of God from us. Breathe upon our spirits and quicken them in righteousness and in charity. Bless us with that freedom that enables us to do our work without strain. Bestow upon us that peace that is independent of earthly conditions and usually follows in the wake of a good conscience. Grant that our lives may blend in accord with those many virtues that stimulate the pure and the upright in heart. In the name of the Man of Galilee. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6320) to regulate interstate and foreign commerce in live stock, live-stock products, dairy products, poultry, poultry products, and eggs, and for other purposes, submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

On amendments Nos. 1 and 2: These amendments exclude horses, mules, and goats from the provisions of the bill; and the Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 3: This amendment strikes out of the bill a definition of "commerce" intended to make it clear that Congress is looking at the meat-packing and live-stock industries as a whole, that the evils sought to be remedied are country-wide in their scope, and that Congress intends to exercise, in the bill, the fullest control of packers and stockyards which the Constitution permits; and the Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 4: This amendment strikes out of the bill a provision making it unlawful for a packer to engage in or use any unjustly discriminatory practice or device in interstate or foreign commerce; and the Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 5: This amendment strikes out of the bill a provision making it unlawful for a packer to make or give, in interstate or foreign commerce, any undue or unreasonable preference or advantage to any person or locality; and the Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 6: The House bill defined "stockyard services" so as to include, among other things, services and facilities furnished at a stockyard in connection with the "marketing" in interstate or foreign commerce of live stock. The Senate amendment, while not striking out the word "marketing," added the phrase "buying or selling on a commission basis." The House recedes with an amendment, adding the words "or otherwise" at the end of the Senate amendment, thus making the bill cover all buying and selling, whether or not on a commission basis, as provided in the House bill.

On amendment No. 7: The House bill defined "dealer" to mean any person "engaged in the business of buying or selling in interstate or foreign commerce live stock at a stockyard, either on his own account or as the employee or agent of the vendor or purchaser." The Senate amendment adds at the end of this definition words which merely repeat what was in the House bill; and the Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 8: This amendment adds to the bill a provision that after two years from the passage of the act no packer engaged in interstate or foreign commerce shall own or control or have any interest in any stockyard unless the Secretary of Agriculture determines that such ownership or control of interest "is not in violation of the purposes of this act," or that the packer has been unable, "despite due diligence," to dispose thereof, in which case the Secretary may by order extend the period during which such ownership, control, or interest may continue. The matter is now dealt with more effectively in the consent decree as it relates to the large packing concerns; and the Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 9: The House bill limited the time for filing complaints with the Secretary of Agriculture for alleged grievances suffered at a stockyard to one year after the accrual of the cause of action. The Senate amendment made the time 60 days, and the House recedes with an amendment making it 90 days.

On amendment No. 10: The House bill provided that whenever the Secretary of Agriculture finds that any rate, charge, regulation, or practice of any stockyard owner or market agency, for or in connection with, among other things, the "marketing" in intrastate commerce of live stock, causes any undue or unreasonable advantage, prejudice, or preference, as between persons or localities in intrastate commerce in live stock on the one hand and interstate or foreign commerce in live stock on the other hand, the Secretary of Agriculture shall prescribe the rate, charge, regulation, or practice to be observed. The Senate amendment, while not striking out the word "marketing," added the words "buying or selling on a commission basis." The House recedes with an amendment adding the words "or otherwise" at the end of the Senate amendment, thus making the bill cover all buying and selling whether or not on a commission basis, as provided in the House bill.

On amendment No. 11: The House bill made it unlawful for any stockyard owner, commission man, or dealer to engage in or use any unfair, unjustly discriminatory, or deceptive practice or device in connection with, among other things, the "marketing" in interstate or foreign commerce at a stockyard of live stock. The Senate amendment, while not striking out the word "marketing," added the words "buying or selling on a commission basis." The House recedes with an amendment adding the words "or otherwise" at the end of the Senate amendment, thus making the bill cover all buying and selling whether or not on a commission basis, as provided in the House bill.

On amendment No. 12: The House bill made applicable to the jurisdiction and powers of the Secretary of Agriculture in enforcing the provisions of the stockyards title of the bill the provisions of the laws relating to the suspending or restraining the enforcement, operation, or execution of or the setting aside of the orders of the Interstate Commerce Commission. The Senate amendment strikes out this provision and in lieu thereof inserts a provision making sections 203 and 204 of this act applicable in enforcing the provisions of the stockyards title; and the Senate recedes.

On amendments Nos. 13 and 14: The House bill in section 401 required every packer, stockyard owner, commission man, and dealer to keep such accounts, records, and memoranda as fully and correctly disclose all transactions involved in his business. The House bill further provided that whenever the Secretary of Agriculture finds that all such transactions are not fully and correctly disclosed, he may prescribe the manner and form in which such accounts, records, and memoranda shall be kept, and that failure to keep such accounts, record, and memoranda in the manner and form prescribed or approved by the Secretary, may be punished by a fine of not more than $5,000 or imprisonment for not more than three years, or both. The House bill also made applicable to the powers of the Secretary of Agriculture in enforcing this act the powers of the Federal Trade Commission relating to the compelling of reports in writing under oath as to all accounts and other transactions of packers, stockyard owners, commission men, and dealers. The House bill also gave to the Secretary of Agriculture the powers of the Federal Trade Commission relating to the right of examination and copying of the books and records of such persons. Senate amendment No. 13 strikes out provisions of the House bill relating to accounting, and Senate amendment No. 14 inserts a provision which is intended to take the place of the provisions of the House bill relating to accounts, and which provides that every "operator" and packer shall keep such records and statements of account, and make such reports, under oath or otherwise, as the Secretary of Agriculture may require. The amendment further authorizes the Secretary in his discretion to prescribe "uniform systems of accounts and records and require the installation and use thereof by packers and operators." It also authorizes any officer or agent of the Government designated by the Secretary of Agriculture to enter and inspect any place used by any packer or operator in its business and examine any books, papers, records, or correspondence relating to such business. Violations of these provisions is punishable under the Senate amendment by fine of not more than $5,000 or by imprisonment for not more than three years, or both. The effect of this amendment would have been to relieve from the accounting and penalty provisions of the bill all stockyard owners, market agencies, and dealers, for the term "operator" as used in the Senate amendment is nowhere defined. The amendment also made it difficult to secure conviction of a packer, for the minimum imprisonment was fixed at three years.

Senate amendment No. 13 inserts a provision empowering the Secretary of Agriculture to investigate and ascertain the facts relating to the ownership, production, transportation, manufacture, storage, handling, and distribution of live stock and all products and by-products—other than meat and meat food products—of the slaughtering and meat-packing industry, and made it his duty to compile and furnish to producers, consumers, and distributors information respecting the condition of the live-stock markets and the supply, demand, prices, and other conditions affecting the market. The matter can now be dealt with more effectively under existing laws. The Senate recedes on amendments 13 and 14.

On amendment No. 15: The House bill contained a section providing that "for the purpose of securing effective enforcement of the provisions of this act," the provisions of certain sections of the Federal Trade Commission act should be made applicable to the jurisdiction and powers of the Secretary in enforcing this act. The Senate amendment in lieu of the words above quoted inserts the words "for the effective execution of the provisions of this act, and in order to provide information for the use of Congress"; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 16: The House bill took away from the Federal Trade Commission its power and jurisdiction in regard to any matter which by the act is made subject to the jurisdiction of the Secretary of Agriculture, except where complaint has been served before the passage of the act. The Senate amendment, while retaining the provisions of the House bill, continues in force the powers of the commission, but only so far as relating to making investigations and reports, and permits these powers to be exercised only on request of the Secretary of Agriculture; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 17: This amendment adds to the House bill a provision empowering the Secretary of Agriculture to "make such rules, regulations, and orders as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act." The House bill did not contain this specific provision, but did make applicable to the jurisdiction and powers of the Secretary of Agriculture in enforcing the act the powers given the Federal Trade Commission by section 6 of the Federal Trade Commission act, one of the provisions of which authorized that commission to make rules and regulations for the enforcement of the act, the two being substantially the same; and the House recedes.

On amendment No. 18: The House bill in section 405 provided "nothing contained in this act, except as otherwise provided herein, shall be construed" to alter, modify, or repeal any of the antitrust laws. The only provision of the House bill to which the clause "except as otherwise provided herein" relates is subdivision (b) of section 406, which takes away from the Federal Trade Commission, among other powers, its powers and jurisdiction given under section 11 of the Clayton Act. The Senate amendment added a provision to the effect that nothing contained in the act shall be construed to repeal any provision of the Sherman Act, "or any act amendatory thereof," thus leaving the bill open to the construction that some portion of it might be construed to repeal such of the antitrust laws as are not "amendatory" of the Sherman Act, and, however construed, adds nothing to what was already in the House bill; and the Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 19: The Senate amendment adds to the bill a provision that if any commission man aids in the enforcement of any rule of a live-stock exchange of which he is a member, which rule is intended to or does prohibit membership in such exchange to a cooperative association of producers acting as a commission firm because of the method of distributing surplus earnings of such association among its members, such action by the commission man shall be deemed an unjust, unreasonable, and discriminating practice. The House bill already made it unlawful for any commission man to engage in or use any unfair, unjustly discriminatory, or deceptive practice or device in connection with the buying or selling in interstate or foreign commerce at a stockyard of live stock, and empowered the Secretary of Agriculture to make an order to cease from violating this provision. The bill further provided in subdivision (f) of section 306 that the provision prohibiting a commission man from refunding or remitting any of his rates or charges should not prevent a cooperative association of producers from bona fide returning to its members on a patronage basis its excess earnings on their live stock, subject to regulations prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture; and the Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 20: This amendment provides that none of the provisions of the act shall be construed to include or be binding upon a person whose chief business is the raising of live stock or agricultural products, thus apparently excluding the farmer from the benefits afforded him by the act; and the Senate recedes.

G. N. HAUGEN,
J. C. McLAUGHLIN,
C. B. WARD,
H. M. JACOWAY,
J. W. RAINY,

Managers on the part of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WALSH). The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, the results of the conference on the packer-control legislation is set forth in the printed report and statement. I did not intend to comment on it, but with the wholesale misrepresentation that has been scattered broadcast, while I am aware that little, if any, attention is given to unfounded and uncalled-for statements such as have been made in reference to the bill now before the House, notwithstanding, in view of the misinformation that has gone into the Record, a brief statement of facts seems timely and proper. The subject of packer-control legislation has been under consideration for more than a third of a century, one which has been more vigorously contested than any. It has been bitterly opposed naturally by those affected by the legislation, and its progress has been substantially hindered and obstructed by "supposed" friends. In securing the passage of this bill, as of most other measures, the difficulty has not been so much in overcoming the frank, open, out-and-out opposition which it has encountered as the opposition from the professed friends of effective legislation, as, for instance, that constant plea for delay, for the adoption of amendments designed to weaken, to destroy the bill, and the numerous devices resorted to in delaying and defeating the passage of effective legislation.

H. R. 6320, introduced and reported by me, passed the House by practically a unanimous vote on June 2 and passed the Senate on June 17, but it was not until 40 days later, on July 28, that an agreement was reached in conference. The conference report was agreed to by the Senate August 4 by a vote of 48 ayes and 10 noes.

In another body this bill has been characterized as a packer bill and it has been alleged to contain seven amendments written by an attorney for the meat packers and accepted by the House Committee on Agriculture. A careful reading of the Record discloses no evidence beyond the bare statement of an alleged champion of the people's rights making the charge that seven amendments were written into the bill by an attorney for the meat packers. The professed friend of effective packer-control legislation did not even give any intimation as to what were the amendments to which he referred. He specified only one, which had to do with taking away the jurisdiction of the Federal Trade Commission.

The champion of the people's rights was mistaken about that. Why he did not specify what were the other six amendments I know not. Probably they were not of enough importance. But, inasmuch as no amendments have been written into the bill by any packer or any other interest, it matters not. He was mistaken as to the one specified and it goes without saying that he was mistaken as to all of them. Hence the House bill did not, as stated on page 2680 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of June 16, carry seven amendments which the packers' attorney wrote in the original Haugen bill. If he had taken the pains to inform himself of the facts he would not have made the statement. He would have found that the suggestion giving the jurisdiction to the Secretary of Agriculture was made by many excellent persons and which seemed to be the consensus of opinion of all. If he had turned to Secretary Wallace's statement before the committee, page 234 of the House hearings of May, 1921, he would have found, in response to a request for his opinion as to the question of jurisdiction over the packers, as follows:

Secretary WALLACE. I think the interests of the public will be served if you put all of this thing and all of this control and regulation in the hands of one supervisory body and not distribute it among several.

We have a large number of people who are very well informed, certainly, on agriculture. So that from that standpoint I think it would be wiser to put this matter in the department rather than in the hands of some commission which was not so closely related to agriculture.

Certainly the champion of effective legislation would not contend that Secretary Wallace acted as an attorney for the packers.

On page 77 he would have found a statement of Mr. Atkeson, representing the National Grange, regarding the matter, as follows:

I would call your attention to the fact that my first choice would be a separate commission and my second choice would be the Secretary of Agriculture. Assuming that the Senate passes a bill providing for a special commission, as they did before, and that the House is likely to pass a bill providing for its administration by the Secretary of Agriculture, then, taking that viewpoint, I want to call your attention to one feature of what is commonly known as the Haugen bill: Beginning in section 302, on page 12, as I have studied this bill, I fail to see any reason for introducing two administrative factors or authorities. Maybe I am entirely at sea in regard to the matter, but if I were writing this bill I would substitute for "Interstate Commerce Commission" "Secretary of Agriculture" clear through.

On page 78 Mr. Atkeson says:

If I were suggesting any changes in this bill (Haugen bill) it would simply be that change that the "Secretary of Agriculture" be substituted for the "Interstate Commerce Commission" throughout the bill, beginning with section 302. That is a mere suggestion.

Certainly he would not charge Mr. Atkeson, representing the National Grange, with acting as an attorney for the packers.

If he had turned to the hearings of Monday, January 3, 1921, page 26, he would have found Secretary Meredith's suggestions given in response to a request for his views on the subject of jurisdiction, as follows:

It would be difficult, if not almost impossible, for such a separate agency to utilize to advantage the existing facilities of the Bureau of Markets. In the circumstances it seems to me that it would be in the interest of efficiency and economy to place the activities proposed by the measure within the jurisdiction of this department, to be coordinated with its other activities and to be carried on under the direction of the Secretary of Agriculture. * * *

Thus, I might continue to quote from various others, but I take it that this is sufficient to convince even the biased mind. While the other amendments alleged to have been written in the bill by an attorney for the packers were not specified, I assume that they were amendments enumerated by Mr. Lightfoot, attorney for Wilson & Co., which appear on page 2705 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of June 17. If so, they were amendments suggested by the American Farm Bureau Federation. I refer you to pages 2705-2706 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of June 17, in which Mr. Lightfoot states that the suggestions made by him were in response to Mr. Atkeson's request for the packers' views. The first amendment referred to is the one conferring jurisdiction upon the Secretary of Agriculture instead of the Interstate Commerce Commission over the stockyards, commission men, and traders. This amendment, as I have stated, was suggested to the committee by the present Secretary of Agriculture and his predecessor, by Mr. Atkeson, and also by various other representatives of farm organizations, and was in accord with the Senate bill, which created a live-stock commissioner in the Department of Agriculture and gave him complete authority over the stockyards, commission men, and traders.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAUGEN. I will.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Is it not a fact that the only amendment of any consequence that the Senate passed, as shown in the conference report, is that, whereas under the original bill as it passed the House in the investigation against packers the power to investigate was lodged simply with the Secretary of Agriculture, the Senate amendment gives the Secretary of Agriculture power in his discretion to call on the Federal Trade Commission every time he desires to do so?

Mr. HAUGEN. That was Senate amendment No. 16, which was adopted. I shall refer to it later.

The next amendment referred to was to amend the definition of the term "live-stock products," so as to remove the objection that the bill subjected to regulation many industries never engaged in the slaughtering of animals, such as tanneries, fertilizer plants, woolen mills, automobile manufactories, and many others using by-products of the packing industry. Mr. Lightfoot's statement does not indicate the nature of the amendment which he proposed to Mr. Atkeson. The only suggestion of which the committee had any knowledge was one proposed by the American Farm Bureau Federation (see p. 481 of the hearings), which proposed to strike out from the bill the definition of "live-stock products" and substitute a definition of the term "meat-food products," which was to be defined to mean "all edible products and by-products of the slaughtering and meat-packing industry." At the same time the farm bureau suggested that the definition of the term "packer" be so amended as to confine packers to those manufacturing or preparing meats or meat-food products for sale or shipment in commerce. While recognizing the justice of the complaint that the definition in the original Haugen bill might be construed to include independent tanneries, fertilizer plants, and other industries using by-products of the packing industry, the committee at once perceived that the adoption of the suggestions of the American Farm Bureau Federation would be to leave outside of all regulation such industries when conducted as subsidiaries of the packing industry. It therefore amended the Haugen bill in such manner as to relieve from regulation these outside industries only when having no affiliation with a packer, but subjecting the packer to complete regulation, no matter what line of business he goes into.

The next amendment which Mr. Lightfoot states was suggested to Mr. Atkeson was to section 207 of the original Haugen bill relating to the accounts of the packers. Section 207 provided that any packer who kept any other or different accounts than those prescribed by the Secretary should be guilty of a criminal offense. Here again the committee had no knowledge of any amendment suggested by the packers' attorney either to the committee or to Mr. Atkeson, but the committee did receive from the American Farm Bureau Federation (see p. 481 of the hearings) a suggestion to strike out these words and to insert a provision that any packer who fails to keep his accounts "in the manner and form prescribed or approved by the Secretary" shall be guilty of a criminal offense. This suggestion was adopted by the committee and appears as section 401 of the House bill.

The next amendment which Mr. Lightfoot states was suggested by him to Mr. Atkeson was to section 205 (f) of the original Haugen bill, which provided that the findings of the Secretary as to the facts, if supported by evidence, should be conclusive. The suggestion was to insert after the words "supported by" the words "the weight of the."

This suggestion was not made by the packers' attorney to the committee, but the same suggestion was made by the American Farm Bureau Federation (see p. 481 of the hearings), but was not adopted by the committee. It adopted an amendment striking out of the bill all reference to the conclusiveness of findings of fact of the Secretary. In this connection it should be noted that the amendment suggested by the American Farm Bureau Federation appeared in the Senate bill, both as reported to the Senate at this session and as passed by the Senate in the last Congress. (See 66th Cong., S. 3944.) The amendments, in connection with the one referred to relating to the jurisdiction of the Federal Trade Commission, amount to only five in number. What the other two amendments referred to may be I have no knowledge of or means of surmising, but whatever they may be they were not put there as a result of any request made to the committee by any packer or his attorney or any other outside interest.

Another insinuation made was that the subcommittee was carefully selected. The subcommittee consisted of the three authors of the bills then before the committee and were appointed on a motion unanimously adopted by the committee. It is difficult to see what better method of harmonizing the conflicting views of the membership of the committee as to the form this legislation should take than to create a subcommittee composed of the individuals who had already put forward in bill form these views. The statement that the bill framed by the subcommittee was reported by the full committee without change and passed the House without amendment would seem to be the best possible proof that the bill, as passed by the House, was a meritorious measure. The foregoing considerations should convince any fair-minded person that the charges alleged that the committee was very "carefully" selected, that it wrote into the bill seven important suggestions made by an attorney for the packers—radical suggestions—suggestions that completely change the character of the bill as it was first introduced, are absolutely without foundation.

As stated on page 2713 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, after the adoption of certain amendments, the Member preferring the charges voted for the bill. Amendments referred to were as follows: First, No. 13, the adoption of the publicity section of the Senate bill, a provision practically the same as one carried in the Agricultural appropriation bills for a number of years, giving the Secretary ample authority to gather and publish any related information pertaining to marketing and distributing of live stock, meats, fish, animal by-products, and so forth. As the publicity had already been provided for, it did not seem necessary to incorporate it in the bill, certainly not as proposed in this Senate amendment, which, according to the definition of live-stock products as given in the bill, excludes from the investigation and report the meats and meat-food products. (See p. 2, line 5, H. R. 6320.)

The other amendment referred to was the adoption of the provision of the Senate bill for uniform accounting. The amendment No. 13, page 25, strikes out section 401 of the House bill, that whenever the Secretary finds that the accounts, records, and memoranda of any packer, stockyard owner, market agency, or dealer do not fully and correctly disclose all such transactions involved in such business, the Secretary may prescribe the manner and form in which such accounts, records, and memoranda shall be kept. The amendment No. 14 provides that the Secretary may in his discretion prescribe a uniform system of accounts and records and require the installation and use thereof by packers or operators, thus eliminating from the section the stockyard owner, market agency, and dealer, as defined in the bill. While there may be no serious objection to the uniform system of accounts, it seems of much importance that accounts, records, and memoranda of packers, market agencies, stockyard owners, and dealers should fully and correctly disclose all transactions involved in their business. If it is proper and necessary to apply it to one,

I can see no objection to applying it to all; besides, it would be necessary in order to check up the books of the packers. The penalties that may be imposed under the House bill for failure to keep such accounts, records, and memoranda are, upon conviction, not more than $5,000 or imprisonment not more than three years, or both. In the amendment penalties are, upon conviction, not more than $5,000 or imprisonment for more than three years, or both. Past experience has proven that excess penalties, such as are provided in the proposed amendment, a minimum fixed at more than three years imprisonment, has made it impossible to convict and has thus rendered the laws ineffective. It goes without saying, if the minimum fines and penalties are made so high that no conviction can be had, the whole structure falls and would fail in its purpose.

The next amendment referred to "the adoption of the provision which makes the Sherman antitrust law applicable to the packers, of which it is claimed that it radically improves the bill." Inasmuch as the provision was already contained in section 405 of the House bill, I am at a loss to know why it is necessary to insert the provision twice and in what respect it radically improves the bill. (See Senate amendment No. 18.)

It would seem that if the bill was worthy of support after the Senate had added 20 amendments, three-fourths of which materially weakened the bill and the remainder of which were immaterial or merely restated what was in the bill before, this would simply indicate the bill as passed by the House was an effective piece of legislation.

In reference to charges made I can only say that it has not been my habit to pay any attention to charges on their face so ridiculous and unfounded, but as the charges made involve the integrity and motives of not only myself as author of the bill but it includes the subcommittee; the membership of the committee and the House; yes, members of a committee in another body, the Secretary and former Secretary of Agriculture, Mr. Wallace and Mr. Meredith, the representatives of farm organizations, such as the American Farm Bureau Federation, the National Grange, and other worthy organizations who have earnestly and persistently labored for the enactment of effective packer control legislation, a brief statement seems timely and proper.

As before stated, the amendments referred to, and which were in part adopted, good or bad, came to the committee from the American Farm Bureau Federation and others. Whether or not they were the product of the farm bureau or the attorney for the packers it matters not, just so the amendments are proper. My knowledge of the representatives of the farm bureau's skill and deep interest in the welfare of all concerned warrants the belief that they drew their own amendments, and had nothing but the best interest of all concerned in view. The bill and modified amendments have been tested. They have been approved by a vote of 48 to 10, or better than 4 to 1, in the Senate and previously by practically a unanimous vote in the House.

As to the Senate amendments, I desire to say the Senate recedes from 13 of its 20 amendments and agrees to modifications of 4 of the amendments, which substantially restore the provisions of the House bill. The House recedes from its disagreement and agrees to three immaterial amendments, practically restating what was already in the bill. The amendments agreed to are Nos. 15, 16, and 17.

Amendment No. 15, section 402, page 27, lines 15 and 16, strikes out the words "for the purpose of securing effective enforcement of the provisions of this act" and inserts in lieu thereof "for the effective execution of the provisions of this act and in order to provide information for the use of Congress." The amendment is harmless, and the House recedes.

Amendment No. 16, section 405, took away from the Federal Trade Commission its power and jurisdiction over the packer and stockyards and gave the Secretary of Agriculture exclusive jurisdiction. The Senate amendment retains the provisions of the House bill and adds a clause to continue in force the power of the commission to make investigations and report, to be exercised only on request of the Secretary of Agriculture. Section 407 of the bill already provides that the Secretary may cooperate with any department or agency of the Government, any State, Territory, District, or possession, or department, agency, or political subdivision thereof, or any person, which deals with the matter more effectively, hence the Senate amendment is unnecessary; it neither adds nor detracts. As it is harmless, the House recedes.

Next, amendment No. 17, page 30. The section 407 "empowers the Secretary to make such rules and regulations and orders as is given the Federal Trade Commission by section 6 of the Federal Trade Commission act." The Senate amendment adds, on line 11, "make such rules, regulations, and orders as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act, and may"; hence it is substantially the same as the House bill, and the House recedes.

The three amendments, Nos. 15, 16, and 17, unlike the other 17 amendments, though they add nothing nor do they strengthen the bill in any particular, are harmless and will do no injury to the bill, so the House recedes on these three.

Amendments Nos. 6, 10, and 11: These amendments insert the words "buying or selling on a commission basis." The effect of these amendments was to take away from the Secretary of Agriculture all power to regulate the practices in relation to buying or selling at the stockyards unless such buying or selling was done on a commission basis. The packers and traders do not buy or sell on a commission basis, therefore the effect of the Senate amendment would have been to leave them entirely outside of all regulation, in so far as related to their buying or selling at a stockyard, thus cutting out one of the most important portions of the bill. The House insisted on and the Senate agreed to an amendment to its amendment making it clear that the Secretary's power relates to all buying or selling, whether on a commission basis or not. This was the effect of the House bill before the insertion of the Senate amendment, for the word "marketing" used in the House bill clearly included all buying or selling, whether or not on a commission basis.

Amendments 1 and 2, page 2, lines 1 and 2, excludes horses, mules, and goats from the bill. Horses, mules, and goats are sold in the stockyards and slaughtered by the packers and are under the meat inspection act. There seems to be no good reason why they should be excluded from the act. The Senate recedes.

Amendment No. 3, page 2, lines 14 and so forth, strikes out the definition of "commerce" intended to make it clear that Congress intended to exercise in the bill the fullest control of packers and stockyards which the Constitution permits. Recent decisions in the Supreme Court show the wisdom of making clear the intention of Congress. The Senate recedes.

Amendment No. 4, page 4, line 20, strikes out of the bill a provision making it unlawful for a packer to engage in or use any unjustly discriminatory practice or device in commerce. The Senate recedes.

Amendment No. 5, page 4, line 22, strikes out a provision making it unlawful for a packer to make or give in commerce any undue or unreasonable preference or advantage to any particular person or locality. It seems proper to make unjustly discriminatory practices unlawful and that for any packer to give in commerce undue or unreasonable practices or advantages should be prohibited. The Senate recedes.

Amendment No. 7, page 14, line 19, subdivision (b): The House bill defines dealers to mean any person engaged in the business of buying or selling in commerce live stock at the stockyard, either on his own account or as the employee or agent of the vendor or purchaser. The Senate amendment adds "and including any packer in his capacity as a buyer or seller of live stock in commerce and any employee or agent of any packer in such capacity"—words which merely repeat what was in the House bill. The Senate recedes.

Amendment No. 8, page 12, line 22: The Senate amendment adds a provision requiring the packers to dispose of their holdings in stockyards. The Senate amendment was totally ineffective to produce any useful results, inasmuch as it placed the prohibition only on the packer, the effect of which would have been to make it possible for the packers to indirectly retain their interest in stockyards by selling their stock to individual stockholders and members of their families. This matter is now dealt with more effectively in the consent decree as it relates to the Big Five. The Senate recedes.

Amendment No. 9 reduces from 1 year to 60 days the period for filing complaints with the Secretary against stockyard owners, commission men, and traders. Inasmuch as the complainant may not know that his cause of action had accrued until after 60 days, and inasmuch as he has, in most States, six years to file a claim under the State law, it would seem that the period fixed by this amendment is too short. The Senate agrees to an amendment to its amendment which gives 90 days for filing complaints with the Secretary.

Amendment No. 12, page 25: The House bill makes applicable to the jurisdiction and powers of the Secretary the provisions of the laws relating to the suspending or restraining the enforcement, operation, or execution or the setting aside of the orders of the Interstate Commerce Commission. The Senate amendment strikes out that provision and in lieu thereof inserts a provision making sections 203 and 204 of this act applicable in enforcing the provisions of the stockyard title. This amendment of the Senate was entirely inconsistent with all of the rest of the stockyard title and its adoption would have necessitated an entire rewriting of the title, which was beyond the power of the conferees. Furthermore, the adoption of the amendment would have materially weakened the bill. Amendments 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, and 18 I have already discussed. The Senate recedes.

Amendment No. 19, page 31, deals with the live-stock exchanges, which is taken care of on lines 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, and 8, page 17. The Senate recedes.

Amendment No. 20, page 31, excludes all persons whose chief business is the raising of live-stock or agricultural products, which would deprive farmers shipping live stock from all the benefits of the bill, including the right to petition the Secretary on having his damages assessed, which assessment becomes prima facie evidence in an action in the courts and entitles the petitioner to attorney's fees and relieves him from the payment of the cost. The adoption of this amendment would be to deprive the farmers of the greatest advantages given by the bill, and the Senate recedes.

Thus I have made it clear that three of the amendments agreed to, while adding nothing materially to the bill, did it no harm, but that every one of the other 17 amendments materially weakened the bill. In view of this fact, the House will agree with me that the managers on the part of the House acted wisely in insisting upon the Senate receding from its amendments. It is indeed pleasing and gratifying, especially to the members of the Agricultural Committee, who worked arduously, night and day, to promote just, fair, and effective legislation, to know that the bill, if the conference report is agreed to, is substantially the same as reported out of the committee and that it has successfully withstood all efforts in and out of Congress to weaken it.

In conclusion I desire to say the Senate added 20 amendments to the bill. Anybody who has studied the amendments must admit that three-fourths of them, or 15 out of the 20, are unjust, discriminatory, and destructive to the bill; as, for instance, amendments Nos. 1 and 2, which eliminated horses, mules, and goats from the bill. Horses, mules, and goats are bought and sold in the stockyards. They are slaughtered by the packers under the meat inspection acts. Why not make unfair and discriminatory practices in commerce in connection with the marketing and slaughtering of horses, mules, and goats unlawful? Why not give the shipper of horses, mules, and goats the same protection and benefit given the shipper of cattle?

Amendment No. 4: Why not make unjust, discriminatory practices or devices in commerce unlawful as provided in the House bill?

Amendment No. 5: Why not make it unlawful to give in commerce undue, unreasonable preference or advantage to any particular person or locality as provided in the House bill?

Amendments 6, 10, and 11: Why limit the Secretary's jurisdiction over marketing of live stock to that only on a commission basis and thus practically exempt the packers, dealers, and stockyard owners from the provisions of the bill as provided in the Senate amendment?

Amendment No. 9: Why limit the time for filing claims to 60 days, when in many States the statutes of limitation run for six years, as was done in the Senate amendment?

Amendment No. 13: Why exempt commission men, stockyard owners, and traders from requirements to keep such accounts, records, and memoranda as correctly disclose all transactions involved in their business as provided in the Senate amendment? The Secretary will get nowhere by checking up the books of the packer without authority to check up the books of the commission men and traders.

Amendment No. 14: Why apply minimum prison penalty to three years, under which no conviction can be had? Why not apply penalties to the commission men and traders as was done in the House bill?

Amendment No. 20: Why amendment No. 20, which reads, "None of the provisions of this act shall be construed to include or be binding upon a person whose chief business is the raising of live-stock or agricultural products"? I know of no reason why the farmer who ships and sells his live stock at the stockyards, who is discriminated against, who suffers a loss through unjust and discriminatory practices or devices, should not be entitled to the same protection and benefit extended to other shippers. Why should he be thus discriminated against?

What unpardonable sin has the farmer committed that should deprive him of the right to petition the Secretary and have his damages assessed, which assessment becomes prima facie evidence in an action in a court and entitles the petitioner to an attorney fee and relieves him from the payment of costs?

The bill agreed to in conference is, as before stated, substantially the same as it was passed by the House. It was drafted with a view not to destroy but to build up, to promote worthy and legitimate enterprises and activities in connection with the great packing industry. It gives the Secretary of Agriculture complete visitorial, inquisitorial, supervisory, and regulatory power over the packers and stockyards. It extends over every ramification of the packers and stockyard transactions in connection with the packing business. It provides for ample court review. The bill is designed to supervise and regulate and thus safeguard the public and all elements of the packing industry, from the producer to the consumer, without injury or to destroy any unit in it. It is the most far-reaching measure and extends further than any previous law into the regulation of private business—with few exceptions, the war emergency measure and possibly the interstate commerce act.

The friends of this bill, who had to do with the drafting of the bill, believe in just laws and in the honest administration of such laws. In my opinion, we can not afford to be contented with anything else. This legislation is not intended to meet the views of the demagogue or those howling in season and out of season for anything and everything, regardless of justice and property rights, but it is intended to meet the views of those who would proceed in an honorable and dignified manner, in a spirit of fairness and justice to all concerned. It is not legislation to injure or deprive an individual, corporation, or interest of a single dollar or single penny, but legislation that will grant to all an equal right and protection. Oh, that all might take a just pride in our national growth and greatness, in the fact that we are living in an age of marvelous expansion and are moving forward at a mighty pace. We are proud of the fact that industry is moving forward to its normal prosperity and happiness, and that we rank among the most successful and practical people on earth; that all, no matter what their political affiliation, creed, or occupation may be, may, under our laws, receive a common benefit under laws designed to protect the weak, to relieve the distressed, and to uplift humanity. The aim of all should be to give honest and thoughtful consideration to the securing of full benefit of our national resources, the development of mechanical appliances, the skill and genius of American labor, and to see to it that all are given adequate protection against the invasion of unscrupulous and dishonest interests, in order that we may have the full development of all worthy and legitimate enterprises. My friends, that can not be done by demagoguery. It takes wise constructive legislation to accomplish that, legislation in harmony with the views of those who have at heart the best interests of the country. Gentlemen, I thank you. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. REAVIS]. How much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has 20 minutes remaining. The gentleman from Nebraska is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. REAVIS. Mr. Speaker, I am not a member of the Committee on Agriculture, and for that reason I think I can speak more becomingly regarding the matter I have in mind than I could otherwise. I think that everyone at all familiar with the legislation of this session must have become more or less impressed with the dominance of the House. The military bill, the naval bill, the peace resolution, the packers' bill, and other legislation indicate very clearly that at this session the House in large measure has had its way. I do not take pride in the abstract proposition of the House having its way unless the way of the House is the right way. We have a rule in the House—and a very proper rule it is—that prohibits discussion of the other body in the Capitol.

I could wish that the other body had a similar rule, or if it has it, that the Members would observe it. All the way through the discussion of this packer bill, whether as a result of the heat or of peevishness I do not know, but constant unpleasant and ugly insinuations have been made with reference to the action of the Agricultural Committee and the action of the House on this measure. It has been openly charged in the other body during the debate on this conference report that this is a packers' bill passed by the House under dictation of the packers. No proof has been offered to substantiate any such charge. One Senator made the statement that seven amendments on the House bill were written by the attorneys for the packers. The only amendment of the seven to which he called attention was an amendment suggested by the Secretary of Agriculture himself. What the other six amendments are nobody knows. There is no suggestion that the amendments were not proper legislation. There was no complaint or criticism regarding any of these amendments excepting the apparently reckless charge as to their source. Gentlemen, in my opinion anyone who would wrongly leave the people of this Nation under the impression that either one of its legislative bodies would willfully subject itself to the dictation of the packers or of any other special influence is doing not only a positive disservice to the Congress but a positive disservice to the people of the Nation as well. [Applause.] I have taken the floor this morning for the sole purpose of voicing my resentment against such an attitude. The spirit of cooperation must exist between the two legislative bodies if we are to function efficiently, and we can never have the spirit of cooperation when one body without cause, without justification, impugns the motives and reflects upon the integrity of the other. [Applause.]

Mr. HAUGEN. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. SCHALL].

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. Speaker, the stage is set. The scene is laid. The curtain has risen. The first act is about to come off. Many of the Congressmen are home. What is to be done? A little job of murder. Who is to be killed? The Federal Trade Commission. Why? Because they have done their duty honestly and faithfully. Sentence has been passed. It has been O. K'd by the Senate, and it is back here to be O. K'd by the House. No chance to amend it. Our only hope is in the future. In order to be sure that the bill passed it is plastered around with regulations that should go into effect, that should have gone into effect long ago, but that would never have been brought to light had it not been for the courage and industry and integrity of the investigations of this very Federal Trade Commission which certain clauses of this bill now seek to quietly assassinate. Every good provision in the bill has been inspired by the work of the Federal Trade Commission, yet buried deep in this law is the death sentence of that commission, the only legal machinery which has been constructed that has proven itself equipped to meet the industrial problems of to-day in the interest of the public.

This is the first act of a long and ill-conceived tragedy. Next will come the clause in the futures trading bill which will attempt to take from the Federal Trade Commission their jurisdiction over the grain trade. Then the clause in the misbranding bill taking their power away over misbranding, and the clause in the coal bill taking away their power over the coal operators. Then any other criminal industrial combination who feel they need protection from exposure of the truth will bring forth a measure purporting to control and regulate them, while in reality they are trying to avoid a just and well-merited punishment as criminals under the law of the land. The Federal Trade Commission was the first institution ever formed to really accomplish anything along this line, the first obstacle that ever raised itself in the path of the packers. Constituents write, "Get after the packers. Get after the coal combine." But there was no way to get after them without evidence of overt acts, and the socialists have seized upon this apparent governmental impotence as an objective with which they are converting thousands to the idea that the Government should take over and own these immense private combinations. If we do not do something soon to get visible results and show that we are the Government, that creed will continue to grow.

We have the Clayton Act, the Sherman Act, and others, but while there have been suspicions and rumors never before had the facts been made certain and usable. Never before had there been competent evidence legal to go before a court. The Federal Trade Commission was organized September 26, 1914, with power by one means or another under the law to go into records, to get evidence, wherever that evidence could be found, to prove the things the country knew were going on. The men appointed went fearlessly ahead and did their duty and secured evidence sufficient to convict criminally of violation of law.

Everybody knew there was collusion and combination in restraint of trade, but heretofore there was no machinery to collect competent evidence. The commission found out and told the truth not only about the packers but about coal and oil and shoe and wool and other illegal combinations. They found that the packers controlled 762 individual and separate corporations, engaged in different industries, to say nothing of lesser interests in hundreds of others.

The Attorney General admitted that the Federal Trade Commission had collected evidence sufficient to convict the packers, but instead of starting proceedings he eased matters for the packers by stipulating a compromise, entitled a consent decree. The packers admitted suppliantly and unctuously that they were caught with the goods. They were only too glad to come in under this consent decree, whereby, with great newspaper flourish of magnanimity they voluntarily gave up a few of their iniquities in lieu of being prosecuted, and the public was hoodwinked through newspaper reference to their rights being protected in the decree. In reality their magnanimity consisted in pretending to forsake 10 classifications, still leaving them 752 over which they have complete control as yet. In these 10 they can still own 49 per cent of stock, and if they do not like to abide by 49 per cent they can organize another similar corporation over which there would be no restraint.

Their control of banking facilities is not mentioned, and through banks they can still hold absolute control by having some director of the bank sit with directors of the corporation, ostensibly to protect their financial interests, and thus continue the monopoly and hold in the palm of their hand the consumer and producer.

Now comes the word that they are modifying the consent decree. If the truth were known this agreement has already been completed whereby the consent decree will be modified to suit the packers. It is not desirable that the public shall know anything about this until after this measure becomes a law. Again and again, when amendments were suggested, we were informed that the point was taken care of by the consent decree. The very basis and framework of the bill was built on the existence of this consent decree, which, even at this moment I believe, arrangements are being made to set aside, in part. What part I do not know, but it is safe to predict that it is the part that is pricking them hardest on which they are at work. I have wondered at the apathy, all during the history of this bill, among the champions of the packers. They were not fighting it. When all is over and the truth is known I surmise it will be seen that the bill is satisfactory to the packers. It ought to be. One of their own attorneys wrote in the bill in his own handwriting amendments, seven of which have been adopted, among them the one dealing death to the Federal Trade Commission. This bill is a great coup for the packers. They hate the Federal Trade Commission, as any criminal hates his accuser.

To get rid of its power over them they will agree to anything; make any concession. They can attend to future involvements later. Not being able to buy off or stop it, since the men on the commission "neither beg nor fear your favors nor your hate," they undertake to destroy the power given them by law. Here we had the law, the machinery, and men with the courage to use them. Now the chief interest of the men implicated is to nullify the law so that no one will take action, to emasculate the commission so that it will rust out, fall into disuse, because they secured the evidence they were created to secure, because they have been efficient and done what they were organized to do. They are dangerous to crooked big business. They will educate the people if they are allowed to go free and untrammelled, these courageous men, who did their duty regardless of the power and pressure brought to bear upon them.

The Federal Trade Commission has proved its right to our confidence, in spite of the attacks upon it by its enemies, in their efforts to abolish, or at least curtail, its powers. Its members are able and fearless and honest, and if left undisturbed in their function will prove an effective check to the all-absorbing power of the great financial trusts, who do not like the light which the Federal Trade Commission causes to shine into their darkest corners. This commission unearthed the facts about the food profiteers and, in consequence, drew down upon themselves the deadly hatred of those powerful concerns, who will not rest till they have taken away every bit of effective power the commission has, and will use every resource at their command, every avenue of publicity open to them to discredit in the minds of the American people, this our one hope of handling these all-powerful institutions. They dare not come out openly and advocate the repeal of the Federal Trade Commission act on account that public opinion might ask why, and that might involve technical explanation. Public opinion, notoriety, publicity, is the one thing these profiteers fear, because this opinion directly reacts upon their public men.

The Federal Trade Commission furnished this publicity, therefore it must go. Upon it they vomit forth calumny and infamy to destroy the influence of these brave men fighting for the people and keep the truth they have gathered from reaching the ears of the public. They will not give up until they have robbed of power or had time to change the complexion of the commission. They view with horror the prospect of their real actions being disclosed, laid before a court.

When election time comes you will see men out talking apparently in the interests of the plain people, but the packers will be furnishing the money. They will call attention to the men who have dared vote against the "packer control bill," and they will point out all the splendid talking points of it, but they will never mention that deep down in this bill is the clause of murder of the very commission that made these splendid provisions a possibility. Men are intimidated from doing their duty lest they be covered with obloquy by unscrupulous hirelings of press and platform. The acutest intellects of the land and all the money that is needed are subsidized to put honest men in the hole. They do not want men around that believe in telling the people. Many and many an honest man, and many and many a timid man will vote for this bill because on its face it is what it should be. If the bill were honestly meant, would not it be fair, and good sense and justice to leave back of the Secretary of Agriculture the power of the Federal Trade Commission, which has been the packers' downfall?

Of course, if it is the packers that are to be considered, that is the thing to do. Kill the Federal Trade Commission. They want to be rid of the men who have exposed them. They want to leave to the Secretary of Agriculture the power to do, but no evidence to do with. They have to make a showing of playing square, which irks them, unless they can get rid of the Federal Trade Commission and its evidence. This body's only business is to investigate these crooked concerns and show up to the people what they have been doing and give to the court evidence on which to convict.

It seems to me utter folly for Congress to give up this faithful agent for the investigation of these crooked concerns. Any Member of the House can now introduce resolutions for investigation, and if he secures a majority of this body, can order the Federal Trade Commission to make such investigation and furnish its report to the House. This investigation is evidence in court. Any Member of the Senate can do likewise. The President, upon his own initiative can so order them. Why so anxious to get rid of the means of securing the facts against these monsters who are crushing the lifeblood out of the Nation? We should keep every arm of investigation we have as a safety measure and not delegate our power out of the immediate reach of the people. But what has this bill done with that power? Transferred it to a new man, the Secretary of Agriculture, already loaded down with the other duties of his department. Why turn it over to a new man, whose tenure of office is so short; he will be out before anything is accomplished. Whatever he may be, he is better for the packers than what is, which means criminal conviction. He has to start in all over and form anew the machine that is already in such efficient running order in the hands of the Federal Trade Commission. Why not keep a thing that is doing business?

We will be in fine shape to go before the country and have our opponents point out that the Republican Party killed the one thing that efficiently and truthfully worked for the interests of the people. Talk about bolshevists; that is the way to make them. Perhaps the packers think that they can get rid of the past. Once bitten, they may learn how to successfully hide secret files. In their long years of immunity they grew so bold that they kept their files, with all their damning evidence, right out in their offices, feeling sure that, as in the past, they could control, intimidate, and dominate anyone whose duty it might be to look them over.

It took the Federal Trade Commission six years to accomplish its work on the packers. Even should the Secretary of Agriculture bring to the attack the vim of the commission, the packers need not worry for six years more. Why take away the power from the Federal Trade Commission? Why not add to what we have, but keep what we know? On the face of it, the Secretary of Agriculture is given certain powers he can use. The bill may do good, but it is trading off something we have and allowing a proven guilty corporation to get away under the law from the competent evidence of the hearings. They do not care what law is passed for the future. They will try to take care there will be no tangible and accessible evidence.

A new law can not be retroactive, and you knock out all the work the Federal Trade Commission has done. No wonder that there is some color to the claim that is voiced that the packers are the Government. They are certainly mighty well taken care of in this bill.

But, in my opinion, it is not the packers we want represented so faithfully. It is the duty we, as public officers, owe the people that is paramount to all others. The people want justice, they want what is theirs, and they want others to have what is theirs; but they as American citizens do not believe that their property and their lives should be confiscated by these great combinations of money power, these trusts, these monopolies, who control mines, mills, forests, fisheries, food products of the world and the highways of traffic over which they are carried. There is little wonder at the accusation that Representatives, interstate commissioners, have been too often in the past their blinded dupes, helpless foes, or salaried, subservient tools. Their contempt for the law was as open as it was cynical. Judges too often have been their pawns, the executive powers of the mighty commonwealth their vassals, and governors of States their servants in livery.

On the wings of steam and with the voice of electricity they rallied their disciplined forces for aggression or defense as speedily as the devil in the ancient legend showed to Jesus all the kingdoms of the earth in a moment of time. But the evidence adduced by the Federal Trade Commission has bowed their crest, and they began to see their days of arrogance were numbered unless they can circumvent the commission. Though the packers are sinners above all Israel, the incorporated street car lines, transfer companies, water, gas and electric light combinations, land, cattle, and coal, lumber, telegraph and telephone companies, match and oil trusts, are equally ready for an act of injustice which may advance their interests or increase their dividends.

The commission has proven a pretty faithful watchdog to keep them from trespassing, for the ban of the law only serves to render them reticent as to their whereabouts and purposes, but affects their power for evil about as much as a leaden bullet does the vitality of a ghost, unless we produce evidence, and the Federal Trade Commission did produce that evidence.

The extent to which not only the political but the individual life is sequestered by the influence of combination power is but faintly appreciated.

For a bribe of a penny less upon a bunch of matches or a gallon of gasoline or a cigar or a pound of beefsteak, the short-sighted, unthinking public can be purchased to assist the old foe as against any new friend until from lack of support on the part of those to whom it has a natural right to turn and expect aid, the crippled and unfriended enterprise must sell out, join the opposition, or go down in ruin. It is only by fair and open competition that the equal, inalienable rights of the producer and consumer can be maintained.

Such combination power by the number and intricacy of its combination has strangled in America everything worthy the name of competition. By its immense resources and capital, great cold-storage plants, complete monopoly of refrigerator cars, and unfair rebates it has destroyed the law of supply and demand. To-day there is, from the Mississippi to the seaboard, practically but one freight line. Substantially there is but one telephone company, one oil, one match, one coal company, one telegraph company. Five packing companies, which are one great combination, not only fix the price of every ox and every pound of steak in the United States but have treated with a contempt that goes unpunished the gravest lawmaking power of the land, jeered at the helpless rage of Congressmen whose authority they flouted and whose loyal attempt at their legal restraint they despised. Why now rob ourselves of the agency that can supply the evidence which under the laws already passed will convict and thereby furnish the long-sought control? As a result of their machinations we have the wonderful spectacle of cattle raised and sold at an actual loss by the farmer and ranchmen, while beef in our great cities is as dear as when a greenback dollar was worth 20 cents. The Federal Trade Commission has shown them up for what they are, how rules are adopted for the government of employees, schemes are developed for the forcing up of prices and the forcing down of wages, the crushing of competitors, the manipulation of legislatures, and the evasion or defiance of statutes, which no person, individually responsible to the State or to the public reprobation would ever dream of attempting. No matter how vigorous the action, how unjust the demand, how oppressive or dangerous to the community, nobody is personally responsible. Each actor in the enforcement of the relentless, conscienceless order, from the president down to the office boy, is only a servant of the combination, whose duty it is to see that the behest of this invisible, unconvictable, irresistible tyrant is obeyed.

What matter if rest and food and proper shelter be denied the weary laborer? He enters into their computation exactly on a level with so many tons of iron, thousands of feet of lumber, cords of stone, cubic yards of earth, or bales of cotton. When he is worn out there is the poor farm, the potters' field, the pickling vat at the medical school. He is used up. He is so much human junk. Sympathy, interest, brotherly love, men may have to or for one another, but combinations of this sort have nothing to do with these things. In fact, one of the advantages of a combination existence along all lines of business is that it can be run without sentiment.

What matter if women do starve and freeze and helpless babes moan out their lives in misery? Let the law still continue to give to the poor wretch who filches a pound of beef-steak or an apronful of coal 90 days in the workhouse. Food and fuel must not be stolen, even at the relentless behest of motherhood, from the respectable citizen who by his interest in a great beef trust or coal combination takes illegally money, comfort, health, and life from the weak and defenseless, that he may add to his millions and increase the inventory of his luxuries.

What matter if you and I and all of us put on the garments that clothe us, eat the food that sustains us, do the work that comes to us, and if demand be made, lie down and be crushed into nothingness at the command of these grasping, gory juggernauts, so that their garments be of purple and fine linen, their food sumptuous and well flavored, their homes rich with uncounted spoil, and the wheels of their imperial cars be kept from contact with this too, too common earth? Nothing? Let the czar do what he will with his own. Is there no law for the emperor?

But we have laws, passed by Republican Congresses, the Sherman antitrust law, the Clayton Act, and others, to prohibit and punish just such acts as enumerated above—to send to prison just such commercial tyrants. But we have lacked evidence competent in court to convict. We have the Federal Trade Commission erected by Congress for the very purpose of securing evidence as above enumerated to convict them under the law as criminals for such practices, which evidence under the law is made competent in any court. The Federal Trade Commission has done its duty faithfully and loyally and has produced such evidence, and we now have such evidence, and by using it can set these people behind the bars where they belong; and these very control acts that are now before this body of the different unfair trade industries have been forced by public opinion through the evidence that the Federal Trade Commission produced. And now into these very controlling acts are being injected, as has already been done in the packer bill, the insidious drops of poison that are to eat out the life of the instrumentality that has brought them to taw. Section 405 and Article B of section 406 in this bill is the decree of death. What the numbers will be in the other bills remain to be seen. If the Members of this House knew and understood the significance of these venomous sections, they would not have stood for them. And I believe that when they come to understand they will rise up in their might against such pandering to great criminals. It must not be, it can not be, that the people's representatives will allow it to go unchallenged. If such things can be, then we are adding fuel to the anarchistic fire, already glaring too balefully in this country.

I do not know whether there is any way to get at sections 405 and 406, but some one here with parliamentary experience enough ought to do it. I do not believe the Members of this House know what is in those sections. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the Record. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SCHALL. Under leave granted me to extend my remarks, I wish to insert in the Record the following letter from Sam Gompers, a clipping from the Washington Herald, and a circular letter from farm, labor, and women's organizations.

Sam Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor, wrote the following to the members of the conference committee:

Permit me, in the name of 4,500,000 members of the American Federation of Labor, to protest against the passage of H. R. 6320, now in conference. "An act to regulate interstate and foreign commerce in live stock, live-stock products, dairy products, poultry, poultry products, and eggs, and for other purposes."

A most serious objection to the bill is the provision that the Federal Trade Commission shall have no power or jurisdiction whatever over the packing industry. Its jurisdiction, powers, and duties are delegated to the Secretary of Agriculture. The proposed law is not only unwarranted and unjust but unfair to the people of our country. The organic act creating the Federal Trade Commission defines its powers and duties as follows:

"That unfair methods of competition in commerce is hereby declared unlawful. The commission is hereby empowered and directed to prevent persons, partnerships, or corporations, except banks and common carriers subject to the acts to regulate commerce, from using unfair methods of competition in commerce."

Prohibiting the Federal Trade Commission from investigating the unfair methods of competition in commerce of the meat packers could only mean that the bill is intended to permit the meat packers to use such unfair methods. It is past understanding that the Congress of the United States would go so far as to make the meat-packing industry immune from such investigation. No other construction can be placed upon H. R. 6320.

The Federal Trade Commission has proved its value in the many investigations that it has made. It has been found that its findings can not be influenced and that its work is in the interest of all the people instead of a few. Why should Congress pick out the meat-packing industry for immunity from a fair and impartial investigation of its methods? When the Federal Trade Commission makes an investigation of an industry, its report is given to Congress. The Secretary of Agriculture under H. R. 6320 is given autocratic power. He is answerable to no authority other than to the courts when the packers appeal from his decisions.

While not at this time giving approval to other parts of the bill, I make most earnest protest to the conferees having in charge H. R. 6320 and urge that the sections of the bill which give to the Secretary of Agriculture all the powers, jurisdiction, and duties of the Federal Trade Commission be retained.

Very truly, yours,

SAM GOMPERS.

The Washington Herald, August 5, says, in part:

FEDERAL TRADE BODY'S END SEEN IN SENATE MOVE—APPROVAL OF PACKER BILL HELD FIRST STEP IN ITS ABOLITION.

What is regarded as the first successful blow in an alleged campaign to abolish the Federal Trade Commission has been struck by the Senate in adopting the conference report on the packer control bill. The measure now awaits final approval by the House before it goes to President Harding for his signature and becomes law.

The measure, as approved by the Senate yesterday, would give to the Secretary of Agriculture the power to establish machinery in his department similar to that already established by the Federal Trade Commission act for regulation of packing practices.

PACKERS OLD ENEMIES.

It is believed here that under the new law, after it is finally passed, the packers, in case of adverse decisions by the Federal Trade Commission, will seek to reopen those cases before the Secretary of Agriculture, and in pending cases will seek to have the hearings transferred from the commission to the body that will be established in the Department of Agriculture to carry on similar work. The fight of the packers against the Federal Trade Commission is an old and bitter one. Just what effect final enactment of the packer control bill into law will have on the whole packer fight is being watched with great interest by both private individuals and those elements of the public who have been involved in past struggles over this problem.

JOINT LETTER FROM FARM, LABOR, AND WOMEN'S ORGANIZATIONS CONCERNING PACKER-CONTROL LEGISLATION.

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 8, 1921.

To the Members of the House and Senate:

The organization we represent have been trying earnestly for nearly three years to secure packer-control legislation. The object of this letter is to protest against the kind of legislation that Congress appears to be about to enact. The bill, both as it passed the House and as it was amended by the Senate, is unsatisfactory.

We wish to advise the Members of both Houses that we are unalterably opposed to any legislation that curtails or interferes with the powers of the Federal Trade Commission. Particularly we oppose any legislation taking the packers out from under the jurisdiction of the Federal Trade Commission, as this bill does.

When the packers found that their long fight to prevent legislation could not succeed, they sought to control the form the legislation should take. Though beaten, they yielded in such a way as to secure important compromises from the House committee, especially in releasing them from the Federal Trade Commission act. Our organizations are not disposed to compromise, certainly not on such a vital issue as the Federal Trade Commission.

It seems clear that the packers want to abolish the commission so far as its jurisdiction over any of their companies is concerned. The organizations which we represent are firm, on the contrary, in the conviction that the commission's jurisdiction over the packers should not be impaired. If the commission is not made the agent to administer the act, it ought at least to be left with unimpaired powers. This would enable it to continue many of its proper functions without conflicting in any way with the activities of the Secretary of Agriculture under this act.

A few instances of the work of the Federal Trade Commission are found in its investigations and reports on the coal industry, the petroleum industry, the leather and shoes industries. We also cite its investigations of the causes of the high price of farm implements, showing restraints of trade in that industry; its investigations of lumber, showing combinations there to fix prices and curtail production in order to maintain prices; its investigations of the wholesale marketing of foods, showing the waste in our systems of distribution of perishable food; its report on wheat-four milling; and its exhaustive report on the grain trade.

The commission's investigation of the packers was one of the most thoroughgoing and fearless investigations ever carried through by the Federal Government. That is why we are for the commission and why the packers and the large monopolistic interests of this country are against it.

This is not an eleventh-hour presentation of the matter. Again and again our respective organizations have made clear to the committees of Congress our position on these bills, and particularly our attitude toward the Federal Trade Commission.

The packers and other interests are trying to get rid of the commission and destroy it piecemeal. We call upon every Member of Congress, who has the interest of the public at heart, to support the commission in this crisis, to refuse his vote to any such project of its enemies, and to insist on effective packer control.

We therefore most earnestly request that a concurrent resolution be passed by both Houses instructing the conferees to restore to the Federal Trade Commission its jurisdiction over the meat-packing industry.

To accomplish the above it appears necessary to strike out of the bill (H. R. 6320), as amended, all of section 405, paragraph (b) of section 406, and Senate amendment 18 in section 408, and to insert at the end of the bill in lieu of the above provisions a section preserving unqualifiedly the Federal Trade Commission act. (See draft attached.) Respectfully submitted.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, the adoption of this conference report will mark a triumph for sound, sane, sensible, constructive legislation. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TINCER] just called attention to the fact that for 30 years there has been agitation for public regulation of the packing industry. He reminded us of the fact that during that period legislation has been rendered impossible by the extreme attitude of two groups—those who opposed any regulation whatever and those who insisted upon legislation so radical that it did not command the support of sane, sensible, reasonable legislators. The House of Representatives has performed a great service in fixing and determining the character of this legislation. The Committee on Agriculture in the House has in reporting this bill and piloting it to enactment proven to the House and to the country that it is composed of sound, sane, sensible men, who understand the problems before them and have the courage to meet them—to meet them fairly, equitably, and to solve them wisely. This legislation will not put the packers out of business, for, notwithstanding the sins they have been guilty of, they have performed and they must continue to perform a highly important public service. On the other hand the bill does place in the hands of the Secretary of Agriculture sufficient authority to so regulate the packing industry as to prevent abuses from which the people have suffered in the past without injury to legitimate business. This bill provides a sane, sensible regulation of a great industry. We are fortunate that after all of these years of agitation, after all of the efforts that have been made by those who have taken an extreme and radical position in the matter, the Congress is finally about to place upon the statute books a piece of legislation which can be defended as sane and reasonable. The measure, while establishing that control and supervision which are essential to the public interest, does not vest power to injure the legitimate pursuit of a great industry and through that injury to bring harm to the live-stock industry and the public at large. [Applause.]

The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. REAVIS] has called attention to the controlling influence the House has had in determining the character of this legislation. The view of the House has prevailed because it is the reasonable view, fair alike to the live-stock industry, the packing industry, and the general public. Such a view and position, steadily and resolutely adhered to, is bound to win in the long run because it commands confidence and support.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the conference report.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. HAUGEN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was agreed to was laid on the table.

IMPORTATION OF DYES.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Ways and Means, I submit herewith a privileged report to accompany the bill (H. R. 8107) to control the importation of dyes and chemicals.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio presents a privileged report, to accompany the bill H. R. 8107, which will be referred to the Union Calendar.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve all points of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois reserves all points of order.

CORPS OF CADETS, UNITED STATES MILITARY ACADEMY.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of taking up the bill (S. 1358) to provide for maintaining a Corps of Cadets at the United States Military Academy, and so forth.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WALSH. Under what rule does the gentleman from California offer this motion?

Mr. KAHN. Under a rule which was passed by the House some weeks ago making four bills, including this one from the Committee on Military Affairs, in order.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, a further inquiry. Does that rule permit the taking up of one measure before the consideration of the other measures taken up under the rule has been completed?

Mr. KAHN. Well, the three bills referred to in the rule have already been considered by the House, and this is the only one that is left out of the four mentioned in the rule.

Mr. WALSH. And consideration has been completed on all the others?

Mr. KAHN. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill S. 1358.

Mr. KAHN. And, pending that, I ask unanimous consent that general debate on the bill be limited to two hours, one hour to be controlled by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARRETT] and one hour by myself.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent that general debate be limited to two hours, one hour to be controlled by himself and one hour by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARRETT]. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from California, what about those who are against this bill? I understand both gentlemen are for it.

Mr. KAHN. No; the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARRETT] stated to the House a week ago that he was opposed to it.

Mr. BLANTON. This is an important measure. Is the gentleman willing to give more general debate?

Mr. KAHN. I think general debate can be finished within that time.

Mr. BLANTON. There is a good deal of opposition to the bill.

Mr. KAHN. I understand.

Mr. BLANTON. Will not the gentleman give us an hour and a half to a side?

Mr. KAHN. Well, I think an hour of general debate on a side can bring out all the opposition that there may be against it.

Mr. BLANTON. This is a very important measure, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. KAHN. I think so.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. I shall be forced to object to the two hours. If the gentleman will ask a little more time—

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I ask the Chair to put the question and I will see whether I can arrange for the closing of general debate later on.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the gentleman from California to withdraw his request?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill S. 1358.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced the ayes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. BLANTON) there were—ayes 96, noes 4.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote because there is no quorum present, and I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. It is clear there is no quorum present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 182, nays 70, answered "present" 1, not voting 177, as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. A quorum is present. The Doorkeeper will open the doors.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill S. 1358, with Mr. DOWELL in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill S. 1358, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 1358) to provide for maintaining the Corps of Cadets at the United States Military Academy at its maximum authorized strength, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That whenever, following any regular entrance examination, the number of candidates authorized under existing law to report for admission to the United States Military Academy from any State is not sufficient to fill the quota of cadets authorized from that State, a sufficient number of qualified alternates therefrom, not otherwise authorized to report for admission as such, selected in their order of merit established at such examination, to fill said quota shall be admitted and charged to that State as additional cadets: Provided, That the admission of alternates as authorized herein shall not interfere with or affect in any manner whatsoever any appointment otherwise authorized by law, and that if by the operation of this or any other provision of law the Corps of Cadets shall exceed its maximum authorized strength the admission of alternates as herein prescribed shall cease until such time as said corps may be reduced below its authorized strength.

Also the following committee amendment was read:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That whenever following any regular entrance examination the number of candidates authorized under existing law to report for admission to the United States Military Academy from any State is not sufficient to fill the quota of cadets authorized from that State, a sufficient number of qualified alternates therefrom not otherwise authorized to report for admission as such selected in their order of merit established at such examination to fill said quota, shall be admitted and charged to that State as additional cadets. If such admissions do not bring the Corps of Cadets to its maximum authorized strength, a sufficient number of the remaining qualified alternates not otherwise authorized to report for admission as such selected from the whole list in their order of merit established at such examination, sufficient to bring said corps to its maximum authorized strength, shall be admitted and charged to the United States at large as additional cadets: Provided, That the admission of alternates as authorized herein shall not interfere with or affect in any manner whatsoever any appointment otherwise authorized by law, and that if by the operation of this or any other provision of law the Corps of Cadets shall exceed its maximum authorized strength, the admission of alternates as herein prescribed shall cease until such time as said corps may be reduced below its authorized strength."

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, there is a good deal of feeling about this bill with regard to affecting the right of any Member to fill vacancies in his district as they come by reason of the graduation of a cadet who has been appointed by him. There are 1,338 cadets at the Military Academy. Each Member of the House has two appointments. That makes a total of 870. From each Territory there are also four cadets; Porto Rico has two. From the District of Columbia there are four. From the States at large—that is, appointed by the Senators—there are 192, each Senator having 2 appointments just as the Members of the House. From the United States at large there are 82, of which 2 are appointed by the Vice President and 80 by the President. It is only fair to say that the President's appointments are generally limited to the sons of Army or Navy officers. Those officers are moved about from place to place during their term of active service in the Government and have no fixed habitation. It is usually believed that any Member of the House appointing his cadets will appoint young men from his own district. In fact, his certificate of appointment announces that the men he names have been residents of his district for the two years next preceding the date of the appointment.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. I will yield.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Is not that a requirement of law?

Mr. KAHN. It is a regulation, I think. But I want to say frankly to the House that the War Department has never questioned the appointment of a cadet by a Member of the House—that is, if the Member of the House certifies that his appointee resides in the district which he represents, the War Department will take his statement to that effect.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. I have heard it rumored here that at the Army and Navy Club not long ago in discussing this bill certain Army officers stated that the main reason it was necessary to pass this bill was that the young men at West Point, from various districts in our States, were not of that high class of individuals that they wanted, and that they were hoping to have a kind of military succession of Army officers' sons. Is there anything in that statement?

Mr. KAHN. I do not believe there is anything in it, because a Member of the House will appoint from civilians in his district to this place, and therefore the only alternates that can be appointed under this proposed bill are civilians. The President alone appoints the sons of Army and Navy officers.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; but the 82 appointments made by the President and the Vice President are made from Army officers' sons, and out of the three alternates to each of these appointments, aggregating 246 alternates, the Army could thus appoint 246 cadets extra from Army officers' sons.

Mr. KAHN. But the President can only appoint two alternates for each place.

Mr. BLANTON. But I want to ask the gentleman about another matter, which, I presume, is a reason for this bill. I understand that these young men when graduated are given commissions as second lieutenants?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. We have 13,000 officers now with commissions and not a single second lieutenant in the bunch. They have been all automatically promoted to first lieutenants, and to mostly captains and majors. I presume this bill is to give us a few second lieutenants in the Army?

Mr. KAHN. This bill is to give the Army young men who have had a thorough course of training at West Point. The war developed the fact that what we need more than anything else is well-trained, seasoned officers in our Army. And I must say frankly that the criticism that was made of our forces during the war by the officers of the Allies was that the lives of our men were needlessly sacrificed because we did not have that character of officers in command.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. As I understand it, the Army would have the right to select cadets in event there were no alternates?

Mr. KAHN. No.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Under this bill?

Mr. KAHN. No.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. They would have the right to fill vacancies?

Mr. KAHN. From the alternates.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. In the event there are no alternates that qualify—

Mr. KAHN. Then they can not be appointed. Let us be fair, gentlemen. A great many of the cadets now go to the academy with certificates granted by various universities throughout the country. These men do not have to go through any examinations, because that certificate takes them into the academy by reason of the standing of the educational institution.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Now, if the purpose is to procure men well trained in military tactics for these officer positions, as the gentleman from California says, why is it that the War Department is now carrying on an intensive campaign trying to induce civilians to stand the examinations in order that they may be appointed second lieutenants?

Mr. KAHN. Because the total number of cadets at West Point is only 1,338, and there are about 2,000 vacancies in the lowest grades of officers in the Army.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Why is it necessary to fill up a quota of officers for 280,000 of an Army?

Mr. KAHN. The gentleman knows that is an authorization, and that the Army will have only 150,000 men.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. If we are to have only 150,000 of an Army, why are we to have officers for 200,000 men?

Mr. KAHN. You have not that, and you have not near that.

Mr. ANDREWS. I understand that this bill will increase the expenses for the next year a little over $137,000. What necessity is there for that?

Mr. KAHN. The money for the academy has already been appropriated.

Now I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Will the gentleman tell us why it is that we have no second lieutenants in the Army to-day?

Mr. BLANTON. They are automatically promoted.

Mr. KAHN. I am satisfied that the War Department, in acting upon the Army reorganization bill, promoted those in the lower ranks to vacancies in the higher ranks.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I am told that every member of the class graduated in 1919 is now a captain. Is that so?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. It is not so.

Mr. KAHN. I have heard a great many statements that are not borne out by the facts, and if the gentleman will investigate that matter I am quite sure he will find out what the situation is.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman answer?

Mr. KAHN. I gave the gentleman an answer, but he was paying attention to somebody else.

Mr. ANDREWS. What was the answer?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from Vermont; I yield to my colleague on the committee.

Mr. ANDREWS. I want an answer to my question.

Mr. KAHN. I decline to yield further to the gentleman. I answered his question.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I thought the cover was shut down on that.

Mr. KAHN. I yield to my colleague on the committee. What is the gentleman's question? My time is running.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. The gentleman made an answer to the inquiry as to promotion of members of the class of 1919 at West Point, the suggestion being that they had all been made captains, and the implication or inference being that the War Department had worked it out in some devious or subterranean way and probably had acted in a manner contrary to law. As a matter of fact, within the last few days at least, not all of the men who were proper to be ranked from August 15, 1917, and who were in line as senior first lieutenants have yet been made captains, because the law provides that they shall be promoted according to seniority of service in the files, as has been done, and there are still several hundreds, perhaps a thousand, before these 1919 men will be promoted.

Mr. ROSE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. ROSE. I would like the gentleman to explain the actual workings of this bill as it becomes a law. On page 3 it is provided—

That the admission of alternates as authorized herein shall not interfere with or affect in any manner whatsoever any appointments otherwise authorized by law.

I would like to have this explained to me. I am asking this question for my own benefit as well as that of other gentlemen who have heard the gentleman talk. Allow me to ask this: Supposing I appoint a principal and an alternate and my principal fails and the alternate fails. What powers have I left?

Mr. KAHN. For the class going in this year you would have no appointment. You then would be absolutely unrepresented at the academy for a year.

Mr. ROSE. For a year?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. No; I can not yield now.

Mr. ROSE. That involves the principal and the alternate?

Mr. KAHN. Yes. Now, under this bill the purpose is to prevent that condition from arising. They have overhead charges that are not increased by reason of the filling up of the classes. In a case such as the gentleman from Pennsylvania cites he would have another appointment next year; so that he would still continue to have two cadets at the academy from his district.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Is not the gentleman in error right there? That is the purpose of the bill—to permit the filling of the vacancies, so that you will have a man at the academy. Now, if you do fill it, how can you have a vacancy?

Mr. KAHN. They simply fill it for that class.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield now?

Mr. KAHN. Not now. Let me explain this. Under this bill they would first have to go to the successful alternates from your State to fill the vacancy in that case, and the cadet would not be charged to your district but to your State. If you get no cadet by reason of there not being sufficient to fill the vacancies from the alternates from your State, then the War Department would be allowed to go to some other State and fill that vacancy, and the appointee would be considered as a cadet at large.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. No; I want to explain this.

Mr. OLIVER. I want to ask just a question.

Mr. KAHN. I am always glad to answer questions, but I think I have the right to make a statement.

Mr. ANDREWS. Will the gentleman answer my question?

Mr. KAHN. Yes; I did answer it, but the gentleman was not paying attention.

Mr. ANDREWS. The gentleman did not answer it.

Mr. KAHN. I did, and it is in the record. My answer is in the record all right. I try to answer questions, but when gentlemen do me the honor to ask a question I do not think it is courteous to me to talk to somebody else while I am answering.

Mr. ANDREWS. The gentleman is in error.

Mr. KAHN. I saw the gentleman talking to some one else.

Mr. VESTAL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. VESTAL. I want to see if I understand the situation correctly. Suppose I have a vacancy now for West Point for this year.

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. VESTAL. If this bill were to pass and I have no alternate or no principal that took the examination and qualified, do I understand, then, that I have an appointment next year?

Mr. KAHN. You will, positively.

Mr. VESTAL. That is the point I want to get at. If this vacancy is filled, do I still have my appointment for next year?

Mr. KAHN. You have it next year; absolutely.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. No. I want to tell the gentleman just how that is.

Mr. VESTAL. Very well. I shall be glad to hear and understand.

Mr. KAHN. Every year the classes that enter West Point lose about 25 per cent of their number before the beginning of January of the following year; men who can not live up to the requirements of the academy; men who can not keep up in the academic courses; men who get demerits for misconduct; and men who drop out by reason of sickness; so that the class that is going in this year, which numbers a little over 400 men, will in all probability lose probably 125 men on account of their being dropped before the beginning of next year, when you can name your man.

Mr. VESTAL. I think I understand. I have an appointment for next year now.

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. VESTAL. I make that appointment. I appoint a principal and an alternate.

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. VESTAL. Next year both the principal and the alternate fail.

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. VESTAL. Under this bill, then, that vacancy is filled?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. VESTAL. Then the next year I do not have any appointment, do I?

Mr. KAHN. But you would have the vacancy—

Mr. VESTAL. That is what I want to get at.

Mr. KAHN. You would have the vacancy that you could have filled this year if your man had qualified. That is exactly the situation.

Mr. McKENZIE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KINCHELOE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. I yield to my colleague on the committee [Mr. McKENZIE].

Mr. KINCHELOE. I have been trying to get the gentleman's attention for some time.

Mr. KAHN. I know; but I will yield first to the members of my committee.

Mr. McKENZIE. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee if it is not true that so far as Members of Congress are concerned they may win under this bill by getting in one of their alternates, but they can not lose by it?

Mr. KAHN. That is exactly the situation.

Mr. McKENZIE. They can not lose an appointment?

Mr. KAHN. They can not lose a single cadet, but they may gain an additional cadet who has passed the examination successfully, who is classed as an alternate, and who could not possibly get into the academy without the passage of this bill.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. KINCHELOE. As the gentleman well knows, there is a maximum number of students at West Point, and there is a maximum quota to each State.

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Now, suppose I have a vacancy at West Point and another congressional district in my State has a vacancy. I appoint a principal and two alternates and the Congressman from that other district in my State appoints a principal and two alternates. They go to examination, and my principal and two alternates fail while his principal and two alternates pass. Then under this bill they could take one of his alternates to fill that vacancy? Is not that correct?

Mr. KAHN. They could take one of the alternates to fill that vacancy.

Mr. KINCHELOE. The gentleman says I will have that vacancy to my credit next year.

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. KINCHELOE. How can I have it unless we figure on the probability of some of the cadets already in the institution failing?

Mr. KAHN. We know from experience that some of them will.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Where will the vacancy come from?

Mr. KAHN. If the gentleman will allow me, I will answer him as best I can. After 15 years' experience at the academy they know that 25 per cent of the cadets fall out every year for the reasons I have stated, failure to meet the requirements of the academy; and that furnishes sufficient vacancies every year to enable the Members of the House to make up their appointments.

Mr. KINCHELOE. If the gentleman will yield further, if less than 25 per cent should fail then there would be no vacancy next year, because there would be no place for the vacancy to come from.

Mr. KAHN. There are always enough vacancies to allow the appointments in cases like those we are considering at this time.

Mr. KINCHELOE. But that is contingent upon the failure of somebody else.

Mr. KAHN. That is contingent on failures.

Mr. OLIVER. Will the gentleman from California yield?

Mr. KAHN. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. OLIVER. Is the gentleman aware that the report from the Military Academy, like the report from the Naval Academy, shows that since they have adopted the policy of admitting on certificates, the percentage of failures has grown less?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. OLIVER. And there may soon come a time when the percentages of failures will be few. If that happens, then the condition which the gentleman states will protect appointments by Members of Congress will not exist.

Mr. KAHN. I doubt that, but I am willing to give this plan a thorough trial. I would be willing to limit the time that this law should remain in effect, say to three years, so as to give it an opportunity to work out.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. I yield to the gentleman from Vermont.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I wish to suggest to the gentleman from Alabama that the law is elastic enough so that there may be a temporary overplus, just a little one.

Mr. KAHN. Yes; in the proviso.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. In the proviso, at the end of the bill.

Mr. KAHN. I would be willing to limit the effectiveness of this bill to three years, so as to give it a chance to work out.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. The gentleman made the statement that the appropriation had already been made for the provisions of this bill.

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. How much additional money will this bill cost?

Mr. KAHN. Not a dollar. The money for the pay of the cadets has already been appropriated, and the money for the subsistence of the cadets has already been appropriated. The testimony before the Committee on Military Affairs was to the effect that there would be no increase in the overhead cost.

Mr. ANDREWS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. KAHN. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. ANDREWS. Would the money be paid out if the additional 121 were not sent there?

Mr. KAHN. Oh, well, the gentleman does not need an answer to a question like that, because he knows—

Mr. ANDREWS. I did not get an answer a while ago—
Mr. KAHN. He did get an answer, but the gentleman was not paying attention.

Mr. ANDREWS. You did not answer it.

Mr. KAHN. I did answer. The gentleman was not listening.

Mr. LAYTON. In view of the reduction of the Army and the Navy, and in view of the contemplated conference that is to be held for the purpose of the world peace and disarmament, why did not the gentleman bring in a bill to cut down the expenses of the Military Academy 50 per cent? [Applause.]

Mr. KAHN. The gentleman from Delaware knows that the conference for disarmament has not yet met, and it would be criminal to put this country in a condition at any time where it could be successfully attacked by her enemies.

Mr. CHANDLER of New York. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. CHANDLER of New York. The gentleman spoke of giving the plan of the bill a trial. I confess that the purpose of the bill is not quite clear in my mind. I want to know if it is the intention to remedy a defective system of appointment so as to enable the representation at West Point under the present law to be completely filled, or is it intended to increase the representation to a larger number?

Mr. KAHN. Neither proposition is correct.

Mr. CHANDLER of New York. I would be glad to have it explained.

Mr. KAHN. There are 1,338 cadets at West Point under the law, and there is no desire to increase the number. But it happens every year that when a new class comes in, by reason of the failure of boys to pass the examination, by reason of sickness, by reason of failure of Members of Congress to make appointments, there are fully 100 fewer cadets in the class than the total number allowed.

Mr. CHANDLER of New York. Then it is to remedy a defective system of appointment.

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Not a defective system of appointment; the appointment is all right.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. In order to clarify the situation, will the gentleman tell us the rights of each district under the law?

Mr. KAHN. Each district has two cadets. When I first came to Congress each district had one appointment. Subsequently we amended the law to provide for two. In the apportionment of the new cadets it was tried to apportion them so that each Member of the House would have one appointment every two years. But by reason of the working out of the law and new conditions which we are trying to remedy to-day, by reason of the failure of cadets to enter with their proper classes, the various districts have changed with respect to appointments, so that in some districts you will find that both appointments are in one year, while in other districts one appointment is in one year and the other in the next year, so that it is very rare when the appointments in any district are two years apart.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. If I understand it, each district has the right to have two men in West Point all the time.

Mr. KAHN. Quite right.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Now, if this bill passes with this proviso, that right will still obtain, will it not?

Mr. KAHN. It will obtain absolutely, but some districts, however, may have three because the alternate from that district may have been appointed to some other district.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. But each district will still have the right to have two men at West Point under the law.

Mr. KAHN. Quite right.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Suppose, however, that the complement has been more than filled and there is no vacancy, then in that event the district will not only have lost when it should have been filled but will lose in the additional year.

Mr. KAHN. That assumes that every man in the following year will qualify, and that all the men who went in this year will continue to the very end of the year, a condition that has never yet existed in the West Point Academy.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. That is true. I think it is very improbable, and yet the condition may arise, although it is improbable and has not occurred in the past.

Mr. KAHN. It is only fair to say that such a condition may arise; but, of course, it is improbable, and, therefore, so far as I am concerned I am willing to have the bill amended so that it shall take effect for three years only in order to try out this system.

Mr. CHALMERS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. I will.

Mr. CHALMERS. I want to ask the chairman if the same system is now in force at the academy which has been in force for many years?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. CHALMERS. Just at this time, when the world seems to be in favor of disarmament, why does the committee think it necessary to change the system just now. [Applause.]

Mr. KAHN. I want to say frankly to the gentleman that the War Department has repeatedly in the past come to the committee and asked for this kind of legislation; because, after all, at the academy there are quarters for 1,338 men. Now, if we only have 900 men in there, and you have the same number of professors that you would have for a full complement, and you have the same overhead charges, would it not be better to fill up the number of classes, so that if we ever happen to get into trouble again we will have thoroughly trained officers?

Mr. CHALMERS. I want to say that the gentleman's recommendation and the recommendation of the committee means more to me than the recommendation of the General Staff or of Army officers. It seems to me, and I have had experience enough to know, that the boys are failing to enter now and are failing in a greater percentage than they were 5, 10, or 15 years ago.

Mr. KAHN. My opinion is that they invariably failed and have failed to the extent of 25 per cent, and that has been the ratio right along.

Mr. CHALMERS. Mr. Speaker, I understand that, but just now, why do we wish to appoint more men, when I understand that we have practically 14,000 officers who are ready and equipped to do this service?

Mr. KAHN. As I stated before, the World War showed that we were exceedingly deficient in our thoroughly trained officers. It is only at the Military Academy where the men can get the thorough training that is required for an officer in case we get into war.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. The normal graduating output of West Point each year is not ordinarily sufficient to fill the usual vacancies in the commissioned personnel of the Army. It is not a question of adding strength to the Army, it is not a question of exceeding the present total commissioned force. The Army even now is not up to its ordinary normal proper commissioned personnel in number, under the terms of the law, and the average deficiency in that total from year to year is about 10 per cent. Ordinarily in recent years the graduations from West Point do not supply the annual wastage, so to speak, in the commissioned personnel of the Army.

Mr. KAHN. And it might be well to explain to the House that only about one-fourth, or 25 per cent, of our officers to-day are West Point graduates. Three-fourths of the officers come from the civilian forces of the country.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. JONES of Texas. In view of the great efforts that are being made toward disarmament, why make such desperate efforts to fill these vacancies now? Would it not be better to wait until after the disposition of the disarmament program, and then we can formulate a program to cover the real situation.

Mr. KAHN. As I told the gentleman, I am one of those who believe that it is a wise policy in this country to have the country ready for any possible emergency. We failed to do that in the past, and the consequence was that the 19 months of war cost us $24,000,000,000.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Is that the gentleman's idea of showing our good faith in calling the conference—to immediately strengthen the military arm of the Government?

Mr. KAHN. Oh, no; that is not my idea at all. I want to say frankly to the House that there is a great deal of pacifism going on throughout the country—

Mr. JONES of Texas. Oh, some one is always making the cry of pacifism, but I want to get some facts.

Mr. KAHN. And I want to state some facts. There is a propaganda going on in this country to-day that 92 per cent of all the money collected from taxes in this country go for war—

Mr. JONES of Texas. That is the statement of the Bureau of Standards.

Mr. KAHN. Go for wars past or for preparation of war in the future. Undoubtedly over 50 per cent of that 92 per cent was due to the absolute unpreparedness of this country when we got into the war. [Applause.]

Mr. JONES of Texas. What about the preparedness of Germany? It did not happen in Germany in that way.

Mr. KAHN. Germany, after all, at the end of the war retired to her own borders and her cities were not destroyed, as were the cities of France and Belgium.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Then, the gentleman justifies Germany's course of procedure in all her war preparation, does he?

Mr. KAHN. The gentleman does not, but I have had letters recently from Germany, from Germans, who denounce Germany's policy.

Mr. JONES of Texas. That is what got her into trouble. It was her military policy, and the gentleman seems to want to adopt that now.

Mr. KAHN. Oh, the gentleman knows—

Mr. JONES of Texas. The gentleman brought in the German question.

Mr. KAHN. No; the gentleman from Texas lugged it in. The gentleman knows that the gentleman from California has never at any time stood for the German policy in military matters—far from it. [Applause.] I have always stood for an American policy, but I am a thoroughgoing American and I never want my country to be attacked when the country is unprepared to defend itself. [Applause.]

Mr. JONES of Texas. Does the gentleman think that waiting six months would make such a vast difference? We would only have to wait six months in order to determine the outcome of the conference, and the gentleman surely does not think that would keep us from preparedness.

Mr. KAHN. I do not know anything about it. I do know a good many things that I can not talk about on this floor, because as chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs I have deemed it always a part of my duty to read every intelligence report from the Army officers and the Navy officers of my country, so that I may be ready when the emergency comes to take action. I try to keep myself informed.

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. I should like to ask the gentleman if, under the Borah resolution, this conference was not called not to deal with West Point or with military affairs but with naval affairs?

Mr. KAHN. It was.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Does not the call cover matters beyond naval affairs?

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. It was called principally because of the Borah resolution. Further, I should like to say that while I was not a Member of the House at the time yet I followed the newspapers and followed what was done in this House when we entered the war, and it is my belief that if the House had not taken the advice of the gentleman from California then and if he had not been a leader of a great sentiment in this country we would not have won that war. [Applause.]

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. In the colloquy 15 or 20 minutes ago the statement was made that there were captains in the Army who were in the class of 1919 at West Point. The gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GREENE] took the floor and made the statement that that was not the case, because there were men in the class of 1917 who were not captains.

I got The Adjutant General's office over the telephone, and I know of one particular instance of an appointee from the fifth district of Minnesota who was in the class of 1919, and who graduated early on account of the war in 1918. His name is Alexander Murray Nielsen, Corps of Engineers, United States Army.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. If the gentleman from California will permit, the gentleman contradicts his contradiction of my statement in his own statement. Instead of being turned out in the class of 1919 he was really graduated with the class of 1918.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. But the gentleman used the term 1917.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I did not refer to the West Point class of 1917; I referred to those candidates of August 15, 1917, and said so in so many words.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time. [Applause.]

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas is recognized for one hour.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, in my opinion we are not at this time justified in making this departure from the long-established custom concerning appointments of cadets to West Point. I will say for the Committee on Military Affairs that during the two Congresses before this that I had the honor to serve on this committee, and up until now in this Congress, that if there is a committee of this House that has been nonpartisan in its deliberations and nonpartisan in the consideration of bills which it has reported to the House, it is the Committee on Military Affairs. We have never known politics in that committee; we do not know it now; and in dealing with the Military Establishment of the country each Member of that committee, regardless of his political convictions, is guided solely and alone in his course by what he believes to be for the best interest of our common country. [Applause.] At this time the whole country—not only our country but I might say the world—is not looking any more toward military establishments and great armies, fleets, and navies, but they are looking rather to a time of peace, when people will no longer be taxed to death to maintain a great Army and an unusually great Navy. I might remind my Republican friends of this House that, when the President of this Nation the other day, at New York, made an address at the ceremonies over the dead bodies of our brave soldiers who had fallen in the Great War, if one part of his speech received more applause than the other, if the newspaper reports are true, it was that part of the speech when he feelingly said, referring to the World War, "That we must see to it that this thing never happens again." That sentiment met with a response that came from the hearts of the people who listened to those words and showed beyond question that they are tired of militarism, that they are tired of hearing talk of great wars and the stupendous cost to sustain wars. Now, at this time it does seem to me that we should adhere to our former course and not, in the face of the world's demand for consultations and conferences concerning disarmament and world peace—it does seem to me, I say, we could at least go along as we have been going for the last many, many years, and not, in the face of this sentiment of the country, set ourselves to the task of turning out more military officers next year than we have ever turned out from the Military Academy before. [Applause.] It is argued here that this bill will not interfere with the vacancies of Congressmen. It is really not the intention of the bill, I take it, that that should be the case, but there is one thing that is absolutely certain. It will either interfere with the vacancies of the Congressmen or it will put more than 1,338 men in the academy after next year unless in the succeeding year enough men shall graduate, or fail, to take care of all the vacancies that the Congressmen might have left over. But, gentlemen, what is the primary purpose of this bill? The real purpose of it is to fill up the academy. The real purpose of this bill is that next year the class in the military school at West Point shall have a class of 1,338 men, and if we do not pass this bill, they would have perhaps 120 or 130 less.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. I will.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Can the gentleman tell us what was the maximum number of cadets at West Point prior to the war? I understand this bill if it is passed will increase very largely the yearly output from the academy as compared with prewar conditions, and I would like for the gentleman to tell us what the facts are.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. As I understand the situation, it will increase the output of the school and that for many years the school has run anywhere from 10 to 15 per cent short of the required strength of the school. Some years it has been more and some years it has been less. The purpose of this bill is to fill up the school.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. If the gentleman will permit, I wish to ask the gentleman from Texas if it is not a fact that prior to the World War the average total strength at the academy did not exceed 700, whereas they now annually exceed 1,100 without the passage of this bill?

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Well, I am frank to say that I do not have those figures at hand, but I think the figures quoted by the gentleman from Tennessee are correct, as I recall them from memory.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. I will.

Mr. KINCHELOE. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MOORE] asked the gentleman how much the increase was compared with the prewar period; the truth was that during the war we passed a law doubling the attendance at West Point, whereby each Member of Congress now has two cadets whereas before the war he had but one.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Not only has the West Point maximum of cadets been increased by law but the commissioned personnel of the Army was increased. There was a demand for more. Even at that, the normal graduation from West Point does not fill the normal vacancies in the Army.

Mr. CHALMERS. Can the gentleman tell the House the total number of commissioned officers now in the United States Army?

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. The number of officers now in the Army is 12,859. The authorized strength of Army officers is 16,799.

Mr. CHALMERS. A statement has been made that the officers are undermanned now. As I understand it, the strength of the enlisted men four months ago was approximately 234,000. And, as I understand, the number now is approximately 150,000. I do not understand why the Army is not properly officered, if that is the fact. Will the gentleman explain it?

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. I can not explain that except as the figures explain themselves.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Will the gentleman permit me to make a suggestion and explanation?

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. I will.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I dare say the gentleman [Mr. CHALMERS] may not have heard it, but it was shown at the time of the adoption of the Army reorganization act that the number of commissioned officers in the Army bears no ratio whatever, and by design, to the number of enlisted men. The number of commissioned personnel has no relation to the number of enlisted men, and designedly so, because it is the policy of the military law to maintain and train a larger body of commissioned personnel than might be necessary for the number of enlisted men kept on hand, but ready for any emergency and for any emergency army that would have to be raised, and, meanwhile, away from the troops, training men in the colleges, the civilian population, the National Guard—a general policy of military education.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Will the gentleman from Texas permit me to make one observation to my friend from Vermont [Mr. GREENE]?

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. If the gentleman will make it as brief as he can.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I want to oppose to the statement of my friend from Vermont the statement made by Senator BORAH a few days ago, when he was advocating the reduction of the Army to 150,000 men. He said this:

The 14,000 commissioned officers were provided upon the theory of maintaining an Army of from 280,000 to 300,000 men.

He argued from that premise that, inasmuch as we now have to reduce the Army to 150,000 men, with a prospective reduction to 100,000—which a great many of us would welcome—there ought to be a reduction of the number of officers.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I do not know what the rules of the House would provide for this hypothetical case, but if Senator BORAH were not in another Chamber I should say he was mistaken. It was well known and understood that the commissioned personnel did not have any relation to the number of enlisted men.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Now, Mr. Chairman, there is another thing I want to call to the attention of the House. You will remember that at the signing of the armistice there were in the United States Army 187,652 officers. There are to-day in the United States, except those that have fallen by the wayside, from second lieutenants to the highest rank, the difference between 187,652 men and 12,859 now actually in the service.

And it does occur to me that at this time, with more trained officers now out of the service than we have men in the authorized strength of our whole Army—the Army of the United States to-day is 150,000 men and we have, in round numbers, 180,000 trained officers in private life who served our country in the World War and who can now be relied upon in any emergency—and it does occur to me that the country would applaud the action of the House in refusing to pass this extraordinary legislation in order to fill up the academy to overflowing and to grind out new Army officers at the rate of 400, 600, or 700 a year, or whatever may be the number that will graduate, while we have this great reserve of officers in civilian life.

Now, the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN]—and he is usually pretty accurate in his statements—says that there will not be any additional cost if this bill should pass. But this will happen, gentlemen: If you will read the committee hearings on this bill, you will find that if all the vacancies be filled as provided in this bill the school will be crowded in the dormitories and some of the rooms will have four men in them and the men will be sitting back to back in the mess hall.

Mr. KAHN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Yes.

Mr. KAHN. The testimony before the committee is that not all of the rooms have three cadets and that a great many of the rooms have only two, and by adding these additional it will give them three men in each room.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Will the gentleman from Texas yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. I yield.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. I want to say in reply to the gentleman from California that, as a matter of fact, during the past year there were four men in a large number of the rooms.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I want to reserve the remainder of my time in order to yield to some gentlemen who wish to discuss this matter. But I think we should discuss this measure in a cool and deliberate way and not get excited about it. The only question to be settled in our mind to-day is whether or not in the face of the conditions that are now confronting our people, we, as Members of Congress, are willing to make this departure from long-established custom in order to fill the military school up, or whether or not we will permit the vacancies to lapse, as they have lapsed heretofore, and let the school go on with 700 or 800 men instead of 1,300 or 1,400.

The question of transferring this additional power to have cadets appointed from Members of Congress to the country at large I do not think is a good policy. I believe we should adhere to our present policy—that each Member of Congress and the Senators, the Army and National Guard, and the President should appoint the cadets to the Military Academy as heretofore. I believe we should stick to that policy. If we have vacancies, let them remain there. According to the argument of the gentleman from California, it will not cost any more; but really, gentlemen, it is bound to cost more. I do not see how the Government can take care of 1,338 men as cheaply as it can take care of 1,100.

I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLLINS] five minutes. [Applause.]

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Chairman, this bill is by no means innocent. Those who drew it, or caused it to be drawn, knew only too well its meaning. Its purpose is evident to all those capable of seeing things as they are. It was conceived, of course, by officers of the Army and these gentlemen desire to accomplish two things by it—first, to increase the number of cadets at the Military Academy, which, in the end, means an increase in the officers of the Army; second, to have themselves a hand in the final appointment of a large number of cadets, for this bill creates a new class or category of cadets and adds this new class to those already authorized by law, and the final power to select this added class is lodged in the officers of the Army.

From March 1, 1843, down to May 4, 1916, the law provided that each congressional district, each Territory, and the District of Columbia were each entitled to one cadet at the Military Academy at West Point. By a bill passed June 6, 1900, the States at large were allowed two each. The United States at large on March 1, 1843, was allowed 10, and this number was increased to 20 on March 2, 1899, and again increased on June 6, 1900, to 30, and on June 28, 1902, to 40. On May 4, 1916, the law was changed so as to provide 2 cadets for each congressional district, 2 from each Territory, 4 from each State at large, 4 from the District of Columbia, and 80 from the United States at large. The act of May 4, 1916, however, did not at once double the number of cadets upon its passage, but provided rather that the increase must be divided into four annual increments, which should be as nearly equal as practicable and should be equally distributed among the sources from which the appointments were authorized.

The only change since May 4, 1916, was made in July, 1918, when the Vice President was authorized to name two cadets. Considering the act passed in 1916, it will be seen that the number of cadets authorized by it is about double the number previously authorized. In other words, about 675 new cadets were added and since this number was to be equally divided into four annual increments, it means that an increase of about 165 cadets was authorized for 1917, a still further increase of about 165 was added for 1918, a still further increase of about the same number for 1919, and a still further increase of the same number for 1920. In other words, there has been a gradual increase during the past four years and since this year will show no increase, this bill takes care of this and provides that the number shall be still further increased, but the proponents of the bill, not being willing to make known their wishes in plain words, knowing that the American people are opposed to militarism, by this indirect method endeavor to slip over this additional increase and have adopted the crafty provisions of this bill to carry out their purpose. Of course, if it is passed, it will be necessary for the Government to add a still larger number of buildings and increased facilities and at an added expense, and it will then only be a matter of a short time before another effort will be made to add another increase, and so on. This, in effect, is admitted in the 1920 report of The Adjutant General to the Secretary of War, for this significant statement is made by him: "The Military Academy with an authorized strength of only 1,334 can hope to supply but a small proportion of the officers required for the Regular Army as at present constituted. An increase in the authorized strength of the Corps of Cadets to at least 3,000 is recommended in order to aid, as far as possible, in supplying the Army with properly trained officers."

This statement by The Adjutant General shows conclusively the purposes actuating the Army officers. They know that every cadet graduated from the academy becomes an officer in the Army immediately, and an increase of the officers in the Army will necessarily mean an increase in the Army itself. This attitude, however, is characteristic of the saber-rattling and sword-buckling militarism the world over, for militarism in a republic is no different from the militarism of the Kaiser or the Czar. Is this Congress shortsighted enough to permit them to carry out their purposes? Personally I am opposed to a large military establishment in times of peace. The American people from the foundation of the Government down to date are opposed to one, and the American people are now very anxious for a decrease in the size of the Army and Navy. They hold militarism in abhorrence and demand disarmament as necessary if we are to save what is worth while in our civilization. They are tired of the stupendous economic loss which is entailed. The World War to end militarism was won. Mothers and fathers in all nations are organized to insure the fulfillment of this blessed victory. They are making known their wishes, too, and it will not be long before this Congress will be forced to further reduce the size of the Army to 50,000, so what is the sense now of grinding out an increased number of officers? We have at the present time an officer for every eight men, and I can see no necessity for making the proportion more ridiculous. The commissioned personnel of the Army is now 17,726, and this number should be materially decreased. Such a reduction would be a fine opportunity to begin to bring about actual economy in the running of the Government, for each one of these officers stands for an average expense of $10,000 per annum. We all know that there are more majors than there are first lieutenants, and majors come high. There is not now in the Army a single second lieutenant. Many of the class of 1919 and 1920 at West Point are captains now.

The bill also adds another class or category of candidates, and this new class is selected by the Army officers themselves. Nothing is said about which of them will select the new class of candidates, but I presume this will be left up to the General Staff. I am sure they wish this power and I am satisfied they will exercise it, as the bill gives them the widest of latitude.

Now, these are not the only defects that I find in the bill. It vests in the officers of the Army the right to appoint ultimately every cadet at West Point. For instance, I appoint my principal and my alternates, but these officers can determine whether or not they can go into the institution. If they want to they can go to the other districts in my State, and they can say that none of them are qualified; that none of the principals and alternates from the State can qualify; and then they can go to the other States, or to the President's appointments, or anywhere they please, and qualify such alternates as they want to put into this institution.

Now, gentlemen, are you ready and willing to surrender to the officers of the Army this power? I for one am not. [Applause.]

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. They have that power now. Every one of the cadets is examined up there now. They can do it the first time as well as the second.

Mr. COLLINS. There is no reason now why they should try to make a candidate fail, but there will be a reason if this law is enacted, and you may reckon that they will exercise it.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Does the gentleman indict the officers of the Army, then, as men of that deceptive and dishonorable character?

Mr. COLLINS. I will tell you what the hearings before this committee show. The hearings before this committee show that they appointed cadets at West Point during the war without any authority whatever of law, and if they will violate the law in one instance I do not know but what they will do it in another. [Applause.]

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. The gentleman goes into his interpretation of an obscure thing which he has not explained to us. I do not know what that particular element may be. I would be just as much justified in suspecting him, although I am free to say I do not. You could stand here by the same arraignment and indict the whole United States Army and say they are likely to swindle us out of our rights.

Mr. COLLINS. I do not know what they will do in the future. I know from the hearings what they did in the past. We have one officer now for every eight men in the Army, and this bill undertakes to make the difference still more ridiculous. We are groaning under a heavy expense now. We have an international conference called for November to reduce armaments, and I do not believe in saddling on the American people this additional expense. It costs about $10,000 a year to educate one of these cadets.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLLINS. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. The 82 appointments coming from the President and Vice President are taken from the Army now, and their three alternates each with the principals would make 320 available men, who would, I think, come through these appointments.

Mr. COLLINS. I think they have that power.

If this has been done in the past, it is reasonable to assume that with the passage of this bill, with its vague and ambiguous provisions, this power could easily be claimed and exercised. Of course, the maximum number of cadets authorized under the law is not in attendance at West Point, and it was never intended that they all should be there, for this would crowd the school to overflowing. On May 26 of this year the testimony shows that the academy was not at its maximum capacity. It lacked 121 of being at its maximum. If this bill becomes a law, these 121 new cadets will be appointed by the General Staff or some other branch of the Army. This, in my judgment, will mean that a large share of the officers of the Army will be the sons or the kin of officers now in the Army, and will be the beginning of a military dynasty such as the American people do not want and will not tolerate. The present, as I have already said, is no time to pass any law enlarging any branch of the Army. We have more than 4,000,000 trained soldiers in the United States now, nearly 200,000 of whom are officers; and if there ever was a time when this country could safely do without additional officers it is now. There is no need of them, and there is no use in adding this further unnecessary expense to the cost of government. Taxes are already breeding discontent at home, and our naval program is causing uneasiness abroad. Taxes are destroying the people's confidence in the Government, and our naval program and our military preparation is destroying the confidence that other nations have in us. If we keep up the pace we are going it means bankruptcy and ruin for all the nations of the earth. In the year 1920, $16,442,251.101 was expended by the United States, Great Britain, Japan, France, and Italy for naval and military purposes.

This amount is more than $2,000,000,000 larger than the total amount expended for all military purposes from 1900 to 1914, and a halt is imperative. We are staggering under a load of debt and taxation and now is the right time for actual retrenchment and economy, and the only place where this retrenchment can be brought about is in our Military Establishment, for more than 90 cents out of every dollar spent by the Government is consumed by militarism. Realizing this awful cost not only to us but to the other nations of the world and that the world faces bankruptcy and anarchy if something is not done to relieve the peoples of this earth from the load, the President has called a conference of the different nations of the world to meet in Washington on November 11, 1921, with a view of reducing armaments. If we in the United States can not afford to maintain the immense Naval and Military Establishments it is obvious that other nations are far less able than ourselves to meet the cost of military competition. In view of the present conditions of debts, credits, and international commerce it is an obvious fact that while we are paying our own armament bills we are also indirectly paying a great part of the military bills of our competitors. We must also remember that we are spending more, and a very great deal more than any of the other nations, and that a large part of it is being spent unnecessarily and foolishly.

It already is freely admitted that our 1916 naval program is a mistake, and that the battleships now under construction will be out of date before they are finished. But if they were not out of date, the airplane has rendered them helpless and made cemeteries out of them. The recent bombing experiments have shown this to the complete satisfaction of every unbiased observer. If this Congress, responsible for calling this international conference, by hook or crook increases the size of our Military Establishment, then we will be justly looked upon with suspicion by other nations. If we are really sincere in the desire to stop the waste of energy and money caused by the military system, we ought now to refuse to pass bills of this kind. All of the participants in the coming conference must give proof in word and deed of a genuine desire to disarm; otherwise the beneficent results most of us actually hope for will not follow. Certainly the sincerity of the Nation calling the conference should not be questioned. If the conference actually fails and this Nation has acted honorably and sincerely and has shown an actual desire to disarm, then we will not be looked upon with suspicion, and failure will not be laid at our door. The man who sits up every night, gun in hand, watching for burglars can not work and earn a living during the day, and so it is with nations. The nation that refuses to reduce its military expenditures is economically dead, and the nation that is economically dead is a military failure.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARRETT] is recognized.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. ANDREWS] five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, it has been stated, I think, quite clearly and correctly in this debate that the primary purpose of this bill is to maintain the number of cadets at West Point at the legal maximum. That maximum is now short. Note, if you please, page 2 of the committee report, third paragraph. It states that the vacancies to be filled by examinations last spring were 436. Out of those examinations 315 applicants qualified, leaving 121 vacancies. Now, this bill would authorize the military authorities—whether of the War Department or of the academy we need not debate—to appoint 121 qualified alternates from the districts throughout the country wherever they find them. In other words, the military authorities would select one of these qualified alternates to fill a vacancy in your district or mine or any other. Now, I am told by two members of the Committee on Appropriations—I take the figures to be correct, and perhaps the chairman of the committee [Mr. KAHN] has had time in the last few minutes to find out something about expenses so that he can make a correction if these figures are not correct—I am told that the amount allowed to each cadet is $1,138 per year. Now, 121 cadets at $1,138 per year mean an added expense for next year of $137,698, saying nothing about overhead expense, saying nothing about anything aside from the allowances made to the 121 men.

Mr. McKENZIE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDREWS. Yes.

Mr. McKENZIE. I just want to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that there are only 45 alternates in the United States who are eligible.

Mr. ANDREWS. Then these fellows are to go out and appoint them whether they are qualified or not, are they? That is about what they would do. Now, my friends, there is another principle involved in this. By the way, the chairman of the committee, Mr. KAHN, a while ago thought he answered my question. He did not. I asked what the increase of expenses would be from the appointment of 121 additional cadets. He answered by saying the appropriation has already been made and therefore there will be no increase of expense. My goodness, gentlemen, is that wisdom on the question of the expenditure of public money? I did not ask whether the appropriations would have to be increased. I asked whether the expense would be increased or not. If you put 121 men there in addition to the number already qualified and pay each man $1,138, you increase the expense by $137,698. Now, where is the necessity for that? I will give the chairman of the committee a portion of my time to answer if he will. Where is the public necessity to increase the expenses for the next fiscal year to that extent? He does not care to answer. He knows there is no necessity for it.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman—

Mr. ANDREWS. He knows that there is no justification for this added expense now. He knows that in the light of the public expenditures to-day he can not justify the terms of this bill. [Applause.]

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I shall answer the gentleman in my own time.

Mr. ANDREWS. Good. I shall be glad to hear from the gentleman, and then I will come again. I will then ask him what provision will be made in the course of a few years for the large increase of graduates from West Point. We have been told in this debate that the legal maximum is 1,338. If that maximum is maintained from year to year, in 10 years we would have 13,380 new officers and at the end of 20 years we would have 26,760 new officers, a number far exceeding the total number of officers in the Army to-day.

Would he then retire the officers that graduated last June and others we have at 40 or 50 years of age? Would he perpetuate that kind of a program, thereby levying tremendous expenses upon the people of the country to pay the salaries of retired Army officers alone? Will the chairman of the committee answer these questions to the burdened taxpayers of the country to-day? And when he answers these suggestions and questions in his own time I urge him to tell the people of the country why he would call upon them for this unnecessary expense. I am unalterably opposed to this bill and earnestly hope it will be defeated.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CABLE].

Mr. CABLE. Mr. Chairman, if there ever was a time in the history of our country when we should start to save, not to spend money, it is now. If it costs $137,000 to take care of these additional men, we either must raise that amount if they enter the Academy under this bill, or the War Department will use that sum from a present appropriation. I want to call your attention to the fact that we now in peace time are operating the United States Military and Naval Academies under war time legislation and laws. Both parties went out and promised the people that they would repeal such laws that had been placed on the statute books; that we would return to them an administration functioning upon laws that we had before we entered the war. Before the war, under the then existing law, there was allowed in the Naval Academy 1 cadet midshipman for every Member or Delegate in the House of Representatives; 1 for the District of Columbia; 1 for each Senator and 10 at large. As a war time provision this number was properly increased, so that now the law provides that there shall be allowed 5 midshipmen for each Senator, Representative, and Delegate in Congress, 1 for Porto Rico, 2 from the District of Columbia, 15 appointed each year at large, and 100 appointed annually from the enlisted men of the Navy. In addition, the President is allowed 15 appointments annually, the Secretary of the Navy 100 appointments annually.

Mr. McKENZIE. Will the gentleman tell us how many that makes at Annapolis?

Mr. CABLE. I can not yield. I have not the time. Before the war, under the peace-time regulation, the Corps of Cadets at the United States Military Academy at West Point consisted of 1 from each congressional district, 1 from each Territory, 1 from the District of Columbia, 2 from each State at large, and 30 from the United States. But, as a war-time measure to facilitate winning the war, the law in 1916 was amended so that the Corps of Cadets there now consists of 2 from each congressional district, 2 from each Territory, 4 from the District of Columbia, 2 from Porto Rico, 4 from each State at large, 82 from the United States at large; also the President may appoint not to exceed at any one time 180 from the Regular Army and the National Guard. In 1912 there were 768 men in the Naval Academy. In 1916 the number had increased to 1,231. For 1922 it has increased to 2,355. In 1916 Congress was compelled to raise $498,650 for this purpose. For 1922, because of the added number in the Naval Academy, the expenses of that institution will be $2,273,845.43. The same increase applies to West Point. In 1912 we had in the Military Academy 558 men. In 1916 the number had increased to 630, and the chairman of the committee has made the statement here to-day that there are now 1,338, or almost two and a half times as many in the Military Academy to-day as were needed before the war and in peace times. The expenses of the academy have increased from $1,069,813.37 in 1916 to $2,357,259.80. Instead of still further increasing the number in West Point by 121; instead of using at least $137,000 to pay, feed, and educate these additional men, let us be reminded that ours is the duty of saving not spending money. Not more than a month ago in this very room, by a vote of 332 to 4, the Borah resolution was adopted. The Navy bill was cut ninety million. The number of men in the Army was reduced to 150,000. Certainly, after this reduction there remains a sufficient number of Army officers. On November 11 in this city there will be assembled a convention called by the President for disarmament. Each Member of Congress has an interest in that meeting and its result. We now have an opportunity to show that we are sincere in our desire for disarmament and to save the people's money. [Applause.]

Mr. KAHN. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH].

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, I hope the House will not let itself get into that temper which emanates from the dog days and from the doldrums, so that it will refuse to listen to meritorious legislation. This bill does not interfere with a single right of a single Member of the House. Furthermore it does not increase by a single commissioned officer the number of officers in our Army. Now, let us be reasonable and try to understand this bill. I submit that if you understand the bill you will have no objection to it, because we know that trained officers are necessary in our Army. I do not believe that there is a Member of this House that wants to do away entirely with the trained officers. I wish I had more time to take up that phase and answer the argument advanced by the gentleman from California, which I do not agree with; that is, that it is necessary to have a vast number of professional officers in the lower ranks to win a war. That is not the case, but we have got to have them in the higher ranks. This bill has nothing whatsoever to do with the size of the officer personnel in the Regular Establishment.

At the present time the output of West Point only supplies 30 per cent of the commissioned personnel, when prior to the war the West Point graduates supplied 50 per cent of the total number of commissioned officers. Let me try to explain, if I can, just how this works. You Members of Congress have the right to nominate a principal and three alternates. If your principal and three alternates do not qualify, the highest alternate in your State is chosen to fill that place and you are given next year another nomination. If one of your candidates should graduate that same year, you are then credited with two nominations. Under no circumstances can a Member of this House lose a candidate to West Point, no matter what has been said here in the House to the contrary notwithstanding.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. No; I have not the time. That is the situation, and we desire to increase the number at West Point to the maximum to supply trained officers at a minimum expense. By adding 140 more cadets to West Point you give these men training at the very minimum of expense, because in running the Military Academy at the present time with only 80 per cent of its quota the Government expends practically the same amount of money as if it was operating at the maximum capacity. Those are the salient points.

Since I have been in this House I have never seen any legislation that had so much mystery and so much suspicion cast upon it when, as a matter of fact, it is practical legislation advocated by a brilliant officer, Gen. Douglas MacArthur, who, as superintendent at West Point, has accomplished splendid results in liberalizing and humanizing the curriculum for the good of the service.

The enactment of this bill into law can in no way advance the interest of militarism. It is simply designed to furnish additional trained officers for the Army instead of taking them from civilian life. [Applause.]

The cry of economy has been raised against this bill, as it was against Senate amendment No. 56 of the Sweet bill, which increased the compensation from $20 to $50 for attendants or nurses for the blinded, legless, armless, and totally disabled former service men. There are two kinds of economy—the real and the false. Economy is like religion and has many crimes committed in its name. The most flagrant example of this particular brand of false economy was that of the adoption of the conference report on the Sweet bill, which suppressed the Senate amendment to which I have referred. Therefore, in order to illustrate exactly what I mean by false economy I avail myself of the privilege to revise and extend my remarks by including in the Record an article which appeared in the Washington Herald August 2, 1921, under my signature, so that he who runs may read and may decide for himself not only the merit and justice of this amendment but bear witness how insinuating and dangerous the plea of false economy may become.

The conference committee will report the Sweet bill, coordinating the former service men's agencies, back to the House Tuesday morning for final passage. It is obvious that the Senate is far more liberal in its attitude toward the disabled former service men than the Members of the House on the conference committee, because some of the most meritorious amendments passed by the Senate were stricken out by the conference committee.

I refer in particular to the amendment reported favorably by the Finance Committee of the Senate and passed by the Senate unanimously, increasing the compensation from $20 to $50 for attendants or nurses for the blinded, legless, and armless, and totally disabled former service men.

RAISE IS NECESSARY.

It is self-evident that no attendant or nurse can be hired at $20 and that the increase is not only reasonable, but necessary, if these totally incapacitated men are to be properly taken care of. I venture to state that practically every Member of the House promised his constituents that he would do everything in his power to help the disabled service men, and it was particularly so of those candidates who did not favor adjusted compensation.

Before election nothing was too good for our disabled heroes, but after the vote had been counted these promises were quickly forgotten by certain Members of the House. It is beyond my comprehension how any Member of the House can deny this increased compensation to the blinded, legless, armless, and totally helpless men, to be given only in the discretion of the Director of War Risk Insurance.

The blinded men are entitled to live at home and to be furnished an attendant to care for them and act as their eyes which they lost in the service of the country. The same logic applies to the attendant for the man without legs or without arms.

SHOULD LIVE AT HOME.

All these men are entitled to live at home and enjoy not only the necessities of life but all the comforts that a grateful country can afford. If a blinded man wants to go to a musicale he should have an attendant to take him and if a legless man cares to go to a ball game, he, too, should have a paid attendant.

The American public is not in sympathy with any attempt to economize with the lifeblood of the very men who deserve most from their country, regardless of the penuriousness of certain Representatives.

It is the paramount duty of every Member of Congress to fulfill to the last degree the Nation's obligations to the blinded and totally incapacitated. It is a reflection on the membership of the House that its conference committee should defeat the Senate amendments to increase from $20 to $50 the pay for an attendant for these men for whom the war will never end.

MUST ENTER POLITICS.

The conference committee which threw out this amendment does not contain a single former service man and demonstrates the fact that if the disabled service men are to get fair play and justice they and their comrades will have to nominate candidates in all congressional districts where the incumbents have been markedly unfriendly. The sooner this policy is adopted the better for all former service men.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has 15 minutes.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, there is much demand on the floor of the House for additional time, and I ask unanimous consent that my time be extended an additional hour, 30 minutes of which I will yield to the gentleman from Texas.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent that his time be extended an additional hour. Is there objection?

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. I object.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BEGG].

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I have listened to the gentleman who just preceded me on this proposition with a great deal of interest, as I have listened to a number of other speeches in favor of the increase in the number of cadets, and there have been some startling statements made. I understood—and if I misquote the gentleman from California I am perfectly willing to stand for the correction—I understood him to say that if this bill is passed it will not cost the Government of the United States any more money. I want the gentleman, or somebody on that side, not in my time but in their time, to tell me where the money for 700 or 800 more pupils is to come from if it is not to come from the taxpayers. I want you to tell the American people where they are going to get the food; I want you to tell the American people where they are going to get the textbooks and teachers, and after you have it all out of the pockets of the taxpayers tell the people what in the name of God you are going to do with the boys. [Applause.]

I can tell you what you are going to do. You will put them into the standing Army so you can retire young officers, permitting them to draw three-quarters pay. I tell you, gentlemen, I am getting tired of Army and Navy officers drawing down more salary than my father makes or ever did make, and he is helping to pay these officers to lie around. A good many of them have never smelled gunpowder on a battle field. I am getting tired of voting more money for the Army and the Navy, and I am tired of having our leaders come in and ask me to vote for it every day when the Secretary of the Treasury comes down before the Ways and Means Committee and says put a sales tax on every mouthful that the common people eat, put a tax on every automobile, raise the postage rates so that every boy and girl in the United States who sends a letter has got to pay an extra cent for it; raise the tax on your checks; raise the taxes so that we can spend it on the Army and Navy, so that we can have some more men retired at the age of 40 and draw down more money than I ever made in my life in one year.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. The gentleman got all that he was worth, did he not?

Mr. BEGG. I got all I was worth but these men are getting more than they are worth. I want to say to the gentleman from Vermont that the American people are tired of this kind of bills, adding to the appropriations every year, and it is high time to cut down. [Applause.] I want to ask the gentleman from California and the whole Military Committee what your 36 major generals are doing? There are only three major general jobs all told—the Coast Guard, the Marine Corps, and the General Staff—and what are the rest of them doing? You have 117 colonels of Cavalry and there are only 14 Cavalry regiments for them to command. That shows what a top-heavy organization you have in the Army. Nearly nine colonels to a regiment when there should be one.

They are drawing down big salaries, doing nothing but playing polo, and incidentally that is one argument that has not been brought out in this bill. If we do not keep this academy up it is entirely possible that our polo team will not be full in 5 or 10 years, and I am strongly in favor of it for that reason. Nobody else has offered that argument.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEGG. I yield for a moment.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. The gentleman has included the Coast Guard and the Marine Corps in his assignment to the Army. If the rest of his facts are founded on that kind of information it is no wonder that he argues against the bill.

Mr. BEGG. My facts are founded on the hearings held before the gentleman's committee.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. The Coast Guard and the Marine Corps do not belong to the Army, son.

Mr. BEGG. I am not the gentleman's son, though I am sure that I am a son; but I would say to the gentleman that we have had too much wise guidance from military men who know everything about it, and now we need a little bit of advice from the people who are going to pay the bills. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Chairman, I ask for recognition in my own right.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Vermont is recognized.

Mr. OLIVER. Does he not have to have time yielded to him?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. There has been no allotment of time.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Has not the gentleman from Texas the floor?

The CHAIRMAN. As the Chair understood, the gentleman from Texas and the gentleman from California reserved the remainder of their time. The gentleman from Vermont is recognized as a member of the committee.

Mr. BLANTON. I presume if the Chair recognizes the gentleman from Vermont he will recognize some one who is opposed to the bill who asked for recognition, as, for instance, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BLAND].

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. I understood that I have been recognized for one hour. Of that time I have yielded five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BEGG]. I have not yielded the floor. I make the inquiry now, if the gentleman from Vermont, in the face of the fact that I still have the floor, has the right to recognition for one hour in his own right?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that if the gentleman from Texas demands the use of his time he is entitled to the hour. Is the gentleman now demanding his time?

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. I am.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the gentleman will be recognized in lieu of the gentleman from Vermont.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. That is, he will be recognized before I am?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas demands the right to continue the use of his hour.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Oh, very well. I did not expect to consume the hour, but I expected to divide it among others present, as the other gentlemen are doing.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas is recognized.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PARRISH].

Mr. PARRISH. Mr. Chairman, I am not so much opposed to the details of this bill as I am opposed to the tendency that is manifest from its provisions. It is leading in the direction of a larger number of officers and consequently in the direction of a larger Army. When we realize the great burdens under which the people of the country are laboring because of excessive taxation, and when we take into consideration the fact that the Secretary of the Treasury has told the Ways and Means Committee that we must raise $4,550,000,000 to meet the current expenses of the Government next year, I think it is time for Congress to stop every single item of expense that it is possible for us to eliminate. Unless we do that, we are going to bring down upon ourselves the just wrath of the indignant taxpayers. This bill is inopportune at this time, because the President of the United States has recently called a conference of the leading nations of the world to meet in Washington for the purpose of discussing the question of universal disarmament. Why not withhold action upon this bill until we can see what will be done by that meeting of the world powers? Why not defer action on the bill until we can see what recommendations they make about world disarmament. Now is the time to withhold all further great expenditures of public funds. I am in accord with the Senator who has introduced a bill at the other end of the Capitol, that we could well reduce the Army to 100,000 men at this time and save the Government $80,000,000 of expense. If we reduce the officers to a corresponding number, we can save additional expense. Men who are in the position to know tell us that 92.2 per cent of all the money that is paid by the taxpayers goes to keep up the expense of the Army and the Navy, past, present, and future. That leaves only 7.8 per cent to be devoted to the civil expenditures of the Government. When we stop seriously to consider this appalling situation, as representatives of the people we should ponder long before we add another dime of expense to that side of the budget.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PARRISH. I can not at this time; I am very sorry. Let us reduce public expenses now, we must stop somewhere. Unless we do we will find ourselves running continually in that ever vicious circle that has no end. I believe we are not authorized in bringing up for consideration a single bill that adds additional expense unless it is absolutely necessary. Unless we follow that policy, more money will have to be appropriated and we will find ourselves face to face with the difficulty of raising the necessary revenue. Who is there among us now who can tell how we can meet the $4,550,000,000 necessary for the next fiscal year and at the same time lower the taxes? Where is the man who can suggest a way? You can not do it because you do not know how. I hope and pray that our leaders may be able to devise some means of lowering taxes, because business is now stagnant and is awaiting relief from excessive tax burdens.

But you can not give relief as long as you must add to the enormous sum of money to be raised, and so this bill is only a step toward increasing the public expenditures. And, Mr. Chairman, I believe this bill ought to be defeated—that we ought to abide our time until the conference meets and then, when the war clouds have blown away, see what steps we ought to take for the common good of all. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I renew the request I made a moment ago, that general debate be allowed to continue for one hour longer, one-half of that time to be controlled by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARRETT] and one-half to be controlled by myself.

The CHAIRMAN. And that general debate close at that time?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California makes the unanimous-consent request that general debate close at the end of one hour after the expiration of the hour of the gentleman from California and the gentleman from Texas, one-half of that time to be controlled by each. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, that takes in the understanding I had with the gentleman in regard to Mr. BLAND of Indiana and myself?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, has there been any agreement as to the allotment of this time?

Mr. KAHN. The request for time has been very great.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Has the gentleman's half hour been allotted—

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is heard.

Mr. KAHN. Will the gentleman from Texas use some of his time?

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Mr. Chairman—

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Delaware [Mr. LAYTON].

Mr. LAYTON. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I regret very much that I can not follow the committee in this matter. It seems to me that leaving out of consideration everything connected with the bill itself except one fact, that it ought to be defeated by the House. We are now living in an hour when the whole world is hoping and praying for disarmament, and yet we are asked to assume in this body the preposterous position of turning West Point into a state of higher efficiency than we have ever had in the history of the country. What effect do you believe, gentlemen of the House, this will have upon the people of England, of France, or Japan when we are professing and preaching peace, preaching disarmament, throwing out to the world an invitation to come to this country and consult about means of disarmament, and then blazoning it abroad throughout the whole world that we are raising up our Military Establishment at West Point to turn out more officers, to raise it to the maximum capacity, as the gentleman from New York said, for the first time in the history of our country? Now, my friends, I want to say that to my mind it is grossly inconsistent. It does not agree with our profession. It is bad international politics. If there were any bill to be introduced at this time in this House bearing upon this subject, the gentleman should have introduced a bill for the purpose temporarily of suspending the operations of West Point and of Annapolis, because we can get along without more officers either in the Army or the Navy. It is an hour when we ought to save every dollar we possibly can, in view of the fact that there is no demand for this measure on account of any threat of war—

Mr. DENISON. Will the gentleman yield? The papers just carried a report yesterday or the day before that England had made an appropriation for three more battleships—

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL].

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Mr. Chairman, how does the time stand?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas has 12 minutes and the gentleman from California 15.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, an army consists of three things: First, trained officers; next, supplies; and, third, enlisted personnel; and if I gave you my judgment as to their importance the first would be 50 per cent, the second 45 per cent, and the last 5 per cent. The trouble with this country is that we pay all of our attention to the last, and the last cost us $100 where the first only costs you $1. If you had in your Reserve Officers' Corps 100,000 officers, you would not have one man too many. Then you can reduce your Regular Army to the very minimum. Now, this bill will not cure the trouble, but it is a small step in the right direction, and it does not cost you anything to enact this bill. The money is already appropriated for 1,338 cadets at West Point, and you have only about 900 up there.

Mr. OLIVER. If the gentleman will yield, what is the source of supply for your Army Reserve Corps, the officers which the gentleman thinks are so important?

Mr. HULL. I would like to talk to the gentleman for hours on this subject, but I can not go into that in five minutes, when I am trying to explain a bill that the House does not seem to understand. This has nothing to do with reserve officers.

Mr. OLIVER. The trouble about that is the gentleman states we could dispense with all, if we had 100,000 reserve officers. Now, where are those 100,000 reserve officers to come from? They would not come from the academy; retired officers may come from the academy, but not reserve officers.

Mr. HULL. I admit that. Your reserve officers come from either the National Guard schools or those trained by war. You could have in this country 100,000 to-day. You have only 60,000 in the Reserve Corps, and what I want to do is to appeal to the House to pass this bill. It will not cost this Government anything; it simply stabilizes the attendance at West Point, and it does not take away from a Member any right which he has.

You will have the same right that you have to-day to keep your men at West Point, and whenever you can send them there you will send them there. You should understand that. If you defeat this bill, you simply may take away the right of a boy in your district at the present time to go to West Point. I think the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARRETT] admits that fact. If you have, as I say, the 100,000 men in the Reserve Corps of regular Reserve Corps officers, you will not have to have as large an Army as you would have otherwise, and you would save hundreds of thousands of dollars by passing a bill that will give you well-trained officers. That is all this bill does. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman yields back one minute.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, I am opposed to the bill now before the House, because I believe that if this bill should be enacted into a law it will show bad faith on the part of the American Congress and the President of the United States who is now negotiating with four important nations of the world to bring about disarmament. I understand that Italy, England, France, and Japan have accepted the invitation of the President of the United States to come to Washington on November 11 and negotiate with this Government concerning disarmament.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I think we ought to have a quorum here. The gentleman from Mississippi is making an interesting speech.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas makes the point of order that a quorum is not present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] A quorum is present.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Certainly; with pleasure.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Did I understand the gentleman correctly when I understood him to say that it is a breach of faith on the part of this country now to fill up the quota at West Point in view of the proposed disarmament conference?

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. I believe since we have passed the bill to reduce the Army from 232,000 to 150,000 and have passed the Borah resolution which asks the President to call the disarmament conference, that for us to enact a law here to-day which increases our armament is a breach of good faith.

I feel confident this bill is going to be defeated and in the time allotted me I want to discuss another matter of vital importance to my people and the people of the United States. I believe we all agree that the most important question before the American people to-day is transportation facilities furnished at reasonable rates.

Every mail that comes to my office brings letters from farmers, merchants, and manufacturers urging that something be done to relieve the transportation conditions, and, having this in mind, I have introduced House bill $103, an act to repeal section 15A of the interstate commerce act as amended by section 422 of the transportation act of 1920, which, if enacted into a law, will put the rates at what they were before the increase by the Interstate Commerce Commission. It will then leave to the Interstate Commerce Commission the power to determine what is a reasonable rate.

Under the law as it is written to-day reasonableness or unreasonableness do not enter into consideration of rate making, but the question is to make the rates sufficient to enable the railroad companies to earn a dividend on their investment, regardless of waste, extravagance, or mismanagement on the part of the companies.

RAILROADS GIVEN AID.

When the railroads were returned to their owners the Government of the United States loaned them $300,000,000 and guaranteed to them for six months a dividend of 6 per cent on their investment. The railroads have been paid by the Government on this guaranty $631,000,000, and more than half this amount was paid without proper accounting by the railroad companies to the Interstate Commerce Commission. It was done by virtue of the so-called Winslow Act, which enabled the comptroller to pay the railroads without the necessary accounting.

It was argued then by the proponents of the bill that if the money was paid to the railroad companies it would enable them to purchase supplies, rebuild cars, repair tracks, and so forth, and would stimulate business in the country. It was hoped and expected by the proponents of the bill that the money paid them would so stimulate business and increase the revenues of the railroads that the companies would voluntarily reduce the rates, but not so. The railroad companies are to-day operating under the highest freight rates ever heard of in the history of this country.

HIGH RATES HINDER BUSINESS.

The exorbitant freight rates have brought about a stagnation of business in the country. There are to-day 600,000 idle freight cars. The country is short several million homes. In the cities the people are living in congested tenements. Many of them are anxious to build homes, but they can not afford to purchase the lumber on account of the unreasonable freight rates. The lumbermen suffer on account of the unreasonable freight rates because they can not sell their lumber.

Millions of bushels of wheat and corn can not be shipped because the prices of these products will hardly bring the cost of transportation. Under the old freight rate, pig iron could be shipped from Birmingham to the Pacific coast at $12.32 per ton; to-day it costs $22.40 per ton. Iron is being shipped from Belgium to the Pacific coast because it is cheaper than transporting it across continental United States. Coke is being shipped from Germany to the Pacific coast at a cheaper rate than it can be shipped across the United States. The old freight rate on iron from Birmingham to St. Louis was $2.75 per ton; to-day it is $5.25. The South has just about gone out of the pig-iron business because the freight rates are prohibitive.

The unreasonable and outrageous freight rates were made when corn was selling at $2 a bushel, when cotton was worth 30 cents to 40 cents a pound, and when iron was bringing two and a half times what it is worth to-day. Since the establishment of these freight rates wages have been reduced, farm products have been reduced in price, and practically everything else has been reduced except freight rates, and they are the same. We can not expect the railroads to voluntarily reduce the rates. They are not going to do it.

The freight rates in the Mississippi Valley are the most unreasonable in the history of railroading. Unless something is done to correct this evil there will continue a stagnation in business.

TIME TO CALL A HALT.

The railroad companies complain that they are unable to pay expenses. This was always their cry. That will always be their cry so long as we listen to these false claims of the railroad companies and allow them to raid the Treasury of the United States.

It is time to call a halt. It is time for the representatives of the people in this country to put a stop to such robbery. Henry Ford bought the Toledo, Detroit & Ironton Railroad, and has already asked for permission to reduce rates 20 per cent on his railroad. He says:

I am not trying to burglarize my railroad. I am making it serve the public.

If the other railroads would emulate the example of Henry Ford, business would be stimulated, and it would do much toward establishing a normal condition of affairs.

But, Mr. Chairman, the railroads have no idea of reducing freight rates until they are compelled to do so. They have procured a bill to be introduced in this Congress which will take away from the Treasury of the United States another half billion dollars. From a statement issued by the President it seems to have the approval of the administration.

When will these raids upon the Treasury of the United States cease? Just at this time the people are coming to Washington by the hundreds protesting against unreasonable taxes. Thousands of letters are coming each day urging the reduction of taxes, and yet instead of reducing the taxes they are to be increased.

BUSINESS MEN AFRAID.

Business men are afraid to invest their money. They do not know what to depend upon. They do not know what their taxes will be. Each day shows an increase in the number of idle men in this country. The reason for it is the lack of markets and the high freight charges. If these rates are reduced it will encourage commerce between the States and open the avenues for business of all kinds.

Of course, I realize that my party is in the minority and we can not pass this bill without Republican help, but if some of you Republicans who have the welfare of the people at heart will assist the Democrats we will pass the bill, and without unnecessary delay.

Mr. Chairman, it has been thoroughly demonstrated throughout this Congress that the burden is not going to be lifted from the shoulders of the masses. Every effort on the part of this Congress tends toward increasing the burdens of the masses and relieving the rich of their just share of the taxes. The longer this Congress is in session the worse it will be for the people. Let us revise the tax laws equitably, reduce the freight rates, adjourn this Congress, and go home and stay there for a while. If we do this it will redound to the welfare of the people of the country.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BLAND].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana is recognized.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I have not heard any argument to justify support of this bill. On the contrary, its advocates, or some of those who have been advocating the passage of the bill, are supporting it for the reason that it increases the number of Army officers. That is one reason why

I would be against it. You can not eat the apple and keep it. You are either going to fill vacancies to the places that Congressmen now have the right to fill or you are going to leave those vacancies unfilled and make other appointments which will increase the number of cadets. Under this bill you are going to have more men as cadets at the academy, and in that case it will cost more money; it is admitted that it will cost more money; and this is no time to spend more money. [Applause.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, if it is in order, I would like to move that the committee rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would ask the gentleman from Indiana if the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARRETT] yielded the floor to him for the purpose of making that motion? Unless the gentleman secured the floor for that purpose, he has not that right.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. I have the floor now, and I think I have the right to make the motion. If I have not, who has the right?

The CHAIRMAN. Did the gentleman from Texas yield the floor for that purpose?

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. I yielded my time to him.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. The gentleman from Texas has not the right to control my purpose in making a motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas has the hour, and can control it.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. I have no objection.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. The gentleman from Texas says he has no objection to my making the motion, and the time has been yielded to me.

Mr. BLANTON. Regular order, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. KAHN. Under the rules of the House since I have been a Member of the House, when we are proceeding in general debate and a Member is recognized for a certain number of minutes, it is for the purpose of indulging in general debate.

The CHAIRMAN. That is true.

Mr. KAHN. And ever since I have been a Member of this House the chairman of the committee having the bill in charge has been recognized to make the motion to rise.

The CHAIRMAN. That is the rule. The Chair thinks there is no question about the rule, and unless the gentleman is recognized for the specific purpose of making this motion, it would not be in order at this time.

Mr. KAHN. I understood the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARRETT] has recognized the gentleman from Indiana for two minutes to address the House.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. The gentleman is mistaken in that. The gentleman from Texas said he yielded to me two minutes, and later he said he had no objection to my making the motion that the committee rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. I trust the Chair has not taken this out of my time. I understood that I had the floor.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I make the point of order that the motion to rise is a privileged motion.

The CHAIRMAN. It is a privileged motion.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. And the gentleman has the right to make it at the conclusion of his time.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. The gentleman did not have the floor for that purpose.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. He had the right to take the floor for that purpose.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARRETT] yielded two minutes of his time, but he did not yield for that purpose.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I should prefer that the gentleman from California should make the motion.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. I will be glad to yield to the gentleman from California if he will move that the committee rise.

Mr. KAHN. I have only one more speech of five minutes, and then I intended to make the motion to rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired. The gentleman from California is recognized.

Mr. KAHN. That is the usual custom of this House. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SANDERS].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SANDERS] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I think this measure ought to be passed. I realize that the President has called a conference with reference to the limitation of armament. I have always contended that there is quite a difference, however, between national disarmament and international disarmament. I have always favored international disarmament or limitation of armament, but have always been opposed to national disarmament. In other words, I believe in peace, but I believe that so long as there is no agreement amongst the nations for a limitation of armament the best means by which peace can be secured for our people is to see to it that they are able to defend this country of ours. [Applause.] I do not think there is anything in this call issued by the President that obviates the necessity for this Nation training the requisite number of officers for a skeleton army from which a combat army could be formed in time of war. If an international agreement is reached, we can then, of course, carry out such agreement.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Then the gentleman is for a big Navy and a big Army and to be prepared to defend. Is that the gentleman's position?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. That is the gentleman's position. I am in favor of a Navy that is sufficiently big to defend this country. I am not in favor of a big combat Army, because we have never followed that practice, but I am in favor of a sufficiently large Army to form a skeleton and to furnish the necessary officers to assemble a combat Army when it is necessary to call this country to arms to defend it. That is exactly what I stand for. [Applause.]

Of course, when you say you are for a "big" Army or a "big" Navy you are using a relative term. I am for a sufficiently big Navy to defend America. I am for a sufficiently big Army to be ready to form a necessary combat army to defend this country; and standing upon that ground I am highly in favor of a conference which will lead to an understanding amongst all the nations of the world to limit armament, so that the taxpayers of this country and of other countries may be relieved of the burden of armament. [Applause.]

Now, getting down to this specific bill, it is simply a bill to provide that there shall be a way to fill the vacancies at West Point that we contemplated when the act was passed in 1916. For some reason or other they have not been filled. I do not know whether it is because the boys of the country have lost interest, but for some reason or other the plan that we formulated has not filled the academy at West Point, and there are many vacancies. This will arrange to fill the vacancies, and, despite a misunderstanding to the contrary, this will not deprive any Member of Congress or any Member of the United States Senate of the right to fill vacancies as they have always been filled heretofore.

Mr. LAYTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. I yield to the gentleman from Delaware.

Mr. LAYTON. The bill, however, increases the burden upon the taxpayers by about $140,000.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. The gentleman is entirely in error about that. Of course, it will cause an added expense, but the overhead and a great deal of the other expense will be the same if the quota is not filled as it will be if the quota is filled. However, there will be some additional expense.

Mr. LAYTON. How much?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. It will be impossible to say accurately how much, because we do not know just how many cadets there will be, but the expense will be increased some. The number of cadets will be increased and the amount of expense will be increased to correspond to the number of the increase in the cadets. But the increase will be so slight and the advantage in training the necessary officers so great that in the end it will mean economy. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That whenever, following any regular entrance examination, the number of candidates authorized under existing law to report for admission to the United States Military Academy from any State is not sufficient to fill the quota of cadets authorized from that State, a sufficient number of qualified alternates therefrom, not otherwise authorized to report for admission as such, selected in their order of merit established at such examination, to fill said quota shall be admitted and charged to that State as additional cadets: Provided, That the admission of alternates as authorized herein shall not interfere with or affect in any manner whatsoever any appointment otherwise authorized by law, and that if by the operation of this or any other provision of law the Corps of Cadets shall exceed its maximum authorized strength the admission of alternates as herein prescribed shall cease until such time as said corps may be reduced below its authorized strength.

During the reading of the bill the following occurred:

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. Is the Clerk reading the bill for the purpose of amendment?

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, I raise the point of order that the gentleman has no right to interrupt the reading of the section by a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is correct. The Clerk will continue the reading.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. I desire to make a preferential motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will complete the reading of the section.

The Clerk completed the reading of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the committee amendment.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I have a preferential motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the committee amendment and then the gentleman will be recognized.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, is not a motion to strike out the enacting clause a preferential motion?

The CHAIRMAN. The committee amendment will be read and then the gentleman will be recognized. The committee amendment will not be acted upon but will simply be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

"That whenever following any regular entrance examination the number of candidates authorized under existing law to report for admission to the United States Military Academy from any State is not sufficient to fill the quota of cadets authorized from that State, a sufficient number of qualified alternates therefrom not otherwise authorized to report for admission as such, selected in their order of merit established at such examination to fill said quota, shall be admitted and charged to that State as additional cadets. If such admissions do not bring the Corps of Cadets to its maximum authorized strength, a sufficient number of the remaining qualified alternates not otherwise authorized to report for admission as such, selected from the whole list in their order of merit established at such examination, sufficient to bring said corps to its maximum authorized strength, shall be admitted and charged to the United States at large as additional cadets: Provided, That the admission of alternates as authorized herein shall not interfere with or affect in any manner whatsoever any appointment otherwise authorized by law, and that if by the operation of this or any other provision of law the Corps of Cadets shall exceed its maximum authorized strength, the admission of alternates as herein prescribed shall cease until such time as said corps may be reduced below its authorized strength."

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the enacting clause.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana moves to strike out the enacting clause.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. KAHN) there were—ayes 67, noes 36.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed as tellers Mr. KAHN and Mr. BLAND of Indiana.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were 74 ayes and 37 noes.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill to the House with the recommendation that the enacting clause be stricken out.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. DOWELL, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (S. 1358) to provide for maintaining the Corps of Cadets at the United States Military Academy at its maximum authorized strength, and for other purposes, and had directed him to report the same back with the recommendation that the enacting clause be stricken out.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Will the House agree to the recommendation of the committee in striking out the enacting clause?

Mr. KAHN. On that, Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays, and I make the point that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California makes the point that no quorum is present, and the Chair will count.

Mr. BLANTON. I raise the point that that will not get the gentleman a roll call.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California demands a division.

The House divided; and there were 86 yeas and 41 noes.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, it is shown that there is no quorum here, and I object to the vote and make the point that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently there is no quorum present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 139, nays 92, answered "present" 1, not voting 198, as follows:

A resolution.

Whereas in recent decisions of the Interstate Commerce Commission interpretations have been given the transportation act of 1920 such as gives to the Interstate Commerce Commission complete authority over the entire subject of transportation, and including the right to prescribe intrastate rates; and

Whereas it means, in effect, the abrogation of all authority of State regulation to make and prescribe rates for intrastate movement of freight; and

Whereas the freight rates are in some instances so burdensome and excessive at this time as to prohibit the movement of various commodities, and the passenger rates are so excessive as to deter travel, to the end that the railroads are receiving less in passenger revenues than they would receive if a lesser rate were in effect: Therefore be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of Georgia (the Senate of Georgia concurring), That we call upon the Congress of the United States to so amend the transportation act of 1920, and in such plain language that the authority of the States over intrastate traffic in their respective States will be fixed and certain in language plainly declaring the right of States to prescribe intrastate rates; be it further Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to each United States Senator and Congressman from the State of Georgia.

ADDRESS.

"GOVERNOR COX AND FELLOW AMERICANS: Though they seem comparatively measureless to us, three centuries are little more than a moment in the chronicle of human history. Christianity is now rounding out its twentieth century, and there is no comprehensible measure to the human ferment which went before. Our actual national life is less than half the period of marvelous new world development, the tercentenary of which beginning we celebrate, but in that little while the achievement is the most significant of all the centuries. It is not too much to say that the three centuries which have passed since men of our race came here to found a new state have been the most momentous and the most pregnant in all the progress of humankind.

"They were more swiftly moving and seemingly more vital than the much longer periods of Egyptian, Greek, or Roman civilizations with which we are familiar, and it is not impossible that the commanding potency of progress and material possessions may turn the significant beginning at Plymouth into surpassing influence in the making of human history.

"To this and the Virginia shore were transplanted the seeds of representative democracy, the new ideals of nationality through association and representation, and there has developed seemingly the most dependable form of popular government ever witnessed in the world. Perhaps this larger achievement was not intended by the heroes of colonization. They were seeking freedom and found nationality essential to its preservation. Destiny pointed the way and the hand of divinity traced the course of God-intended human advancement. Here came the sturdy English middle class of yeomanry, burghers, and squires, who clung to their ideals of representative government. At home they might have been crushed under the burdens which reaction was seeking to impose. Here they could have free play and begin anew and fashion the temple of freedom in a new land, and they began what we call republican institutions. These institutions are the agencies of highest freedom, which embody at once the centralized authority strong enough to hold together a great community and those essentials of democracy which insure dominance to the intelligent will of a free people.

"Whether we reflect upon the restraints upon freedom which the fathers imposed or measure the broader liberty under the law of to-day, here began the reign of dependable public opinion, which unfailingly is the law of highest civilization. One may not say whether the Puritans at home would have been able to work out such a system if there had been no American colonies and the colonial influences to react upon the mother country. Doubtless the English revolution, which came soon after the settlement at Plymouth, would have come even had there been no settlement here, no Massachusetts Bay colony, no Virginia plantation. But it is easy to believe that in the long struggle after the restoration the fruits of the revolution, the strengthened parliamentary institutions, and the restrictions on royal prerogative were helped by the influences of colonial democracy.

"It is a difficult task to single out and measure the factors in political and social progress. The germ of progress is doubtless universal, but requires favorable conditions for its development. Conditions were favorable in the New World and the Plymouth colony was destined to begin the surpassing story of three centuries of ardent, eager pursuit of human justice.

"No one will ever dispute the large part New England played in the rearing of new standards of freedom. The early struggles here were contemporaneous with the making of modern British constitutionalism, and the New World beacon was an incentive and an inspiration across the sea, and to-day Old World and New join in rejoicing at the ends achieved. Here, with crude narrowness and unconscious selfishness hindering but with supreme intent impelling, there developed the accepted plan of emancipating humanity and the grant to man to shape his own destiny. The world chorus to-day, rejoicing in maintained democracy, attuned its chord to the notes first sounded here.

"This development of liberty, this great conception of freedom, took ever firmer hold, until it was held and voiced unceasingly by those who bore aloft its banners here. And there was significant reflex in the motherland. No Englishman will do his country full justice or will quite understand its human story who does not seek out and study the effects of this sympathy and interaction between the seasoned, age-old liberalism of the English countryside and the new, eager, outreaching aspiration of those who were planting the seed here in a fresh soil and guarding its early development. No American can fully appraise his country's contribution to mankind's advance if he overlooks these things which were truly fundamental in creating two towers of national strength for freedom where there might have been but one. At a time when the restored house of Stuart was bent on breaking up the New England confederacy, esteeming it a league for ultimate independence, the enemies of Charles II were the firm friends of New England. The confederacy was at length destroyed, but it had served to teach the colonists unity and cooperation. Thus there was laid the foundation in public opinion and working experience of the confederation which afterwards brought together the Thirteen Colonies in the revolutionary struggle and later the Federal Union.

"At a time when the Commons at Westminster seemed impotent against the demand of the returned Stuarts, the King sent his demand that the Massachusetts charter be surrendered. The beginning of American revolution may fairly be traced the larger part of a century from the date we commonly fixed for it to the great town meeting in the South Church, to which was submitted the question whether the colony would assent to the charter reorganization that the King demanded. Those who voted to accept the royal terms were called on to raise their hand, and no hands were shown. The charter, indeed, was later revoked; but the unified and incensed colony was already in a state of semirevolt. The fundamental grants of other colonies were in turn withdrawn, and the King undertook to bring them all together under a single administration which should hold them in closer leash and keep the royal eye carefully on their activities. He foresaw already that the colonies were disposed to stiff-necked defiance of him, and that they were tending to come together and make common cause; and he saw, too, that that common cause was more and more appealing to the sympathy of liberals at home.

"If the idea of religious freedom had little to hope for from the effort of the stern old fathers to set up a theocracy in New England, the ideal of political freedom found here a particularly fertile soil in which to germinate. If we candidly will examine the period of the Stuart restoration, we will find more than one of England's political tyrants insisting on a wider measure of religious tolerance in these colonies. Ultimately, under the Crown's insistence, the franchise was widened by placing it on a property-holding basis rather than on that of church communion. It was a distinct liberalization, a significant broadening of the civic foundation. If a Stuart king took from these colonies the right to choose their own governors, he also undertook to forbid those excesses of religious zeal which led to persecutions for conscience sake.

"In short, there is some justification for the generalization that the political tyrants of the restoration forced a religious freedom on a colonial community whose dominating minority did not want it, while the colonies wrested political freedom from the Crown. The clash between a theocratic tyranny on this side and a political tyranny on the other resulted in the destruction of both, to the vast betterment of every human interest involved. It was a long, stubborn, determined struggle between forces, neither of which had much capacity for yielding or compromise. In one way or another, sometimes consciously and sometimes unconsciously, it was going on practically throughout the entire period from the beginning of the colony at Plymouth to the end of the Revolutionary War and the recognition of independence. Looking back upon it we may say that it was inevitable and that the end which came to it was an inevitable conclusion. But things which look inevitable in the retrospect, conclusions which seem inescapable when the long scroll of developing events can be unrolled before the mind's eye, are never so apparent during the process of their evolution. That manifest destiny whose directing hand we decry when we survey the long processes of history would doubtless have brought at last the happy state of both political and religious freedom. But without that cooperation of forces, that reaction of influences between the old England and the new, we may well doubt whether the light of the new day would have broken through to shine upon the better fortunes of an emancipated race without a struggle longer, by generations, perhaps by centuries, than that which history records.

"The men and women who came here to found in a wilderness, across a thousand leagues of ocean waste, a new State, came with high and conscious purpose of achieving a great human end. Out of their voluminous letters, memoirs, public records, and historical writings we constantly get the impression of their deep conviction that they had been called as divine instruments to accomplish a work of supremest significance. Some have seen in this nothing more than the basis for an indictment on the ground of zealotry, bigotry, even fanaticism. But bigotry, extremism, fanaticism, never found their fruition in noble ends achieved, in freedom established, in mankind emancipated, in great States raised up as guardians of unshackled thought and unchained souls. We will find no philosophy based on such unworthy assumptions which will explain the miracle that was here performed. We will have to look higher, to see more clearly, to deal more fairly with human nature, to estimate more generously the purpose of those whom generations of men have honored. No merely human philosophy is capable of explaining such marvels as these. But when we lift our eyes we will recognize the supreme guidance, the divine inspiration, which alone could have wrought these ends.

"Hand of man alone did not build what was founded here; it was but the visible sign, the human symbol, of a purpose which we may not understand, but for whose beneficence all men must give tribute of praise and voice undying gratitude. We may speculate and conjecture, we may seek to frame laws of human relationship, by which to account for such results as here have been wrought, but at last we will have to recognize that they are not for us to explain.

"Even Cromwell, in his great leadership, failed to understand. He spoke contemptuously of those whom he accused of running away from the struggle at home. 'Pinched fanatics,' he proclaimed these fathers of freedom in half a world. It would be difficult to find more convincing proof that human judgments are not to be trusted in these affairs wherein a higher than human wisdom directs the destinies of men and nations. Cromwell lived to know he had erred in his estimate of men and motives, but it was not given to him to know how stupendous was his mistake. He did not live to realize that the schism he deplored was to be the means of winning liberty for both countries, and to bring them at last into that glorious union of free men's energies which in our day has saved a world from reaction and despotism.

"There has never lived a generation of men possessing such wealth of historic materials, such capacity for candid analysis, such broad experience to guide them in right determination, as the generation to which we belong. Likewise there has been none which confronted more complex and difficult problems. Therefore I like to commend study of the history which began here at Plymouth in its relations to the sweep of modern affairs. It teaches us that sometimes schism may lead to true solidarity; that division may mean multiplication.

"The English-speaking race had hardly established itself in its true character as the foremost exponent of liberal institutions when it began to distribute itself among the wildernesses of the earth. Even before liberty had been secured for the mother country its soldiers were adventuring into distant parts carrying their ambitions with them. Cromwell looked upon them as deserters, despised them as weaklings, was disgusted with himself for having once thought to unite with them. It was not an unnatural or a far-fetched judgment for one of the Cromwellian habit. But what would have been his amazement if he could have foreseen the destiny that awaited this feeble colonial enterprise, if he could have known that here was being founded the community that would at last inspire the forces of Old World liberalism, if he could have looked down the vista of three centuries and seen political division followed by spiritual reunion in the greater cause of liberty for all mankind?

"The community of free people of our race, whether in Europe or America, in Africa or Australia, under the northern or the southern skies—whether held together by political ties or by the yet more potent bonds of common traditions, institutions, language, and blood—this community, spread now to all quarters of the world, was begun when Jamestown and Plymouth were founded. It has carried its ideals wherever it has set its standard. It has won recognition of those ideals as the basis of social conduct, of community relations, throughout the world. Its work is not finished; but, pray God, it has come triumphantly through its determining ordeal. It comes forth from that test nerved and heartened for further tasks; confident, assured, reliant. None questions either its place or its right of leadership; few doubt its destiny to establish, under that divine guidance which it has ever recognized, the splendid structure of human brotherhood in peace and understanding.

"The perspectives of history are not safely to be judged save from the loftiest peaks of human experience. It is the dearly bought privilege of our generation to stand on one of those heights of the long ages, to look back over the pathways by which we have come thus far, to see clearly what have been the main traveled roads and what the bypaths. If we will but let our minds record that which our eyes tell us, we will note that the wide-spreading landscape behind us is now vastly changed. It is not what it seemed when we were passing through it. A little time ago, from a lower altitude, we looked back on this same sweep, and missed much that is now clear-cut and plain. That was before the storm. Then the clouds obscured the heights. Dense fogs of ignorance bedimmed the view. There were poisoned vapors of prejudice and the miasmas of intolerance. Now in this wider, clearer vision we see that some of the routes which we supposed were the high roads of progress were the futile ways of wasted effort. Others, which in the journey's heat and toil we counted only as its marches of anguish, we recognize as the short cuts that carried us quickly to loftier levels and safer positions.

"We stand to-day before the unknown, but we look to the future with confidence unshaken. There is no retracing; we must forever go on. We welcome the theories wrought out in new hope, but we cling to the assurance founded on experience. All that is is not bad; all that is to be will not be ideal. We can not lift the veil to the future, but we can analyze and understand what has gone before. It is good to keep our feet firmly on the earth, though we gaze in high hope for human brotherhood and high attainments.

"Just as the Pilgrims had a practical mind for material things amid effective pursuit of their higher ideals, so must we with our inheritance. God never intended an achievement without great effort; there is no reward without great labor. Freedom is the field of endeavor, not the fancied abode of idleness.

"Just as these fathers drew together toward ample community authority to make the Nation and still preserve the freedom of those who compose it, so must we guard against the supreme centralization of power at home and the superstate for the world. More, we must combat the menace in the growing assumption that the State must support the people, for just government is merely the guaranty to the people of the right and opportunity of that people to support themselves. The one outstanding danger of to-day is the tendency to turn to Washington for the things which are the tasks or the duties of the forty-eight Commonwealths which constitute the Nation. Having wrought the Nation as the central power of preservation and defense, let us preserve it so.

"A new hope looms to-day. We are slowly but very surely recovering from the wastes and sorrows and utter disarrangements of a cataclysmal war. Peace is bringing its new assurances; and penitent realization and insistent conscience will preserve that peace. Our faith is firmer that war's causes may be minimized and overburdening armament may be largely diminished—and these, too, without surrender of the nationality which has inspired or the good conscience which has defended. The international prospect is more than promising, and the distress and depression at home are symptomatic of early recovery. Solvent financially, sound economically, unrivaled in genius, unexcelled in industry, resolute in determination, and unwavering in faith, these United States will carry on!

"In the story of 300 years there is every recompense for the agonies of yesterday, there is our staff for the burdens of to-day, there is our assurance for the trials of to-morrow. The civilization of to-day, the status of mankind, has been reached by many routes. We have approximated the common vision, the united purpose, the one supreme aim. We note the divisions of the past, the parting paths, the clashing ambitions, the misguided efforts, and we see all of them bringing men together and urging understanding, suggesting larger purpose. There is no fit temple for man amid eternal rivalries, enmities, hatreds, strife, and warfare. But in the concord of brotherhood and understanding we may approach the state which God must have meant for those created in His own image.

"Here was the early dedication to religious liberty and political freedom. It was a sublime gift to posterity. We can not better express our reverence to-day than by sweeping aside the errors, the failures, the disappointments, the betrayals of our day, and plant here for all America and all the world the standards of highest justice and real human brotherhood. This would add to the volume of rejoicing on earth and give echo to the heavens of the nobler aspiration of united mankind. It would dim no torch of liberty which was lighted here, but would set the world aglow with new hopes, new confidence, and new exaltation."

CONSOLIDATION OF OFFICES OF REGISTER AND RECEIVER.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Morning business is closed. Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 71) for the consolidation of the offices of register and receiver in district land offices in certain cases, and for other purposes. It is a bill to allow the Secretary of the Interior to consolidate in one person the offices of register and receiver of the land offices in those States where the fees have become so low that they would practically only pay for one office.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, may I inquire if there is a unanimous report from the committee?

Mr. McCUMBER. The bill has been favorably reported from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

Mr. HARRISON. Is it a unanimous report?

Mr. McCUMBER. It is.

Mr. HARRISON. There is no opposition to it from any member of the committee?

Mr. McCUMBER. No opposition at all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I suggest that the bill be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be read.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President is authorized to consolidate the offices of register and receiver in any district land office and to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, a register for such land office and to abolish the office of receiver of such land office upon 10 days' notice of such abolition mailed to such receiver whenever the receipts of such land office fall materially below the maximum amount provided by law for compensation for both register and receiver and in his opinion the interests of the service warrant such abolition.

Within 10 days after the mailing of such notice the office of receiver of such land office shall cease to exist, and all the powers, duties, obligations, and penalties imposed by law upon both register and receiver of such office shall be exercised by and imposed upon the register, who shall be paid a salary of $500 per annum, together with the fees and commissions otherwise allowable to both register and receiver: Provided, That the salary, fees, and commissions of such register shall not exceed $3,000 per annum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, there are so few Senators here this morning from the public-land States that I think the Senator from North Dakota should withhold his request until there is a quorum present.

Mr. McCUMBER. May I say to the Senator from Arizona that the bill was reported unanimously from the committee. We have two or three of these offices in my State which are so far apart that with the present condition it would be very expensive for those desiring to make proof to go, for instance, from the northwest to the southwest part of the State, and especially where they have lost their crops for two or three years. In those offices the amount of land business has become so small that it will not pay the register's and the receiver's compensation, but it would be an injustice to those who have to go to the land office to abolish it entirely. In order to prevent this inconvenience and expense the bill allows, whenever the fees and commission fall materially below the amount allowed by law, which is $3,000, that instead of abolishing the office the Secretary of the Interior, if the interest of the administration justifies it, may abolish one of the offices so that the other officer may draw the compensation and may still hold that particular land office open. That is all there is to the bill.

Mr. ASHURST. As is usual with the Senator from North Dakota, he has made a very clear statement, and I, of course, join with him in any effort to retrench and save expenses at this particular time. If the Committee on Public Lands has, as the Senator said it has, given the bill full consideration and unanimously reported it, I shall not object, but I wish to observe that so far—

Mr. McCUMBER. The report is here, I will say to the Senator, and it is a unanimous report.

Mr. ASHURST. I take the Senator's word for it. I do not care to see the report. I simply wish to observe that so far as the State of Arizona is concerned there exists a necessity for additional offices, and there is a necessity for additional work. It may be because Arizona has 72,000,000 acres of public land, of which only a small percentage is surveyed or occupied, and it may be that my State occupies a different position in that regard from any other State. I have no objection to the bill.

Mr. McCUMBER. Let me say to the Senator that the bill will not prevent any additional offices but it will give relief to those persons who would otherwise have to travel from 400 to 600 miles to reach another land office.

Mr. ASHURST. The bill does not abolish any land office, but simply reduces the force from two to one in certain cases.

Mr. McCUMBER. That is true.

Mr. ASHURST. I do not object.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I had not had my attention called to the matter prior to the reading of the bill this morning. In its general application it affects a great many land offices in the West. I think there are seven or eight in the State of Oregon. It seems that under the bill, when there is a lessening of the fees of the register and receiver, the President upon notice may abolish the office of the register and leave the receiver in charge; that is, when the fees are substantially less than the maximum allowed, which, I think, is $3,000 per annum.

I would not wish at this time to have the matter considered without further study upon the part of those located in the States in which these offices are established in the West. The Senator from North Dakota has asked unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill, and I shall have to oppose it at this time.

Mr. McCUMBER. Of course, I could not get it up at this time until we reach the calendar if any Senator objects; but it is a matter of vital importance to us. We have held land offices open now where we have neither register nor receiver until we can get the bill passed. We either have to abolish the land offices, at an enormous inconvenience to the farmers who desire to make proof in the vicinity, or we have to make an arrangement to have only one officer in those particular land offices.

Mr. McNARY. I suggest to the Senator from North Dakota that his bill might be local in its effect, but in the State of Oregon there are instances where when the sale of public land is not considerable the receipts fall and when the sale of public lands is considerable they rise. I can not consent at this time to use the measure of income as a basis for determining whether there shall be abolished one or the other of these offices.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I wish to suggest to the Senator from Oregon that under the law as it is now the President can abolish an office if he does not consider the office necessary.

One of the purposes of the bill is to avoid that and accommodate people who may desire to enter lands within the neighborhood of an existing office.

The matter is illustrated very well by the situation in the State of Washington. The business in our land offices had run down very materially. We had three offices in western Washington. The one at Olympia was abolished, leaving the one at Seattle and the one at Vancouver. The Senator is familiar with the situation there. Last year the proposition came up in the department here proposing to abolish the office at Vancouver, leaving but one office in western Washington. They expected to locate that in Seattle. That would have been very inconvenient to the people who might desire to enter public land in the Vancouver district.

I think the order had been issued actually abolishing the office at Vancouver, but we prevailed upon the department to withhold putting the order into execution, and in the last Congress we incorporated a provision in the sundry civil appropriation bill authorizing this very thing with reference to the offices in western Washington, with the result that both offices are being continued with but one official at each office.

It seems to me the interest the Senator is looking after would be far better conserved and protected by the enactment of the bill than to allow matters to go as they are, because the first thing the Senator knows he will wake up some morning and find that the Interior Department has abolished some of the offices.

Mr. McNARY. The matter suggested by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER] is of such deep concern to the public land States of the West that I shall have to insist upon the objection until I shall have further time to consider the different statutes in reference to the matter and the operation of this proposed legislation. I think the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] for his statement, but, to my mind, it really does not mollify the situation at this time.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, has morning business closed?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Morning business is closed.

Mr. McCUMBER. I did not intend to yield the floor upon objection, if morning business was closed, but intended to move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 71) for the consolidation of the offices of register and receiver in district land offices in certain cases, and for other purposes. I make that motion now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Senators have heard the motion of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER]. The question is on that motion. [Putting the question.] The "ayes" seem to have it.

Mr. McNARY. I hardly think the making of the motion by the Senator from North Dakota was quite the prudent thing to do, and I desire to be heard in opposition to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. As the Chair understands, the motion is not debatable.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, allow me to suggest—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion is not debatable.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I ask for a division on the motion of the Senator from North Dakota.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Senators have heard the motion made by the Senator from North Dakota. All those in favor of the motion will so indicate by rising.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I desire to be informed as to what the motion of the Senator from North Dakota is.

Mr. McCUMBER. My motion is to take up Senate bill 71, being Order of Business No. 221 on the calendar. It is a bill to allow the Secretary of the Interior in any land office in a State where the fees fall materially below the salary of the register and the receiver to combine the two offices in one instead of entirely abolishing the office. This is proposed to be done for the convenience of those people in our Western States who are far from the land office, in order to enable them to make their proofs in land entries.

Mr. McNARY. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President. I desire to know whether or not the motion is debatable?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The motion is not debatable.

Mr. McCUMBER. I understand that.

Mr. McNARY. I think the Senator from North Dakota is proceeding in a way which will be prejudicial to the interests of those who are opposed to the proposed legislation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that the motion of the Senator from North Dakota is not debatable. The motion is that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 71, being Order of Business No. 221 on the calendar. [Putting the question.]

Mr. HARRISON. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HARRISON (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] and vote "nay."

Mr. LODGE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE] and vote "yea."

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE]. I notice he is not present, and, therefore, I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. EDGE. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] to the Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT] and vote "yea."

Mr. HALE (after having voted in the negative). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] to the junior Senator from Arizona [Mr. CAMERON] and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. BROUSSARD. I am paired with the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] and vote "nay."

Mr. CALDER. I am paired with the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARRIS]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX] and vote "yea."

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Colorado [Mr. NICHOLSON] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. CARAWAY. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. MCKINLEY], who is absent, and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I have a general pair with the Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD]. Noticing that he is absent and not knowing how he would vote if present, I withhold my vote.

Mr. JONES of Washington (after having voted in the affirmative). The senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] is necessarily absent. I agreed to take care of him. I find I can transfer my pair with him to the Senator from Maryland [Mr. FRANCE]. I do so and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce the absence of the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] on official business. I will ask that this announcement stand for the day.

I also wish to announce that the junior Senator from Arizona [Mr. CAMERON] is absent on official business.

I further desire to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] with the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH];

So the motion was agreed to, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 71) for the consolidation of the offices of register and receiver in district land offices in certain cases, and for other purposes.

The bill was read.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I have here a very short bill upon which I desire to have action. I ask unanimous consent to consider this bill.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, we have just voted to take up a bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that the Senate has just voted to proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 71.

Mr. HEFLIN. As soon as that bill is out of the way, I will ask to take up for consideration the bill to which I refer.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk. It proposes to add four new sections to the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. It is proposed to add at the end of the bill the following:

Sec. 2. That there be, and is hereby, granted to the State of Florida the United States Government lands in said State for the use and benefit of the public schools of Florida.

Sec. 3. That a list of the lands herein granted to the State of Florida shall be prepared by the Commissioner of the General Land Office and approved by the Secretary of the Interior and certified to said State. Upon such certification the title to such land shall be deemed to have vested in the State of Florida as of the date of the approval of this act.

Sec. 4. That the land herein granted shall be disposed of to citizens of the United States under such laws, rules, and regulations as may now or hereafter be prescribed by the legislature of the State of Florida not inconsistent herewith.

Sec. 5. That the proceeds arising from the use, disposal, or sale of said lands, or any part thereof, shall be for the use and benefit of the public schools of Florida.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I move to amend the amendment by inserting the word "Utah," and pluralizing where the singular is used.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry: Does the amendment that is offered by the Senator from Utah carry with it that all of the public lands in Utah are to be given to the State of Florida? [Laughter.]

Mr. KING. Oh, no; to the State of Utah. I am very generous, but I would not have them go to the State of Florida.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I have no objection to accepting the lands of Utah as a donation to the State of Florida, if that is proposed by the amendment of the Senator from Utah.

Mr. President, I have really offered this amendment seriously. The fact that this is a bill providing for consolidation of the two offices of land receiver and register of lands carries with it the suggestion that in certain States the Federal Government is not receiving any net returns for the lands that are being disposed of in those States, respectively. This is true, as I understand, in the State of Florida. The land sales within the State constitute a net return of very little if any over and above the expense of maintaining the land offices in that State.

It may not be considered this within itself would be sufficient justification upon which the Congress may grant to the State of Florida the remaining public lands within the State; but there is a further and a more meritorious and equitable ground upon which Congress may make an additional grant of school lands to my State.

I have not had the opportunity to get the statistics here, as this matter came up unexpectedly; but the records will disclose the fact that while the State of Florida received from the Federal Government for public-school purposes only one section out of every township of the public lands many of the States received two sections from each township for public-school purposes, and some of the States received an additional acreage over and above two sections in each township. We are claiming for my State the same consideration as that accorded to a large majority of the States in the Union in which public lands are located. The grant that has been heretofore made has not dealt equitably with the State of Florida. The Government has not given to my State an acreage of land that was equal in proportion to that which has been donated to other States for public-school purposes, and it is upon this situation, based upon the facts which disclose a condition whereby other States have been far more liberally dealt with than the State of Florida, that I have proposed this amendment.

This amendment follows in identical language a bill which I introduced some time ago that was referred to the Public Lands Committee, and upon which there has not been a report up to the present time. If the land offices are continued, the Federal Government will expend the returns from the public lands within the State of Florida for the purpose of maintaining the offices and paying the expenses of those offices. Why should not the Federal Government deal fairly with my State and donate the remaining acreage of land in that State to the public-school fund? If it is donated to the public-school fund, then it will be administered by the State school board, composed of members of the State cabinet, and there will be no necessity of an additional expense for overhead nor for clerkships.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. TRAMMELL. I do.

Mr. BORAH. Has the Senator stated the amount of public land in his State?

Mr. TRAMMELL. If I recall correctly, it is only about 117,000 acres. Of course, I may be mistaken as to the amount, but I am reasonably sure that is the amount of public land that remains within the State; and this 117,000 acres would fall far short of an amount of public land proportionate to the amounts that have been donated to a great many of the other States.

The amendment is offered seriously, and I believe that justice demands that Congress make the donation to the State. I furthermore believe that it will be a measure in the interest of economy. That seems to be the object of the pending bill, because if this contribution is made the Federal Government will have no further expense in administering the sale and disposition of the public lands in the State of Florida, which, as I understand, at the present time is not being carried on with any profit to the Federal Government, because the receipts from sales are about consumed in the payment of salaries.

I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I should like to have the attention of Senators for just a moment upon the merits of this bill, and then let them vote for as many killing amendments as they feel they ought to vote for.

The State of North Dakota is about 400 miles in length by about 240 miles in width. The main-line railways are all east and west. Montana, I believe, is about 600 miles in length by nearly 200 miles in width. Washington, I think, is about 400 miles in length by over 200 miles or 250 miles in width. In all of these States the main lines are east and west. To-day, if I wanted to go from any place in the middle or northern part of North Dakota into the central or southern part of South Dakota, my best way would be to go to St. Paul, clear across the State of Minnesota, and then change and go back an equal distance to the west. We have a land office in Williston, we will say, in the northwestern part of our State. We have another in the southwestern part of the State. If one wanted to make a proof at a land office in the southwestern part of the State that now he can make at Williston, if he considered the question of convenience at all he would have to go clear across the State to the east line, to Fargo, and then get around to the south again, and get to the southwest. He would make as quick time in that way, with possibly only a little more cost in railway fare.

We have not been so very prosperous in our State in the last few years, due to a great extent to the failure of crops in the western section of the State. Our lands, however, have been proven up to such an extent that there are not sufficient fees and salaries to pay both a register and a receiver. It will be understood that under the rule the register and receiver are each paid a salary of $500 per year, and then they are allowed a commission on the work they do, not to exceed $3,000. It would be almost impossible to get a man who is qualified for the position, who would do the work and be fitted for it, for less than $3,000. Two or three of these land offices will only pay that amount in all of the fees and commissions.

We do not want to abolish the land offices. At the present time, under the present law, whenever the fees fall below the sum I have named the President may abolish the land office. I wish to avoid the abolition of these offices, and to combine the register and receiver in one office. Then the offices can be kept open for perhaps two or three years yet for the convenience of those who have contests and those who have to make proof. It does no harm to anyone; it does not interfere in any way with additional land offices in those States where you need an additional land office.

Mr. HARRISON. How much will this proposed consolidation save the Government?

Mr. McCUMBER. That depends. If the Government would abolish the land offices, it might save two or three thousand dollars in my State to the Government, and put the farmers who have made proofs to the expense of thirty or forty thousand dollars. The Government would save a little. If it would abolish them entirely, it would save the office of the register and receiver, whose incomes amount to $6,000 in the several land offices, but the cost to the people who would make proofs would be very many times that sum.

Now, a word about this amendment. Mr. President, I have always been in close sympathy with those Western States which have been cursed with the action of the departments in taking lands, both timberlands and lands that were not timberlands, with the idea that they would reforest them at some time. I know the difficulties under which they are laboring, and have always voted with them to assist them in ridding themselves of that condition.

I want to say to the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL] that I am in favor of the Government giving to the State of Florida every acre that it has in Florida, and I think I would do the same thing in every western State. But the Senator knows that we have thrashed this matter over again and again, and no such amendment and no such theory could pass both branches of Congress. Therefore we would gain nothing, and it would simply mean delay, and we have three offices now in my own State which have been waiting for an appointment for three or four months, until they could make a provision whereby the two offices could be consolidated into one.

So I hope that we will not put this amendment upon the bill. Whenever the Senator from Florida wants to present his amendment in a separate bill, he will always have my vote to turn over to the State of Florida every acre of Government land in that State.

NEGOTIATIONS WITH GERMANY.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, really the Senator from North Dakota and his committee are to be congratulated upon showing some tendency toward economy, and I can understand how some gentlemen on the other side would oppose coordinating these offices, because they will lose that much patronage.

But I desire to talk about another subject, which may not be allied very closely with this but which is of interest at this time. I see the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] now in the Chamber, and I am wondering if he has read the articles which have appeared in the papers the last two or three days with reference to the progress which has been made in negotiating the treaty of peace between the United States and Germany.

Mr. McCUMBER. Let me interrupt the Senator a moment. I appreciate the fact that during the consideration of this bill any Senator who wishes may speak on any other subject—

Mr. HARRISON. This subject I am about to discuss is very interesting.

Mr. McCUMBER. But it is of vast importance that we get this bill through, and I ask the Senator if, under those circumstances, he will not let us have a vote on this bill, and then take up the other matter.

Mr. HARRISON. I am going to speak very briefly, and I intend to vote for this, the first step in economy by the Republican Party since I have been a Member of the Senate.

I read first from the Chicago Tribune service, and that certainly is very good Republican authority at this time. I am sorry that I do not see the distinguished senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. McCORMICK] in his seat, because no doubt he indorses this statement. It is headed: "Senate, in dark on Berlin pact, gets impatient—Members becoming curious over treaty being negotiated."

Evidently this article is speaking by the card. It reads:

Curiosity, accompanied by some impatience, is being manifested by the Senate concerning the new treaty of peace with Germany, which, according to dispatches from Berlin, is now in the final processes of negotiation.

So far the Senate has been kept completely in the dark about the negotiations. Although members of the Foreign Relations Committee keep an ever-watchful eye on the administration's moves in international diplomacy, their ignorance concerning the treaty-making now in progress parallels only their inability to obtain information while the Versailles treaty was being framed.

I know this is quite interesting to the senior Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH]. I am sorry that I have not the attention of the senior Senator from Massachusetts, because he can probably, when I finish, throw some light on this proposition. I hope that before I have finished the senior Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] will come into the Chamber, because I want to read from the papers a colloquy which took place day before yesterday, or yesterday, between the senior Senator from California and the senior Senator from Massachusetts touching the secrecy which enshrouds the treaty negotiations now going on between Germany and the United States. Speaking of Republican Senators, the article says:

The only light they have been able to get has come through newspaper dispatches, and this has been dimmed by administration declarations that they are wide of the mark.

It is very strange that this administration is in another instance adopting certain tactics for which they condemned the last administration. I read further:

Inquiries at the State Department concerning relations with Germany elicit no information beyond the bare admission that Ellis Loring Dressel, American commissioner at Berlin, is engaged in deliberations with the authorities there.

I was reading from the Chicago Tribune service, a very high authority at this time.

From yesterday's Washington Evening Star, a very splendid newspaper, which gives very accurate information and never under any circumstances misrepresents the administration views, I read an article appearing on the first page. Probably Senators on the other side read this, too, and they know whether it is true or not, and I hope when I have finished that we may hear from them as to whether or not it portrays accurately the situation as it exists at present.

This article is headed: "Senators in dark on German peace inquire for facts—Negotiations of State Department are being veiled with secrecy—Even Foreign Relations Committee is ignorant—HIRAM JOHNSON asks LODGE for information as to status of present proceedings."

I see that both those Senators have entered the Chamber, so we will now get light on this question. This is an article which was written by David Lawrence, one of the ablest and most reputable correspondents in the city of Washington. He is at the head of an extensive news service with large clientele throughout the country. He said:

Senator HIRAM JOHNSON, of California, has been making inquiries of Senator LODGE, chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, to determine what is going on between the United States Government and the German Government with respect to the establishment of peace.

Why should he not inquire of the chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee? We see dispatches from Berlin most frequently saying that these negotiations are under way and that the treaty is practically completed. But, being kept in the dark and not being on as friendly relations with the President as is perhaps the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], and not occupying as high a position on the Foreign Relations Committee as the senior Senator from Massachusetts, he being the chairman, it was natural that the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] should have inquired on yesterday of the Senator from Massachusetts as to these pertinent facts. The article goes further:

Mr. JOHNSON is a member of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee.

The Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] is a member of that important committee and I suppose that he has no more information regarding these delicate negotiations, so important to the country, than has the senior Senator from California, and it appears from this article that neither of them has any more information than has the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE].

I am not surprised at Senators on the other side being chagrined and discontented over this proposition, and nursing a growing feeling against the administration for not taking them into its confidence. I am a little surprised, however, that the present administration is not keeping up with the policy which they laid down in the beginning, that there would be "sweet" cooperation, always of the happiest and friendliest kind, between the Senate and the administration, that you would be kept advised of each step in these delicate diplomatic negotiations, especially on a question of so much importance as that of the making of peace between this Government and Germany.

But the fact remains that the Senate has not been advised, and I do not know as to whether a proclamation has been issued by the President declaring that we are on peace terms with Germany.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Mississippi will not forget that both the President and the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] have been taking a vacation, and that they could not confer while they were on their vacations.

Mr. HARRISON. But the President returned yesterday. I hope he had a very splendid trip, for I know he needed the rest. He has had many large responsibilities crowding themselves upon him. There is hardly any President who has had greater problems confronting him, and he needed these week-end trips on the Mayflower and restful excursions up into the mountains of New Hampshire and Maine and Vermont. But he is back now and I hope that he can soon see the Attorney General, who has for months had this matter in charge, considering whether it is necessary, in order to have peace, since we passed the peace resolution, to issue a proclamation declaring peace. The last account I read of it stated that the Attorney General had his desk packed high with books and data and papers of all kinds, and was giving that question his constant and serious consideration.

But we are in the dark as to whether or not that proclamation is to be issued, and I do not know what the opinion of the senior Senator from Massachusetts is as to whether, in view of the failure of this proclamation to be issued up to this time, we are now in a state of war or in a state of peace, and I trust that, when I have concluded these brief remarks, the Senator from Massachusetts will inform us, and inform the country, whether or not we are now in a state of peace or in a state of war, and when, if he knows, this important proclamation, which has been considered so long by the Attorney General, and which up to this good hour he has not come to any definite conclusion about, will be issued; whether he intends to give his opinion to the President, and when the President expects to issue it to the country and to the world.

I read further from this article:

Mr. JOHNSON asked Mr. LODGE if it was true that a treaty was being negotiated with Germany. Mr. LODGE said he had not been advised by the executive branch of the Government.

I do not understand why they have not advised him. We understood before the 4th of March that they were going to keep him in constant touch with these delicate questions as they arose, and we have the assurance from the senior Senator from Massachusetts when he said to that great gathering of Republicans in Chicago in convention assembled that a new day would dawn upon the country and there would be close cooperation between the legislative branch and the executive branch in dealing with our international affairs.

The article goes further:

Senator JOHNSON wanted to know if the German Reichstag committee on foreign affairs had a copy of proposals to be embodied in a peace treaty, and again the Massachusetts Senator professed ignorance.

INFORMATION WITHHELD.

"What would we have said if all this had happened under the last administration?" exclaims Senator JOHNSON, as he points out that not a scintilla of information has been given the Senate Foreign Relations Committee about the status of our negotiations or conversations with the German Government about peace. This fact has not been generally known.

I can just see the Senator from California in his vigor and earnestness and sincerity point his finger at the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] when he asked that very pertinent question:

What would we have said if all this had happened under the last administration?

He asked the question.

This fact has not been generally known. It has been supposed right along that President Harding and Secretary Hughes have been consulting the Senate.

Senator LODGE has himself heretofore insisted that the Senate had a right to have its say in advance of an actual signing of a peace treaty.

Why, I have heard the Senator from Massachusetts grow eloquent in standing for the rights of the Senate from the beginning of treaty negotiations between this country and foreign Governments?

Mr. LODGE. That, Mr. President, was not the case.

Mr. HARRISON. It was not? Very well. I was misinformed and had a wrong impression about it.

Mr. LODGE. I have said, and said it with some energy, that we were entitled to have all the information about the negotiations after the treaty was presented.

Mr. HARRISON. Has the Senator changed his mind recently?

Mr. LODGE. No. After the treaty was presented we were entitled to it. We never have had it yet on the Versailles treaty.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator has nothing on the German treaty at all? He professes absolute ignorance.

Mr. LODGE. That is not yet before us.

Mr. HARRISON. Can the Senator tell us when it will be before us?

Mr. LODGE. I am not engaged in negotiating the treaty.

Mr. HARRISON. Is anyone engaged in negotiating the treaty?

Mr. LODGE. That is a thing I think even the newspaper correspondent would know, because it has been printed in every newspaper in the country over and over again.

Mr. HARRISON. That is what I said, that the newspapers seem to get something the Senate does not get.

Mr. LODGE. That is the fault of the Senator from Mississippi. I can not help the Senator from Mississippi not knowing about it.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator would not expect me to know it when he as chairman of a great committee did not know about it?

Mr. LODGE. I knew about it. I do know what appeared in the newspapers.

Mr. HARRISON. I am sorry the Senator is not on as friendly terms with the Secretary of State and the President as he had hoped he would be.

Mr. LODGE. Those terms I think the President and the Secretary of State and myself can discuss perfectly well.

Mr. HARRISON. So I read further:

Senator LODGE has himself heretofore insisted that the Senate had a right to have its say—

This correspondent was mistaken, too. The Senator will see the impression was all over the country to that effect.

Mr. LODGE. It is a most astonishing thing that a newspaper or a correspondent should ever be mistaken, but I think he is.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; evidently so.

Senator LODGE has himself heretofore insisted—

Continues the article—that the Senate had a right to have its say in advance of the actual signing of a peace treaty.

Of course, the Senator never did criticize or find fault with the representatives of this Government in negotiating the treaty of Versailles, because he felt that he was close to it all the time. That was the position I understood the Senator to take. Never at any time did he condemn the past administration for keeping the Senate advised as to each step as it went along toward the end. Of course, the Senator did not criticize, because now he says he has no right to know until the treaty is presented to the Senate.

Mr. LODGE. I said I was not conscious that I did criticize the failure to inform the Senate pending the negotiation. I have criticized, and I shall do it again no matter who is President, a failure to inform us after the negotiation is completed and the treaty placed before us. The article from which the Senator reads goes on to illustrate it by using the case of what was called the round robin.

Mr. HARRISON. I understand the Senator signed the round robin.

Mr. LODGE. The President of the United States had laid before the country and before the Senate a draft of his proposed League of Nations and invited criticism, and he got it.

Mr. HARRISON. It is my impression, if I have not forgotten the history of that time, that it was before the treaty of Versailles had been finally written, and certainly before it was presented to the Senate.

Mr. LODGE. The league was a tentative draft which he himself submitted.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; to the Foreign Relations Committee.

Mr. LODGE. That of course was open to consideration. He has a right to consult us, if he chooses, pending a negotiation.

Mr. HARRISON. So as a matter of fact President Wilson was consulting the Senator and others about these delicate international matters, but President Harding is not consulting anybody at this time.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator of course is in the President's confidence?

Mr. HARRISON. Which President's confidence?

Mr. LODGE. This President's confidence. The Senator states what President Harding is doing, about which I venture to suggest he knows but little.

Mr. HARRISON. I am trying to find out, because I think the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] was right when he went to the chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, and I am sure he was disappointed when he was told that the Senator from Massachusetts was in absolute ignorance about what the administration was doing touching the German treaty.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator from California can speak for himself about that conversation. It was not what is described there.

Mr. HARRISON. Very well; I read further.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield a moment?

Mr. HARRISON. Certainly.

Mr. KING. I would like to suggest to the Senator that President Wilson, when a draft had been formulated of the league, and it was only a tentative draft, immediately disclosed it and invited constructive criticism, and the Senate knows and the country knows that distinguished Republicans like Mr. Taft and Mr. Root and the now Secretary of State submitted suggestions to the President of the United States. In addition to that, President Wilson invited the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts, the present chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, and all the members of the Committee on Foreign Relations to the White House and discussed with them this tentative draft of the League of Nations and invited constructive criticism.

Mr. LODGE. Of course, he did that. That is public knowledge. He had a perfect right to do it, and President Harding has the right to do it if he chooses to.

Mr. HARRISON. But President Harding does not choose to do so.

Mr. LODGE. He can not be compelled to do it if he does not choose to do it.

Mr. KING. I am not disputing the question of right; I am merely calling attention to the fact that President Wilson did give publicity in advance of the final draft of the treaty and invited the Senator from Massachusetts and others to make constructive suggestions concerning it.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator from Utah did not do me the honor to listen to what I said. I said twice emphatically that Mr. Wilson had done that precise thing.

Mr. KING. But I understood the Senator from Massachusetts impliedly criticized President Wilson for failing to give information respecting the treaty negotiations.

Mr. LODGE. I did not criticize him at all for submitting his draft of the League of Nations. All I said was that he wanted criticism on it; he submitted it and he got criticism.

Mr. HARRISON. I understand now that the Senator from Massachusetts is really praising President Wilson for taking the Senate into his confidence and indirectly criticizing the present President for not taking us into his confidence.

Mr. LODGE. No. When I speak my views of the two Presidents I shall do it myself and not ask the Senator from Mississippi to interpret them for me.

Mr. HARRISON. I hope I do not wrongly interpret them.

Mr. LODGE. I said, and I say again, that President Wilson submitted a draft of the League of Nations and asked criticism, and received it. He had a perfect right to do it, and I think, in view of what subsequently happened, it was a very desirable thing to have done.

Mr. HARRISON. I recall one day when the Senator, before the question of the treaty had ever been submitted to the Senate, held up a copy of it here and said there were two that had reached the United States through some subterranean channel, I know not what. Am I mistaken about that?

Mr. LODGE. I think the Senator is now confusing me with the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH].

Mr. HARRISON. Probably so; but I understood the Senator to say to the Senator from Idaho, "I have seen it; I have one myself."

Mr. LODGE. The Senator from Idaho said he had seen a copy, and I had seen another.

Mr. HARRISON. The round robin that was issued was a remarkable document—

Mr. LODGE. It was rather a good document.

Mr. HARRISON. Those Senators who signed it think so. I understand many of them have it framed and hanging in their homes with the photos attached and call it the "Second Declaration of Independence," and it was procured and gotten up, I think, before the Senate had received the treaty.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, as a matter of fact, it was a second declaration of independence, was it not, may I ask the Senator?

Mr. HARRISON. I am not surprised at the Senator from Idaho thinking so, because he took one view throughout and was against the treaty all the time, but I can not understand why the Senator from Massachusetts should think so, because he was defending the League of Nations, and finally came around to the views of the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. I am only interested in this debate to see that those documents which really did establish our independence are not discredited.

Mr. HARRISON. I read further:

Senator LODGE has himself heretofore insisted that the Senate had a right to have its say in advance of the actual signing of a peace treaty, and he circulated a round robin, which was signed by practically all the Republican Senators, expressing the Senate's views about a treaty which was then under negotiation.

OTHERS IN DARK.

The Massachusetts Senator was asked whether the Senate would have a similar opportunity to express its views on the new treaty, while it was being negotiated, but this time he is reported to have said that he supposed it was not a matter of concern for the Senate until after the treaty was actually signed and submitted to the Senate for ratification.

Mr. LODGE. The conversation is all imaginary, Mr. President.

Mr. HARRISON. Very well, let us see further.

Mr. LODGE. Of course, I can not be responsible for imaginary conversations that are put in my mouth. It is no doubt very dexterously worded.

Mr. HARRISON. It is no doubt well that the Senator should correct it, because it has received wide publicity.

Mr. LODGE. I do not think it is in the least necessary to correct it.

Mr. HARRISON. Of course not, if the article is correct. I took it that it was. David Lawrence is a great writer and has the respect and confidence of the public. I read further:

Whether Mr. LODGE meant to convey the impression that he himself had reversed his previous views on the subject of Senate intervention in peace negotiations or whether he meant that the executive branch of the Government felt it was not a matter of concern for the Senate is the basis of a good deal of speculation at the Capital.

And, I might say, speculation throughout the country.

Senator JOHNSON incidentally is not the only member of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee who says he is in the dark about the foreign policy of the administration.

I hope the Senator from Massachusetts will hear this.

Others are saying the same thing.

I notice the Senator from Massachusetts is leaving the Chamber. Of course, I know not why. The Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON], however, is still here and we will see whether this thing is run down right or not.

Senator LODGE, as Republican leader, naturally bears the brunt of this discontent. He asked for an engagement with President Harding just as soon as the latter returns from his 10-day trip.

The President got back yesterday.

Whether it was to get more information about the German treaty or to discuss a Senate recess was not indicated.

NO EXPLANATION.

Certainly the Department of State has not given any sign of letting anybody know what sort of treaty is being outlined to Germany, and it may be that Mr. LODGE, having not been given details of the parleys by Secretary Hughes, is asking the White House for information. The usual course is for the President or Secretary of State to advise the chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee about important steps in foreign policy, even though the details are frequently withheld. In the case of a treaty which is likely to be a source of controversy, efforts are sometimes made to canvass sentiment in the Senate in advance to determine a course of action.

On this occasion there is no explanation of the Department of State's policy except one. It is being said that, for reasons of domestic politics, it might not be wise to precipitate a controversy before the treaty is actually signed. When once the pact is made there would be difficulty in amending it, because that would necessitate farther negotiations with Germany and more delay. The Hughes policy is evidently to confront the Senate with an accomplished fact, just as Mr. Wilson endeavored to do when he submitted the Versailles pact.

PRESS ONLY SOURCE OF NEWS.

Summed up, the Senate Foreign Relations Committee is officially in ignorance of the fact that Secretary Hughes is discussing a new treaty with the German Government. It knows only what the press dispatches from Berlin have reported, namely, that American Commissioner Dresel has laid before the German Government a memorandum outlining the kind of a treaty the State Department would like to see formulated. The German Government has been discussing the matter with its committees in the Reichstag to learn if approval would be given the pact. The answers thus far given in the informal exchanges are said to indicate eventual agreement, but just what is to be in the new treaty or what understandings are being secretly made with the German Government nobody in the Senate claims to know.

So I commiserate with Senators on the other side of the aisle who heretofore found fault with secret diplomacy and now find themselves in utter darkness touching the negotiations with Germany and the construction of the German treaty.

Mr. HARRISON subsequently said: I ask unanimous consent to insert in the Record following my remarks the resolution that was proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], which appears in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of March 4, 1919, and signed by 37 Senators—the "round-robin resolution."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate has heard the request of the Senator from Mississippi. Is there any objection? If not, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I desire to take only a moment of the time of the Senate. I wish to offer the resolution which I hold in my hand, a very brief one:

"Whereas under the Constitution it is a function of the Senate to advise and consent to or dissent from the ratification of any treaty of the United States, and no such treaty can become operative without the consent of the Senate expressed by the affirmative vote of two-thirds of the Senators present; and

"Whereas owing to the victory of the arms of the United States and of the nations with whom it is associated a peace conference was convened and is now in session at Paris for the purpose of settling the terms of peace; and

"Whereas a committee of the conference has proposed a constitution for a league of nations and the proposal is now before the peace conference for its consideration: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Senate of the United States in the discharge of its constitutional duty of advice in regard to treaties, That it is the sense of the Senate that while it is their sincere desire that the nations of the world should unite to promote peace and general disarmament the constitution of the League of Nations in the form now proposed to the peace conference should not be accepted by the United States; and be it

"Resolved further, That it is the sense of the Senate that the negotiations on the part of the United States should immediately be directed to the utmost expedition of the urgent business of negotiating peace terms with Germany satisfactory to the United States and the nations with whom the United States is associated in the war against the German Government, and that the proposal for a league of nations to insure the permanent peace of the world should be then taken up for careful and serious consideration."

I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of this resolution.

Mr. SWANSON. I object to the introduction of the resolution.

Mr. LODGE. Objection being made, of course I recognize the objection. I merely wish to add by way of explanation the following:

The undersigned Senators of the United States, Members and Members elect of the Sixty-sixth Congress, hereby declare that if they had had the opportunity they would have voted for the foregoing resolution:

I ought to say in justice to three or four Senators who are absent at great distances from the city that we were not able to reach them; but we expect to hear from them to-morrow, and if, as we expect, their answers are favorable, their names will be added to the list.

Mr. JOHNSON obtained the floor.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. JOHNSON. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I wish to call the Senator's attention to a resolution introduced by the Senator from Massachusetts which I will read, which throws some light upon the question the Senator from Mississippi has been discussing.

Mr. JOHNSON. If it is an exceedingly lengthy resolution, I do not desire to yield at this time.

Mr. McKELLAR. It is comparatively short, if the Senator from California will yield to me.

Mr. JOHNSON. Our views as to the comparative brevity of the resolution might differ.

Mr. McKELLAR. Very well. I will read it in my own time when the Senator concludes, if he does not desire to yield at this time.

Mr. JOHNSON. The Senator can read it, if he will pardon me for proceeding just a few moments, at the conclusion of what I may say.

Mr. McKELLAR. Very well.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, first, I wish to express my very great appreciation to the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] for embalming me in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD in the article written by David Lawrence last night. The article, so far as the quotation given in the original portion of it—that is, before the second paragraph—is concerned, is substantially correct. It does, however, an injustice to the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], because it magnifies what I told Lawrence was a casual conversation upon a specific subject, concerning which the Senator from Massachusetts had not been consulted by me.

It is quite true, Mr. President—I avow it to the Senator from Mississippi, I avow it to the other Members of the Senate—that I am very much interested in our international relations, and I am of a very curious turn of mind. I should like to know, I grant you, about the treaty that is being negotiated, if one is being negotiated, between this country and Germany at the present time. I do not claim, of course, that I have the right to know, but I inquire wherever I can for such information as may be obtained respecting that treaty in order that I may be fully advised and may act subsequently as I desire.

I am not going to be put in a position of hostility to the administration, either by opinions that I hold contrary to the opinions of any individual in the administration or contrary to opinions that may be held by the whole administration. I assume that there is a duty that Senators have upon this floor, a duty, Mr. President, that Senators of the United States will fulfill, no matter what the consequences may be to them. I assume that when a man has attained the presumed prominence of a Senator of the United States he acts as his judgment or as that much-misused word, his conscience, shall direct. I assume that when a man who is a Senator acts upon a policy, governmental in character, or one that deals in any degree with his Nation, and acts as he believes he ought to act, no man has a right to say that because he thus acts that he is hostile to any individual or to any administration.

I am opposed, Mr. President, to the funding bill that has been favorably reported by the Finance Committee of the Senate; but I decline, because I am opposed to that bill, to be put in opposition to the President of the United States generally or at all or in opposition to the administration that is Republican in politics now. I contend that neither the President nor any member of his administration would wish me or any other Senator upon this floor to do otherwise than as his judgment shall direct him to do and as his oath as a United States Senator commands him to do. So long as I am here, Mr. President, whether anyone shall take an opposite view or not, I shall pursue that course in dealing with those subjects that come before us.

I am curious, I say to the Senator from Mississippi, about the treaty that is being negotiated, if one is being negotiated, with Germany to-day. I am curious about the troops of America that are abroad upon the Rhine to-day. I want them brought home. I do not want to pay a million dollars a month for maintaining our troops over there, whether England wishes it or France wishes it, whether the Entente desires it, or whether Germany now asks for it. I want to bring those troops home, pursuant to a policy that has been mine ever since we have been discussing international questions during the past three years. I am curious about those troops; I shall ask some questions about them in the future, but I deny that they will be asked either in criticism of or in hostility to any administration.

I am curious about the debt that is due to this country from foreign nations. I am curious, I admit, about some details of that debt. I read the other day that $32,000,000 were paid to Great Britain for transporting troops of the United States to save the day in the Great War, at the same time that we had a claim against Great Britain aggregating twelve or fourteen billion dollars. I have been informed, Mr. President, since the publication of that article that we not only have paid $32,000,000 to Great Britain for transporting our troops across the sea in British vessels but that we have also previously paid—I am now stating only the information that has been conveyed to me—$68,000,000, a total of $100,000,000 for the same item or for similar services; and not only that but that we have also paid $6,000,000 interest upon this debt; that we paid it when we had an offset of twelve or fourteen billion dollars, on the one hand, and when we had an offset, on the other hand, of hundreds of millions of dollars interest due to us. I have listened to statements upon the floor of this body; I have read the statements of political economists; I have read, indeed, the oburgations of the international bankers to us not to collect the interest that is due us from foreign Governments. I have seen that all these gentlemen assert that if we collect that interest we not only shall destroy the stability of all the countries abroad but that we shall ruin ourselves at home. I decline to subscribe to any such political economy as that. I decline to concede that there would follow in the train of the collection of a portion of our interest either ruin abroad or ruin at home.

However, I want to know, if the Senator from Mississippi is interested in the questions which I am asking, how it is that we paid, either the one administration or the other—I am speaking of neither now and in criticism of neither—how it is that we paid interest to Great Britain upon an indebtedness that we owed Great Britain for transporting our troops to help Britain win the Great War when Britain owed us hundreds of millions of dollars interest, which the political economists upon this floor say we must not collect for fear its collection may bring ruin to our country? I can not understand it.

Those questions I shall ask, just as I asked the other day the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations concerning the proposed treaty with Germany. I simply asked him if he knew anything about the treaty that was being negotiated, if one were being negotiated. He responded that he did not. I have asked other members of the Foreign Relations Committee the like question. Mr. Lawrence asked me a similar question, to which I replied in like fashion; but the Senator from Massachusetts ought not to have been subjected to the distortion of his remarks, whatever might be said of mine. I avow most of what has been said respecting me in the article, but concerning the Senator from Massachusetts it is not accurate.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President—

Mr. JOHNSON. I yield to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. HARRISON. I agree thoroughly with what the Senator has said about paying to Great Britain interest when that Government owes us great sums of money; but that was done, I think, about three weeks ago, if I recall correctly the item printed in the newspapers.

Mr. JOHNSON. No; I think the Senator is somewhat in error, though he is correct in one part of it.

Mr. HARRISON. Let me get the matter straight. I read two weeks ago, I think, that there had been $32,000,000 paid to Great Britain when Great Britain owed us several billion dollars. Was that what the Senator had in mind?

Mr. JOHNSON. Yes; so far as it goes, the Senator from Mississippi states the facts; but the facts are these: We owed money for transportation of troops, as I understand, to Britain; Britain owed us on another account. It was asserted that the account for the transportation of troops was under a contract essentially different from the contract that existed upon the indebtedness due to us, and that, therefore, our obligation was a moral one that had to be liquidated. That is not the point that I was making, however, beyond the fact, of course, that I think we ought to offset one indebtedness against the other. The proposition that I was adverting to was that all political economists, those who claim to be learned in all things pertaining to political economy, say if we collect the interest from the people abroad, then, of course, we are going to work ruin to our country; yet at the same time that they are indulging in such utterances we are paying interest upon an old obligation. It is a system that I do not and can not understand.

Mr. President, there is another matter about which I am curious and concerning which, perhaps, the Senator from Mississippi is equally curious. I believe in the reduction of armaments. I congratulate the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] upon winning in this Chamber the greatest personal victory that has been won by any United States Senator since I have been a Member of this body. I congratulate, too, the President of the United States and the Secretary of State in calling the disarmament conference which they have called.

I hope and I pray that it may be a success in every respect; but the first test in that disarmament conference will be whether it is held in the open or whether it is held in secrecy. And so, Mr. President, curious as I am, I express now the view that is mine, that when the disarmament conference meets in Washington in November we will see as an actuality the nations of the earth meeting in the open, so that the peoples of the earth may be constructively present, at least, and so that the public opinion of the various countries of the world will be able to affect that conference and direct its will in behalf of all the people.

CONSOLIDATION OF OFFICES OF REGISTER AND RECEIVER.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 71) for the consolidation of the offices of register and receiver in district land offices in certain cases, and for other purposes.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, in opposing the immediate consideration of Senate bill 71 this morning, as I did, it was not with reference to the purposes of the bill, but mainly because of a desire upon my part and upon the part of other representatives of the Western States that we might have an opportunity fully to understand and digest its provisions.

I offer an amendment, which I shall read, to come in on page 1, line 7, to strike out the word "ten" and insert the word "ninety," making 90 days' notice requisite.

Mr. FLETCHER. I rise to a point of order. I suggest that there is an amendment pending. My colleague, the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL], offered an amendment, and to that amendment, I understand, an amendment has been offered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is pending an amendment offered by the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] to the proposed amendment offered by the Senator from Florida.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I desire to perfect my amendment, if the Senator from Oregon will yield.

Mr. McNARY. Very well; I did not exactly understand the parliamentary status.

Mr. KING. I came into the Chamber after the Senator from Florida had offered an amendment and while it was being read. I suggest that the words "and to the State of Utah, respectively," be inserted in the appropriate place in the amendment, so it would read:

That there be, and is hereby, granted to the State of Florida and to the State of Utah, respectively, the United States Government lands in said States for the use and benefit of the public schools of said States.

I do not desire to oppose the motion of the Senator from Florida, and shall withdraw the amendment which I have just suggested. However, in order that the Senate may consider, at least for a few minutes, a broader measure, I shall offer as a substitute for the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida the following, which, when acted upon, will not prevent consideration of the Senator's amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Utah, in the nature of a substitute for the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida, will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. In lieu of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL] the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] proposes the following:

SEC. 2. That the public lands, property of the United States, within the several States, which have not been acquired or reserved for the public or special uses of the Government of the United States, and which have not been reserved from entry as authorized by law, together with all rights, jurisdiction, privileges, and sovereignty appertaining thereto, or heretofore exercised or enjoyed by the Government of the United States with respect thereto, are hereby ceded, granted, and confirmed severally to the particular States within the territorial boundaries of which such unreserved public lands may severally lie and be situated.

SEC. 3. That there is excepted from this grant all particular tracts of land which have been entered pursuant to law, and for which the rights of entrymen or claimants may have been initiated, vested, or accrued. Upon the relinquishment, however, of the right of the claimant or entryman to any such lands the same shall be subject to the operation of the grant made by this act.

SEC. 4. That the grant made by this act shall take effect as to the lands within any particular State when the legislature of such State shall by resolution accept the grant made by this act and shall deposit such resolution with the Secretary of the Interior. Resolutions of acceptance shall be made within four years after the date of the approval of this act.

Upon the receipt of a resolution of acceptance from a particular State the Secretary of the Interior shall deliver to such State such maps, records, books, and documents, or certified copies thereof, as may be necessary or convenient for the enjoyment, control, use, administration, or disposition of such lands.

SEC. 5. That the grant hereby made shall be subject to the right of holders of outstanding land scrip, heretofore issued by the United States, to locate such lands in satisfaction of such scrip; but such locations shall be made before the lands herein granted shall pass to private proprietors.

SEC. 6. That all laws relating to the entry of public lands within the several States are hereby repealed.

SEC. 7. That the provisions of this act shall not apply to Alaska or to the Hawaiian or Philippine Islands.

Mr. KING. During the Sixty-fifth Congress I introduced as a separate bill the substitute just read, and at the beginning of this session I again offered it. The bill is now pending before the Public Lands Committee. I realize that the subject involved in the substitute is of such importance that I can not hope for its consideration at this time and in connection with the bill which is before us. I fully appreciate that there is opposition to the cession of the public lands to the States and that there are strong arguments to support such opposition, but I feel sure that a full discussion of the entire matter will develop preponderating reasons justifying the transfer to the States by the General Government all the public lands found therein. I believe that it is the part of wisdom and the part of justice for the Federal Government to cede to the States the public lands which are within their borders.

We are spending tens of millions of dollars annually upon the public lands. They are a constant charge upon the Federal Government. We know that the administration of the public lands by the Federal Government, no matter how wise it may be, is ineffective, expensive, and exceedingly irksome to the people within the States. There is no reason why the public lands found within the borders of the States should not be transferred to the States.

The original thirteen Colonies possessed and owned all the lands within their borders. They were not handled or controlled by the Federal Government. When the State of Texas came into the Union its ownership of the public domain within its borders was recognized, and it has made such disposition of such lands as it saw fit.

I believe that the States can handle the public lands far better than can the Federal Government. If time permitted, it could be shown that in handling the public domain the General Government has not only been inept, but it has blundered and committed mistakes that amount almost to crimes. It has been wasteful and extravagant. Its method and policies have been archaic and in the main impolitic and unwise. When it has recognized that the lands were held only in trust for the people and has pursued a liberal policy, under which private ownership has been promoted, then its course has been prolific of good. We are constantly admonished that the public-land States have hundreds of millions of acres of land within their borders upon which no improvements are being made by the Government. They are not subject to taxation, and these public-land States are compelled to maintain the burdens of their State and municipal governments, and they are not advantaged by reason of the public domain within their borders. We have an imperium in imperio; we have dual control, two Governments operating within given areas, one bearing practically all the burdens incident to the maintenance of modern States. This condition is attended with friction and annoyance and irritation, and indeed in many instances it results in controversies more or less acrimonious.

I think that no wiser step could be taken by the Federal Government than to part with the title to the public domain within the States. Let the Federal Government deed to the State of California the public lands within its borders. The people of that State could handle such lands far better than can Congress, 3,000 miles away. They know what the problems of the West are. They know the needs of the State and how best to promote its welfare. Their control of the forest lands and the mining lands, as well as the agricultural and all other public lands, would be far more economical, and certainly of far greater benefit to the State and the people generally. The same is true of the State of Idaho, the State of Washington, the State of Utah. The United States should convey to the States the lands within their borders, which are now costing the Federal Government tens of millions of dollars annually. The States will develop them. They will control them in the interest of the public and to the great advantage of the general public. The mistaken view has been entertained that the public domain is an inexhaustible source of wealth and will prove of immense financial advantage to the United States. The Government will never collect one-tenth of the amount which it has and will spend in administering the public domain.

The less land there is the greater the cost of handling it. The Interior Department now costs millions, when it called for hundreds of thousands when the Government owned lands greatly exceeding in area the present holdings. I regret that Congress has not taken what I regard as the correct policy. It is not too late, and we should now rectify the mistaken policy which has been so slavishly followed. I hope that sufficient sentiment can be commanded at an early date to enact either the measure which I am now offering or one perhaps better phrased and better conceived, which will consummate the policy for which I am contending.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, am I correct in understanding that the pending question is the amendment of the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] to the amendment of the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL]? I make the inquiry for the purpose of informing the Chair that if that is the case I desire to offer some amendments to the bill as soon as those amendments are disposed of.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Utah is a substitute for the amendment of the Senator from Florida.

Mr. KING. May I suggest to the Senator from Oregon that the question will be upon the adoption of the substitute I have offered for the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida. I am willing to take a vote.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I shall not delay a vote on the bill. I am very much afraid, however, that the substitute offered by the Senator from Utah involves a much larger question than can be properly considered in connection with this measure.

The Florida proposition is quite simple in itself. The amendment proposed by my colleague was to have the public lands of that State turned over to the State for school purposes. That is in accordance with the policy of the Government ever since 1856, I think, when the first act was passed covering swamp and overflowed lands. The situation there is that at present there are only 107,354 acres of vacant lands in the State, and they are scattered in various sections, and are to a large extent worthless. They will never be taken up. There are some vacant lands that the public has known about for years that nobody wants. They do not enter them at all. There are 840 acres of what are supposed to be unsurveyed lands in the State. In addition to that, there are entries and selections which involve quite a considerable acreage. The extent of that I can not give, because it is almost impossible to get accurate figures on that subject; but those questions are pending now before the register and receiver of the General Land Office at Gainesville. It is important that that office shall continue for the purpose of settling the questions involved in these unperfected entries and selections, and that is the main work of the office now. The office could not live on the fees received from disposing of these 107,000 acres of vacant land.

I have sympathy with the Senator's bill on that account. I think the offices there ought to be consolidated when these unperfected entries and selections are settled, which will not take a great while, so as to continue the work of disposing of the 107,000 acres and furnishing general information to the public. It is an important office, in that people can go to it and consult the maps and plats and ascertain what the situation is with reference to lands in various parts of the State. I would not want to see that office closed, and yet eventually, I think we are coming to the point, and probably we have reached it now, where the bill proposed by the Senator from North Dakota would solve the whole problem by consolidating into one these two offices of register and receiver, and allowing the office to be conducted by one person in the future.

Next to that proposal, and I do not know but that I should prefer it, I am inclined to favor the amendment offered by my colleague Mr. TRAMMELL, to have the Government turn over all of these lands to the State for school purposes. In that event, of course, the office would be abolished, both as to the register and as to the receiver.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LENROOT. I should like to ask the Senator what he thinks the State of Florida would do with these lands if they are worthless?

Mr. FLETCHER. Of course, there would be no taxes on them; there would be no expense in connection with them, and they are scattered pieces. I did not say that all of them were worthless, but there are some scattered pieces. Eventually some of them would be reclaimed, perhaps, by drainage and otherwise, and as settlement continued and development progressed in the State they might come to be worth something in the future. Some of them undoubtedly would be now; but in considerable degree the statement can be made that many of these lands are worthless—not all of them, by any means—and a good deal of work can be continued in this land office at Gainesville for some years to come in the disposition of these vacant lands. Certainly in carrying on the determination as to these unperfected entries and selections that work would have to go on in any event. I think, however, that the Government in the long run would be advantaged if they deeded to the State these vacant lands and these unsurveyed lands of 840 acres, and closed up the office of register and receiver entirely.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield the floor.

Mr. LENROOT. Of course, the Senator is aware of the fact that we now have legislation under which, so far as isolated tracts are concerned, they may be sold at public auction. The Government can get out. It will not need to continue a land office at an expense to itself because we have only a few isolated tracts down there. Whenever we get ready, we can just close them out; and so far as these worthless lands of which the Senator speaks are concerned, they are not now costing the Government anything to maintain in any way.

Mr. FLETCHER. It was just a proposal to wind up entirely the business in connection with the public lands of the State.

Mr. LENROOT. We now have ample legislation upon the statute books that provides for that very thing in every State.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I hope the Senate will not agree to any of the amendments that have been offered. It is a great question that ought to be settled, and settled rightly, not as an amendment to a little bill like the one that is pending before the Senate. I do not think there is a Senator here but that knows that the House never would agree to such an amendment as that. I do not think there is any Senator, after he has studied the provisions of the bill, but that will agree that the bill ought to be passed. It simply enables us to get an official and pay him a reasonable compensation for acting as register and receiver of a general land office.

To-day, under the law, there have to be two men; and the minimum salary being $500, there are many, many land offices where the receiver gets not to exceed five, six, or seven hundred dollars, and the register the same, because all over the five hundred dollars that he receives comes from fees, and it is a simple proposition. These amendments that are offered to the bill ought to be voted down.

The Senator from Florida offered this amendment as a bill. As chairman of the Committee on Public Lands, I referred that bill to the Secretary of the Interior for a report. I have not yet received a report from him, but when that report is received, Mr. President, the Committee on Public Lands will consider it, and if the report justifies action, in the opinion of the committee, there will be a favorable report made upon the bill.

All that my colleague [Mr. KING] said in relation to the public lands of the Western States is true, and it is true also that the Western States received double the acreage of land that the people of Florida received when Florida became a State. But the lands which the Western States received when they entered the Union consisted mostly of mountainous lands. The only real use which can be made of them is for grazing, and all that land has all been put into forest reserves.

The people of the States are charged for every sheep which grazes upon a foot of the land within the State, and a man must pay so much per head for every cow which grazes on land belonging to the Government; and every bit of timber that is cut outside of what is used for family use up to $50, I think, must be paid for. Of course the administration of those things is costly, and very little return is made to the Government or to the States.

But let us not load this bill with that great proposition. I have not any doubt, from the expressions I have heard in the Senate, that a majority of the Senate would vote to turn over the lands within the public-land States to the States, but I am quite sure that the House of Representatives would not do it. It is an old question, which has been thrashed out here time and time again, and it would be very much better for Senators to vote the bill down rather than to try to kill it in that way.

I therefore hope that the amendments which have been offered will not be agreed to.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, if we are going to be generous and turn these public lands back to the States, North Carolina has a claim which is just, and any man going into a court of equity and suing on the deed which North Carolina gave could recover. I have an amendment which I shall offer, which has just as much merit as any other amendment already offered.

When North Carolina ceded to the United States Government the State of Tennessee the deed, drawn by Thomas Jefferson and signed by two United States Senators, provided that all moneys arising from the sale by the General Government of public lands in that ceded territory should be returned to the State. That is on record here, and I can produce it at any time. So that if we are to adopt the policy suggested by this pending bill North Carolina would have a just claim for a refund of the money which was received from the sale of any of those lands.

Mr. OVERMAN subsequently said: Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD as a part of the brief remarks which I made a few moments ago the amendment to which I then referred. I did not formally offer the amendment to the bill, but I should like to have it included in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. OVERMAN's proposed amendment is as follows:

That the United States shall return to the State of North Carolina all of the sum received from the sale of public lands sold in the State of Tennessee as provided in the deed of cession made by the State of North Carolina ceding to the United States the land comprised in the State of Tennessee.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I think the Florida situation is quite different from some of the others which have been mentioned. I base my claim on behalf of the State of Florida for unentered land not upon a plea of charity but upon a plea of justice. The records disclose the fact that in the public-land States quite generally it was the policy of the Federal Government in making these grants to donate to the States at least two sections of every township, and in some instances as much as four sections out of each township, while in the State of Florida there was only one section donated to the State for school purposes.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I am compelled to leave the Senate, as there will be a hearing at 2 o'clock before the Finance Committee which I must attend. Does the Senator intend to have this bill go over, or will he consent to a vote within five minutes?

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I will not consent to a vote within five minutes. I do not occupy very much time on the floor of the Senate—

Mr. SMOOT. I am not complaining; I want the Senator to understand.

Mr. TRAMMELL. This is a matter of a great deal of importance to my State, and, whether the amendment I have offered is voted up or voted down, I want to make a few remarks on the subject.

Mr. SMOOT. I only interrupted the Senator because I wanted to know what I should do. I could get from the Senate Chamber to the committee room in five minutes, but I thought that if we were going to vote within five minutes I would remain; but if not, I shall go to the meeting of the committee.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I do not think I shall occupy more than 10 minutes, probably not as much as that.

But reverting to the question of the lands ceded to the States, respectively, I desire to give some data upon that subject. Under grants made by Congress to the States for school purposes Arizona has been granted the second, sixteenth, and thirty-second and thirty-sixth sections out of each township, giving four sections out of each township.

California was granted the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections out of each township.

Colorado was granted the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections. Idaho was granted the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections.

Nevada was granted the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections.

New Mexico was granted the second, the sixteenth, the thirty-second, and thirty-sixth sections.

North Dakota was granted the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections.

Oklahoma was granted the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections and certain of the thirteenth and thirty-third sections.

Kansas was granted the sixteenth and thirty-sixth.

Minnesota was granted the sixteenth and thirty-sixth.

Montana was granted the sixteenth and thirty-sixth.

Nebraska was granted the sixteenth and thirty-sixth.

Oregon was granted the sixteenth and thirty-sixth.

South Dakota was granted the sixteenth and thirty-sixth.

Utah was granted the second, the sixteenth, the thirty-second, and thirty-sixth sections.

Washington was granted the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections.

Wyoming was granted the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections.

It will thus be seen from the statistics that practically all of the public-land States have been granted two or more of the sections in each township for public-school purposes, and several of the States having been granted as many as four sections of each township, among those States being the States of Utah and Arizona and some two or three others. Congress has already established this liberal policy of dealing with the States for the purpose of assisting the school fund. My contention is that the State of Florida, being one of the public-land States, was discriminated against in the beginning in that only one section of land was granted to the State out of each township for school purposes.

Of course, if we were to grant one section out of each township of all of the public lands formerly belonging to the State, in addition to the one section originally granted, it would far exceed the amount of the public lands now remaining within the State, there remaining approximately 107,000 acres.

I use the argument in regard to economy on the part of the Federal Government in granting these lands because that seemed to have been the policy actuating the proponents of the pending bill.

But we contend that in justice Florida is entitled to at least one more section of the Federal lands out of each township for its school purposes. Of course, we have not that much land left in the State.

In addition to the sections granted to the States mentioned, the Federal Government also has made quite liberal allowances to a number of the States in addition to those donations. I have the statistics in support of that, but will not attempt to cite them.

Mr. President, I am very glad to see such a spirit of energy and such efforts on the part of our western friends to promote the interests of the Western States. I very much rejoice in the prosperity of the great western part of our country and its development. But, Mr. President, since I became a Member of this body I have sometimes been impressed with the fact that our friends from the West, in their zeal to do something for that great and enterprising section of the country, overlook dealing out justice to some other sections.

It is very nice, of course, for the States which have already received their two and their four sections of the public domain for school purposes to just set steady in the boat when another State knocks at the door, and gently say, "Oh, no; there is nothing doing."

Mr. KING. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. TRAMMELL. Certainly.

Mr. KING. I hope the Senator, in the criticism he is now indulging in, does not take the position or construe the amendments which are offered as any objection to his measure. I am willing to give all of the land within the State of Florida to that State. But let me state to my friend from Florida that those large grants to the Western States of which he speaks in the main consisted of arid lands, so arid that the land was practically valueless. Much of it you could not sell for 5 cents an acre, and that which has been sold in the main has not brought more than 25 cents an acre, and much of it consists of mountainous lands, almost inaccessible, of no value. One of the beautiful valleys of Florida of a few hundred acres might be worth thousands of acres of those arid and rocky lands conveyed by the Government in the West for school purposes. The Senator must not indulge in the view that the Western States have received large bounties from the Federal Government. The gifts have been parsimonious, and, measured in dollars and cents, they would not be the equal of one of the fine plantations in the State of Florida.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I have not construed the substitute offered by the Senator from Utah, and his remarks, as in criticism of the position I have taken in regard to the matter. Of course, if we should go back and review the history of lands and of land values in the South we would find that at the time the Federal Government made these grants within my own State the lands represented very little money value. I am very happy to say, however, that, under the continuous era of prosperity and development which Florida has enjoyed for the past 20 or 25 years, those lands have come into much greater value, just as is true in the developing sections of the West. But as far as the public domain in the State, which I seek by this amendment to have donated to the school fund of my State, there is at present more or less of this land which I dare say is of no more value than the lands in the West, to which the Senator from Utah refers.

Mr. President, I was saying that I think the representation of the Western States and of the Southern States should harmonize a little more and work more in double harness. I do not mean that there should be any injustice to any other section of the country when I state that.

Mr. BURSUM. Mr. President, does not the Senator think it would promote greater harmony if we would extend these grants to all of the public-land States?

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I would want to investigate the question of what the States should receive, and have them all treated alike. I am presenting the proposition on behalf of the State of Florida, to be dealt with with that same liberality and equity which the Western States received.

Now, if we should go into the details of the public-land situation and find that a measure of that character would deal with the same equity and justice to all the States, most assuredly I would favor a proposition of that kind.

Something was said in regard to arid lands. That brings to my mind the question of reclaiming the waste lands of the country and the policy of the Government upon that question and the attitude of Congress up to the present time in dealing with reclamation in the West and in the South. In the southern part of our country we have more or less of the swamp and overflowed lands, which when reclaimed are very fertile, productive, and valuable. These swamp and overflowed lands can be reclaimed at far less cost than can the arid lands of the West. The Federal Government up to the present time, however, has not in any respect contributed any aid or assistance to the reclamation projects of the South. Upon the other hand, it has been the policy of Congress for some years to foster the irrigation projects of the West, to finance those projects, and to bring those lands, when reclaimed, upon the market that they may be settled and developed.

Soon after entering the Senate I proposed a measure providing that the arid-land projects of the West and the drainage projects of the South should be put upon a similar basis and should be dealt with alike by the Federal Government. To my astonishment, I found when I proposed that measure that among those who were most vigorous in their opposition were some of my friends from the West, coming from States which were enjoying the beneficence of the Government in the way of maintaining and supporting and carrying on their arid-land projects.

Mr. KING. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WATSON of Georgia in the chair). Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. TRAMMELL. Certainly.

Mr. KING. May I inquire of the Senator whether the overflowed lands of which he speaks in Florida are owned by individuals or by the State or by the Federal Government?

Mr. TRAMMELL. They are owned by the State government and by individuals, and of course there are some of the lands of the Federal Government intermingled with those lands.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator know there is a great deal of difference between the Federal Government making appropriation for the reclamation of the lands of private persons and the lands of the State, and on the other hand making appropriations for the reclaiming of lands which belong to the Government? The Senator knows that under the Constitution the Government may have the right, although it is paternalism perhaps, paternalism which many condemn, to exploit and to improve and to reclaim its own lands for the purpose of making them salable.

If I am not trespassing upon the Senator and he will yield further, suppose the Government of the United States has 1,000,000 acres of land which is of no value, which no one will occupy, which it may not sell because there are no purchasers, but which, if the Government would expend $30 per acre for impounding water in order to irrigate it, might sell for $100 an acre and thereby put money into the Treasury of the United States? The Senator can see that financially it might be a proposition of merit and at the same time make available for homestead purposes a large area of land. That might not be condemned upon the ground of the unconstitutionality of the action of Congress, although it might be condemned by some as paternalistic.

I do not think the Senator from Florida has found any Senators or Representatives from the West objecting to the Federal Government reclaiming its own lands. There have been Senators and Representatives not alone from the West but from all parts of the United States who denied the power of the Federal Government to reclaim the lands of private individuals or the lands of States. I hope the Senator will bear that matter in mind in the discussion of this question.

Mr. TRAMMELL. The Senator from Utah gives a correct history of the policy of the Federal Government in entering upon the irrigation projects of the West, as far as the inception of that enterprise on the part of the Government was concerned, but after the Government had been engaged in the reclamation of its own lands for a time, then the Government extended and enlarged its operations to the point where private owners, owning land within the districts where the Government lands were located, could also enjoy the benefits of advances for the purpose of reclaiming their own lands. It was when the Government extended its operations so as to reach out and assist the private ownership that I felt that the drainage projects in the South should be accorded similar consideration.

There are two or three bills pending at the present time before the Senate Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation. My colleague introduced a bill providing for a system of reclamation which would reach the arid lands and also the overflowed lands, providing that we may have reclamation by irrigation and by drainage. I introduced a bill on the same subject some two years ago. I again introduced a similar bill within the last three or four months, providing for a general system applying to reclamation by irrigation and by drainage. The purpose and object of these measures is to give the same consideration to the drainage projects of the country that is extended to the irrigation projects of the West. Those bills were considered by the committee. What did the committee report out? The committee has reported out favorably a bill which provides for the arid-land projects and the irrigation projects of the West, and those alone.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President—

Mr. TRAMMELL. They do not restrict it to public lands, but embrace private reclamation projects just the same as they do public-land projects. I yield to the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. McNARY. I assume the Senator from Florida has reference to a bill which I reported favorably a short time ago in behalf of the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation, of which I happen to be chairman, providing for the reclaiming of public and private lands in the West. I wish to say to the Senator from Florida that he can appear before that committee and urge the inclusion of the reclamation of lands of the South through drainage. The meetings were open, witnesses appeared from all over the country, and the Reclamation Service was represented, but there was not a word offered in behalf of the projects to which the Senator has referred. That is the reason, one of the great reasons, the important and vital reason, why the proposition was not considered.

Mr. TRAMMELL. If the Senator wishes to refer to that, I am going to recite a little history in connection with the matter. It was hoped that the West and the South would work in harmony and it was so understood. A bill was prepared in cooperation with certain Representatives of the West. I understood an ex-governor, who was representing the people of the West, was in the conference and prepared the bill. He prepared a measure which covered both the irrigation and the drainage projects. The measure was introduced by my colleague. I supposed that it had the indorsement of the Representatives from the West as well as the South. This gentleman who had prepared the measure was from the West. The idea was that there would be cooperation in support of that measure. Imagine my disappointment when I learned that it had been decided by your committee to drop drainage from the measure and confine the bill only to irrigation.

Other Representatives from the South were misled as well as myself. Mr. President, I have no objection to the projects of the West having the advantage of the legislation proposed in the bill which has been favorably reported. I am not criticizing the fact that Congress has been liberal in dealing with the irrigation projects of the West, but I say now that the drainage projects of the South should be placed upon the same basis as the irrigation projects of the West. With respect, but with earnestness, I propose to oppose the measure for irrigation projects with all the energy that I possess unless our drainage projects of the South are included within the provisions of this measure.

The arid-land projects cost all the way from about $60 to $100 per acre to reclaim the lands and often more than that. They have then the expense of maintaining irrigation following that.

In contrast the drainage projects of the South as a rule cost only from $6 or $8 up to $14 or $15 per acre. Very few of them require a cost of more than $14 or $15 an acre as the outside limit.

The plan proposed by the bill that has been favorably reported is that the Federal Government shall assist in financing the project by issuing Government securities based upon the securities of the irrigation project. The Government could not possibly be any more secure upon an arid land project of the West in underwriting its securities than it could be upon the securities offered by the drainage district of my own State and of other Southern States.

Mr. McNARY. The Senator is entirely mistaken in the features of the bill. The Government is not to loan on securities to these districts. It is not to underwrite their bonds. The Secretary of the Interior, as an agency in the administration of the public lands, certifies to the value of those properties, and whensoever his certificate based upon his judgment is that the lands are worth double the outstanding indebtedness, then the district bonds are offered for sale to the public. In consequence the Government assumes no liability whatsoever. It is a simple expression of judgment through one of the agencies of the Government.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Is it a bunko game or does the Senator expect to get credit merely upon the certificate of the Secretary?

Mr. McNARY. That is a very unfortunate term to use in connection with a great scheme to develop the West to call it a bunko game. I can explain to the Senator, if he can understand the value of property and the nature of securities, that when the Secretary of the Interior certifies that in his judgment the land within an incorporated district is of a value twice the amount of the outstanding bonds, the bonds are then offered for sale. If that is a bunko game, I do not understand it as such.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I did not state the project was a bunko game, but the Senator said that the Federal Government was not going to become liable or assume any responsibility in the matter. Then I asked what is the purpose of handling it through the Federal Government except for the purpose of getting the certificate of the Secretary of the Interior? The certificate of the Secretary of the Interior then becomes the only security that the purchaser of the bonds is to receive.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President—

Mr. McCUMBER. Will the Senator yield to me for one moment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. TRAMMELL. I yield, first, to the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. McNARY. The certificate of the Secretary of the Interior has nothing whatsoever to do with the matter save to inform the public who desire to invest that, in his judgment, the property within a certain district is worth double the value of the outstanding bonds. If the Senator had read the bill, he would know that the Government is asked to advance to the reclamation fund a sum of money which is then used in the development of projects and the construction of works. In order to constitute it a revolving fund, naturally when a considerable sum is available it is provided by this simple plan of the sale of district bonds, so that, in the opinion of those who have given the matter study, an appropriation of $250,000,000 in a period of 20 years would amount to over $1,000,000,000. That indicates the revolving character of the fund. The Government assumes no liability whatsoever, and the protection to the investing public is the value of the land as compared with outstanding indebtedness of the district.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Then, Mr. President, I should think that the Senator from Oregon and the other members of the committee would certainly be willing to extend similar assistance to the drainage projects of the country. If it does not involve the Federal Government financially, why should the plan be withheld from the drainage projects?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I can explain that.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Why should it be withheld from the reclamation projects of the South when the Government is not jeopardizing its own interest in the least?

Mr. McNARY. Personally I should have no objection to that; I do not know that there is any Senator from the West who has, but there are two different schemes involved. The Western States, through long experience with irrigation, have, by their legislatures, adopted certain district organizations. Those are not in existence in the South. This bill deals with those entities, those local organizations. The impounding of the water back in the ravines of the mountains presents quite a different engineering problem from digging ditches in the South, though it may be feasible to include them. We in the West have been desirous of helping the West and the South and are willing to join the southern Senators on some scheme which will secure a drainage system. I think there is no difference between the Senator from Florida and the Senator from Oregon on the general proposition of the development of the South and West.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I very much appreciate the good will which has been expressed by my friend from Oregon, and I hope that he will permit us to travel along together; that he will permit us to amend the bill so as to include the drainage projects of the whole country, including those of the South.

Mr. JONES of Washington and Mr. McCUMBER addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. TRAMMELL. I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. JONES of Washington. As one Senator who is very much interested in the reclamation of land in the West, and who has also always been interested in the subject in which the Senator from Florida is interested, I wish to suggest to the Senator that he prepare and introduce a bill providing for the reclamation of swamp lands and let it come before the committee. Should he do so, I want to assure him that the committee will give it very careful consideration, and that he will have all of the support that I can possibly give to a proposition which I think is fair and just and reasonable. However, I have all the time been opposed to coupling the two propositions together, for they are on an entirely different basis, and they ought to be considered in a different way. I am satisfied that the Senator from Florida will get somewhere if he will follow the course which I have just suggested; that he will find the Senator from Washington and the Senator from Oregon and other western Senators ready to cooperate with him in a plan that they think will be feasible.

The conditions, as the Senator from Oregon has said, with reference to arid lands are entirely different from what they are with reference to swamp lands. There are different problems connected with the enforcement of the law. It is very easy to enforce the payment for the use of water on arid lands. All one has to do is to tell the user, "If you do not pay up, the water will be shut off"; but when the land is once drained it is drained, and that is all there is to it. We can not then enforce the payment by the very effective method which may be employed under irrigation projects.

So, in the utmost sympathy with what the Senator from Florida would like to do, I make this suggestion. I think that he will find a very friendly feeling in the committee on the proposition looking toward the reclamation of swamp lands without complicating the problem with arid lands. The arid land proposition was initiated a long time ago, and it is on a going basis. As I have said, if the Senator will bring on his proposition relative to swamp lands in a separate measure, I think he will sooner get it on a going basis in that way.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I am very glad to have these assurances from the Senator from Washington, who is a member of the committee. Though, of course, I have felt all along that this proposition should go in the same measure which covers the reclamation projects, I should be very much pleased if we can not accomplish that if we may accomplish it in a separate and distinct measure embracing only the swamp and overflowed lands.

So far as the policy of the law is concerned, my impression is that it should be written into the same statute. Of course, the question of the administration of the law, whether we are dealing with the particular engineering problem in an irrigation project or are dealing with another engineering problem in a drainage project, is still merely a matter of administration. Those same questions of difference in the matter of administration are going to apply regardless of whether we have one statute or have two governing the subject.

Take the pending bill. It would not require more than a dozen words written into the pending bill to make it applicable to the drainage projects of the South. There are only a few places in the bill where we should have to insert the word "drainage."

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. TRAMMELL. I should like very much to conclude, but I do not wish to be discourteous. I do not wish, however, to yield for a speech.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator spoke of "the pending bill." I presume he means not the pending bill but the bill which is now being considered by the Senate.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I was referring to the bill in reference to the reclamation question.

Mr. McCUMBER. All I wish to do is to call the Senator's attention to the fact that the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BALL] had hoped to get up his rent bill this afternoon and to dispose of it; and, as other Senators are now discussing the reclamation scheme rather than the amendment of the Senator from Florida to this particular bill, I ask if we can not dispose of this bill and let the Senator from Delaware then bring up his measure?

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, of course I do not wish to interfere with the Senator from Delaware, but I have found from four years' experience in the United States Senate that if a Senator waits until a measure is pending for the opportunity to make a speech upon that specific measure he often fails to get the opportunity. I have to-day indulged to some extent in making a speech upon a measure that was not pending, but in doing so I have merely followed the example set by a great many of my distinguished colleagues upon other occasions, some of them having occupied one, two, three, four, or five hours. I repeat, however, that I do not wish to interfere with the measure which the Senator from Delaware desires to call up. I merely wanted to make these remarks upon the question of having the drainage projects of the South given fair consideration by the committee dealing with the subject, and to urge that when we pass further legislation with reference to the reclamation question the drainage of the overflowed lands of the South should also be included within its provisions.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I desire to say just a word or two concerning the amendment which I was tempted to submit because of the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida. I appreciate the fact that the question which is before us is somewhat different from the subject presented in my substitute. This subject is one of tremendous importance; it involves a radical change in a governmental policy, and undoubtedly affects one of the important departments of the Government besides affecting millions of acres of land. The question is so big that it deserves the fullest consideration at the hands of the Senate. I can not hope within the limited time that is permitted for the discussion of the bill this afternoon to have a full and fair presentation of the measure which I have offered. I desired, however, to bring it to the attention of the Senate, and I wish to give notice that at an early date I shall urge the passage of this very important bill. In the interest of expediting the pending bill I withdraw the amendment to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the amendment to the amendment is withdrawn. The question recurs upon the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I move to amend the bill on page 1, line 7, by striking out the word "ten" and inserting the word "sixty."

Mr. McCUMBER. I have no objection to that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 1, line 7, it is proposed to strike out the word "ten" and insert the word "sixty," so as to read "upon sixty days' notice."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McNARY. On page 1, line 9, I move that the word "materially" be eliminated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 1, line 9, after the word "fall," it is proposed to strike out the word "materially," so as to read:

Whenever the receipts of such land office fall below the maximum amount.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. McNARY. In lines 9 and 10, on the same page, after the word "the," I move to strike out the words "maximum amount provided by law" and insert "the sum of $4,000 per annum."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 1, lines 9 and 10, it is proposed to strike out the words "maximum amount provided by law" and insert the words "the sum of $4,000 per annum," so that it will read:

Whenever the receipts of such land office fall below the sum of $4,000 per annum for compensation for both register and receiver.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the amendment?

Mr. KING. I should like to ask the Senator from Oregon the reason for the amendment. It seems to me that the bill as originally drawn is better than it would be if the amendment proposed were agreed to.

Mr. McNARY. I have this reason in mind I will say to the Senator from Utah: The bill now reads:

Whenever the receipts of such land office fall materially below the maximum amount provided by law for compensation for both register and receiver.

That would leave to the caprice or whim of some administrator to determine what was a material falling off in the receipts. I want a specific amount named, so that for the two offices, whenever the fees aggregate less than $4,000, there shall be abolished by the President the receiver's office.

Mr. KING. If I had my way, I would place no limitation whatever upon the Executive. I think the President of the United States ought to have the power to abolish one of the offices and to consolidate regardless of the fees which may be received.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the amendment?

Mr. KING. I object to it. I should like to have a vote on the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oregon. [Putting the question.] The ayes seem to have it.

Mr. KING. I ask for a division.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A division is called for.

Mr. McCUMBER. I will say to the Senator from Utah that I think it is immaterial; the matter can be adjusted between the two Houses later.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I withdraw the call for a division.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McNARY. On page 2 I offer an amendment striking out, in line 1, the word "ten" and inserting the word "sixty."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 2, line 1, it is proposed to strike out the word "ten" and insert the word "sixty," so that, if amended, it will read "within sixty days."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to ask the chairman of the committee or the Senator having the bill in charge, why he did not draft the bill upon the theory that the President would have unlimited authority to consolidate those two offices whenever he saw fit?

Mr. McCUMBER. I thought that after allowing the little sum of $500 only as salary to each officer, as long as the business was such that they could draw from the commissions enough to make that amount $2,500 greater for each of them, there was business enough for both a register and a receiver, and that they ought not to be consolidated unless the amount of commissions, and so forth, was so low that it would not more than pay for one receiver and possibly a clerk.

Mr. KING. I think it is a mistake to base the question of consolidation upon the fees. I think that if we are attempting economies we ought to go as far as we reasonably can. I regret very much that the committee did not make the bill broader and effectuate greater economies than this bill will permit.

Mr. McCUMBER. It would be hardly economy, because if we should reduce the force to simply the register instead of the register and receiver, and thereby save, we will say, $3,000, it would have to be made up in clerks, maybe one or two clerks, who would be required to do the work; so, to say the least, there would be only a few hundred dollars difference.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXTENSION OF RENTS ACT.

Mr. BALL. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of S. 2131, Order of Business No. 182.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Delaware yield to me?

Mr. BALL. In a moment.

Mr. HEFLIN. I wish to ask for concurrence in a House amendment to a bill that has already passed the Senate and to which there is no objection.

Mr. BALL. I will yield in just a moment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware declines to yield at this time.

Mr. BALL. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of S. 2131.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2131) to extend for the period of seven months the provisions of Title II of the food control and the District of Columbia rents act, approved October 22, 1919, and for other purposes.

Mr. BALL. I now yield to the Senator from Alabama.

MAJ. FRANCIS M. MADDOX, UNITED STATES ARMY.

Mr. HEFLIN. I ask that the Presiding Officer lay before the Senate H. R. 6407. It is a bill for the relief of Maj. Francis M. Maddox.

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator if this is merely to make a report or—

Mr. HEFLIN. It will not take a half minute. A like bill passed the Senate, and the House made some changes, reducing the amount $114, so we will save that much money by the action of the House.

I ask the Presiding Officer to lay this bill before the Senate, and ask that the House bill be passed. It will not take more than a second. I ask that the other bill be temporarily laid aside.

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, if there is any discussion on this bill, I must object.

Mr. HEFLIN. There will be no discussion. This bill has been unanimously reported by the Committee on Claims and is indorsed by the Secretary of War.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I do not understand that this is an amendment to the Senate bill.

Mr. HEFLIN. My bill passed the Senate, and the Member of the House from the district in which Maj. Maddox lived in Alabama had the House bill passed, as I understand, reducing the amount $114, which I accept; and I ask that we agree to the House measure.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The Senator wants to have the House measure passed now without having it referred to a committee?

Mr. HEFLIN. Oh, no; it has been referred to the Committee on Claims, and unanimously reported back by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. SPENCER].

Mr. JONES of Washington. That is, the House bill has been reported back?

Mr. HEFLIN. The House bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Alabama state when that was done?

Mr. HEFLIN. It is the Order of Business, Senate Calendar, 253. It was done two or three days ago, and on yesterday afternoon I tried to get this measure up. The Senator from Utah [Mr. SMITH] asked me at that time to let it go over until to-day, and he was satisfied that there would be no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill mentioned by the Senator from Alabama. The Chair hears none.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 6407) for the relief of Maj. Francis M. Maddox, United States Army.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LENROOT. Has the bill been read?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the bill.

The reading clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to credit the accounts of Maj. Louis C. Wilson, Quartermaster Corps, United States Army, the sum of $1,875.14, to be paid Maj. Francis M. Maddox, Fourth Regiment Alabama National Guard, for pay, commutation of quarters, light, heat, and longevity pay, and for services rendered while detailed for duty as assistant to the Chief of the Militia Bureau, War Department, Washington, D. C., from June 4, 1920, to September 30, 1920, inclusive.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President—

Mr. HEFLIN. I want to say that the Secretary of War—

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin has the floor.

Mr. LENROOT. Has this passed beyond the stage of objection?

Mr. HEFLIN. Yes, sir; it is before the Senate.

Mr. LENROOT. I did not so understand.

Mr. HEFLIN. The Secretary of War says that—

Mr. LENROOT. I think I have the floor.

Mr. HEFLIN. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. LENROOT. No; I will not. Mr. President, I understand that it is desired to have an executive session early this afternoon. It is also very desirable to dispose of this bill. If there were to be no debate whatever, I would not object.

Mr. HEFLIN. There will not be any.

Mr. LENROOT. I gather that the Senator from Alabama wants to make a statement.

Mr. HEFLIN. Oh, no.

Mr. LENROOT. I do object, Mr. President.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I submit that the Senator from Wisconsin can not now object. Unanimous consent has been granted, and the bill has been laid before the Senate—

Mr. BALL. Mr. President—

Mr. HEFLIN. And I do not propose that the Senator from Wisconsin shall deny an American soldier the pay to which he is entitled, and to which the Secretary of War says he is entitled. I wanted to explain the bill to him.

Mr. BALL. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama will please recollect that the Chair recognized the Senator from Delaware, who yielded to the Senator from Alabama for a special purpose.

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, I yielded the floor for the bill, with the understanding that there would be no discussion.

Mr. HEFLIN. I ask for a vote on it, Mr. President. I ask that right and justice be done to this soldier. The Secretary of War says that it is proper, and I ask for a vote.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, if it had not been for the unwarranted statement of the Senator from Alabama, in view of his last statement, I would have been tempted to withdraw my objection. I will not permit the Senator from Alabama to take advantage of a situation by the statement that he has just made. I do object.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I submit again that the Senator from Wisconsin can not object. The matter has been submitted to this body, and I am asking for a vote on it, in spite of any objection the Senator from Wisconsin may make.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama will allow the Chair to state that the Senator from Delaware had the floor.

Mr. BALL. The Senator from Alabama can not discuss this measure, because he promised that there would be no discussion upon it.

Mr. HEFLIN. I am asking for a vote now, Mr. President.

Mr. WILLIS. I demand the regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The regular order is called for.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I have no interest in this matter; but unanimous consent was asked for and granted to consider this bill. I have no interest in the matter, but I do think—and I ask that the record be read—that the Chair, as the Chair's duty was, plainly put the request, and there was no objection to the present consideration of this bill. I do not even know what it is and I do not care.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understood that unanimous consent was granted upon the idea that there would be no delay and no debate.

Mr. ASHURST. That is true.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Chair is in error about it, he will be very glad to be corrected; but the Chair's understanding was that the Senator from Delaware gave way upon the express condition that there would be no delay and no debate.

Mr. HEFLIN. That is a fact, Mr. President. Then some Senator asked me, after consent had been granted, what the bill was, and I explained briefly what it was, and we were about to vote on it. It had already been submitted, consent had been given, and then the Senator from Wisconsin objected.

I ask for a vote upon the bill.

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, I yielded the floor for the bill with the understanding and with the promise from the Senator from Alabama that there was to be no discussion. Now, I do not yield the floor for a discussion upon his bill.

Mr. HEFLIN. I am asking for a vote if we can have it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair stated that, and the Senator from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS] called for the regular order. As far as the Chair understands the situation, that gives the floor to the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I ask for a vote upon the bill at this time.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I want to give notice to the Senator from Alabama that under the situation that has arisen there will be some debate upon the bill before it is voted upon.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I serve notice, then, that we will not vote on the Ball bill this afternoon if I have to speak several hours.

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, it is well for us to know the reasons for the opposition to the Ball bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is simply trying to act with perfect fairness in the matter.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I submit that consent was given, and that the bill was laid before the Senate, and we were about to vote on it, and we had not consumed four minutes altogether when the Senator from Wisconsin interposed an objection. I do not know why he wanted to do so, unless he does not want the American soldier treated fairly and justly; but he did interpose an objection. The matter, however, was before the Senate. It is now before this body, and I now ask that this body vote on it and do justice by this American soldier.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. But the regular order has been demanded; and the regular order, under the recognition of the Chair, is the consideration of the bill of the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. BALL. Senate bill 2131.

Mr. HEFLIN. Does the Senator from Delaware insist on that?

Mr. BALL. I ask for a vote.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware demands a vote on his bill.

Mr. HEFLIN. On his bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is, the rent bill.

Mr. HEFLIN. Oh, well, we shall have a lot of discussion on that bill. I have a speech I want to make on another subject. I suggest the absence of a quorum to start with. I assure the Senator from Wisconsin that there are some on this side of the Chamber who will insist upon their rights.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Brandeggee	Capper	Fletcher
Ball	Broussard	Curtis	Glass
Borah	Bursum	Ernst	Hale

Harrison	Lenroot	Pittman	Swanson
Hefflin	Lodge	Poindexter	Townsend
Hitchcock	McCumber	Pomerene	Trammell
Johnson	McKellar	Ransdell	Wadsworth
Jones, N. Mex.	McNary	Sheppard	Warren
Jones, Wash.	Nelson	Shortridge	Watson, Ga.
Kellogg	New	Simmons	Weller
Kendrick	Nicholson	Smith	Williams
Keyes	Norbeck	Spencer	Willis
King	Oddie	Stanfield
Knox	Overman	Sterling
Ladd	Phipps	Sutherland

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to announce the absence of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE], the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON], the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM], and the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. McLEAN], who are in attendance on a meeting of the Committee on Finance.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-seven Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, I renew my motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 2131.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That motion has already been agreed to, and, as the Chair understood the Senator from Delaware, he yielded conditionally, for a short space of time—he said momentarily—to the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN].

Mr. BALL. Provided there should be no discussion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. As the Chair said, it was conditional, with the proviso that there was to be no debate, no consumption of time. That is as the Chair understood it.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, President Harding, in his speech accepting the nomination for the Presidency, used these words:

I believe the Government should make its Liberty and Victory bonds worth all its patriotic citizens paid in purchasing them.

Mr. HEFLIN. If the Senator from Texas will yield to me, I understand the Presiding Officer was about to put my proposition to take a vote on the bill I called up.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama is mistaken. The Chair recognized the Senator from Texas to discuss the bill which is before the Senate.

Mr. HEFLIN. Very well. I will take the floor in my own time when he has concluded.

Mr. HARRISON. Will the Senator from Texas yield for a question?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I yield.

Mr. HARRISON. There seems to be a controversy about this bill. I understand the Senator is to speak on the proposition. May I ask the Senator from Delaware, in the time of the Senator from Texas, if he would have any objection to the Senate passing the bill offered by the Senator from Alabama if there is no discussion of it, either by himself or anyone else? The Senator from Wisconsin made an objection a while ago, but I am sure he did not know just what the bill contained; he so stated.

Mr. BALL. As I told the Senator from Alabama, I would not object, but I can not permit a bill to be presented and to be discussed all afternoon, taking up the time which should be taken on this bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is practically the statement made by the Senator from Delaware before.

Mr. BALL. But I want the Senator from Alabama to understand that I do not yield for the presentation of a report which will require discussion.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I never consume the time of this body objecting to Senators bringing up meritorious measures. I suppose I object fewer times than any other Senator in this body, and when I do bring up a measure in the interest of an American soldier I do not want to be treated discourteously or waved off by some Senator who will not permit me to read a line as to what the Secretary of War said as to the necessity of a bill that I am seeking to have passed by the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware has yielded to the Senator from Alabama, and the Chair is ready now to put the question on the bill.

Mr. HEFLIN. I ask for a vote on it.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I yield for that purpose. I have the floor, and I yield for that purpose.

Mr. LENROOT. I want to state to the Senator from Alabama that I will have no objection to the Senate taking up his bill following the conclusion of the consideration of the bill that is pending in the Senate. But in view of the statement of the Senator from Alabama I wish to say that if it is taken up at this time there will be some debate upon it, and it rests with the Senator from Alabama as to whether he will keep his agreement with the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, in view of the statement of the Senator from Wisconsin I must occupy the floor for the balance of the day when the Senator from Texas is through, and I must have a quorum while I occupy the floor.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I want to pour a little oil on the troubled waters. Will not the Senator from Alabama withdraw the remark he made a while ago?

Mr. HEFLIN. I am willing to withdraw what passed between the Senator from Wisconsin and myself.

Mr. ASHURST. I hope the Senator will strike his remarks out of the RECORD and that we can pass the bill without objection.

Mr. HEFLIN. If we can vote on my bill, as far as I am concerned—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will have to ask Senators to come to order.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President—

Mr. SHEPPARD. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. WILLIS. I respectfully call for the regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair so understood the Senator from Ohio to request, and the regular order is the consideration of the bill in charge of the Senator from Delaware, and upon that bill the Senator from Texas has the floor and is proceeding to address the Senate.

ENLARGEMENT OF POSTAL SAVINGS BANK.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, permit me to say that President Harding in his speech accepting the nomination for the Presidency used these words:

I believe the Government should make its Liberty and Victory bonds worth all its patriotic citizens paid in purchasing them.

A bill is now before a Senate committee which when enacted will, in my judgment, advance these bonds toward par, to par, or to a premium within six months by reason of the investment it authorizes for postal bank funds in such bonds. I refer to the bill S. 2033, which I introduced on June 10, 1921, for the purpose of increasing the utility of the postal savings bank, of encouraging savings among the people, and of securing the largest returns for such savings consistent with adequate security. The short title of the bill is "The industrial savings act." I have presented practically the same measure in the two Congresses immediately preceding this.

The advancement of Liberty bonds to par is not the chief object of this bill, however, but only an incidental result. I now desire briefly to outline the provisions of the bill.

The industrial savings act has for its main purpose the reformation and unshackling of the postal savings bank, which we have had since January 1, 1911.

Every other savings bank in the world makes at least the pretense of serving depositors honestly and of getting for them the largest returns consistent with safety and availability.

The postal savings bank has been shackled by the law limiting interest returns for depositors to 2 per cent. It is the statement of Mr. Hays, the present Postmaster General, that in practice this return is less than  $1\frac{1}{2}$  per cent. Furthermore, the present law permits the funds now in the postal savings bank to be loaned to banks at  $2\frac{1}{2}$  per cent, the banks loaning it to the Government and the people at anywhere from two to four and five times that rate, and yet at no time has the market price for money on the solidest security been less than  $3\frac{1}{2}$  to 4 per cent, and to-day, as everyone knows, is  $6\frac{1}{2}$  to 8 and 9 per cent.

Mr. SMITH. What does the Government pay on these postal savings? What is the limitation?

Mr. SHEPPARD. The limitation under the law is 2 per cent, but the actual return is less than  $1\frac{1}{2}$  per cent.

Mr. SMITH. That is, to the depositors?

Mr. SHEPPARD. To the depositors. The deposits are lent to the banks at  $2\frac{1}{2}$  per cent and the banks lend it back to the Government and also to the people at two, three, and even five times that rate.

Mr. SMITH. Does the law under which these banks are created and operated limit the disposition and use which the custodians of these deposits may make of them?

Mr. SHEPPARD. No, Senator; the banks may lend them at any rate they can get, and the Senator knows that their rates are very high in many instances.

One and a half per cent! This the Government's magnificent reward for labor and thrift! This the return at present to postal bank depositors!

The principal provisions of the industrial savings act are as follows:

First. The postal savings bank shall be open and accessible to all without limit as to amounts that may be deposited.

Second. These deposits shall be loaned at the market price for money on security that is good beyond question. This should make, in these times, the net income for deposits at least 6 per cent, gradually diminishing to 5 or less as world prosperity returns.

Third. Four per cent semiannual compound interest will go directly to depositors.

Fourth. The balance of the profit will be paid twice a year into the United States Treasury, thus making possible the reduction of taxes and thereby benefiting the whole citizenship, including, of course, the depositors.

Fifth. Every bank and banking institution in the United States in good standing may become agents for the postal savings bank, both to receive deposits and to make loans, receiving for such service a small commission on both deposits and loans.

The postal savings bank will thus become the greatest and strongest bank in the world, one vast national reservoir of the people's savings, available for loans to all who furnish proper security.

There is every reason to believe that with this bill in operation there will be scores of millions of depositors, instead of half a million as at present, with deposits exceeding thirty billions instead of one hundred and fifty-five millions, as is now the case.

The greatest need of the time is for new capital. A principal source of new capital is the savings of the people that remain outside the banks, unmobilized for business and trade and economic progress in general. The existing banking system, admirable as it is, has failed to attract some three billions of savings that lie idle or unorganized while prosperity lags and development waits. If the present postal savings bank, with its restrictions and limitations, has been able to attract $155,000,000 and a half million depositors, it is hardly possible to measure its possibilities with these shackles removed.

At a hearing accorded me by a subcommittee of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads a few days ago, a subcommittee composed of Senators HARRELD, ODDIE, and WALSH of Massachusetts, I went into this measure at greater length, taking it up section by section. I ask to have my statement at that time included as a part of my remarks, together with a statement by Postmaster General Hays on the same subject.

There being no objection, the statements referred to were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT OF SENATOR MORRIS SHEPPARD, OF TEXAS.

"Mr. SHEPPARD. Our Nation now has a financial system with excellent features and qualities—the gold standard, a varied and elastic paper currency, every dollar of which is maintained on a parity with gold. None of these features and qualities is it purposed to alter or endanger in the slightest degree by my bill (S. 2033) to increase the utility of the postal savings bank, and so forth.

"A part of this financial system, now quite negligible in importance because of small magnitude and because of practical non-use, is the postal savings bank.

"Every other savings bank in the world makes the pretense, at least, of securing for depositors the largest practicable return for their money consistent with absolute security and perfect availability. Our postal savings bank is shackled by the opposite rule—it attempts to get money from depositors for the least interest possible.

"Since its organization the postal savings bank has had several million depositors, almost entirely limited to poor but industrious and provident, unadvised, timid foreigners; so limited by the fact that very few well-informed people will make deposits under existing conditions. The amount now on deposit in the postal savings bank is about $155,000,000, an unimportant sum when compared with the Nation's bank resources of over $54,000,000,000.

"Why this petty showing?

"Because depositors have been allowed the ridiculous, not to say wicked, rate of 2 per cent interest. Even this pitiful, disgraceful rate has been coupled with such unreasonable restrictions that the aggregate average payment of interest, as has been shown by Mr. Hays and Mr. Hoover, has been less than  $1\frac{1}{2}$  per cent—this the Nation's reward for 'thrift and saving' when at no time has the average market price for money on the best possible security been under 4 per cent. Now the market price is  $6\frac{1}{2}$  to 8 per cent, paid, as one can see by almost any daily paper, for loans to the strongest, richest oil companies, the great meat companies, the multimillionaire farm-machinery manufacturers, to the great semimonopolists of the manufacturing and commercial world generally, who, of course, make good profits, even when borrowing at these rates, by selling their productions to the millions of smaller producers and consumers, including the postal-bank depositors, who are getting less than 1½ per cent for their hard-earned savings while paying 10 to possibly 20 or 50 per cent in the cost of the commodities they eat, drink, and wear.

"And what is done with these savings in the postal bank, secured at so low a rate because of depositors' confidence in the United States Government, which backs the postal bank? Instead of giving the United States the benefit of the money, the benefit of this 1½ per cent money, 95 per cent of it is turned over to bankers for 2½ per cent interest—and the bankers loan it to the United States for 4½ to 6, or loan it, possibly, to farmers or others for productive purposes at a still higher rate, plus commissions to somebody.

"This very day the United States is paying as much as 5½ per cent interest to bankers and others—and most of the Nation's promises to pay are hawked in the market at a disgraceful discount—whereas our petty postal savings bank, if unshackled, as proposed in the bill now presented, will secure the Government practically unlimited credit at a cost of approximately 4 per cent within a few months' time.

"Is 1½ per cent reward for industry, thrift, and saving a 'square deal'? If technically 'honest,' is it honorable?

"Shall you and I 'stand by consenting,' like Saul at Stephen's stoning, while such wrong is done? And if a bank accepts the benefit of this '2½ per cent money,' does it not more than 'hold the clothes of them that stoned'? Does it not hold some of the contents of the clothes of them that are stoned?

"And what about the wrong and economic folly of excluding from any use of the postal savings bank the scores of millions of intelligent, thrifty, patriotic Americans by limiting interest to 2 per cent, and by limiting the right to deposit at all, instead of inviting deposits 'without limit,' as commercial banks always do? 'Limit 2 per cent' when the market price for money is from three to five times two!

"The bill before us amends the law relating to the postal savings bank in the interest of justice to depositors, also in the interest of farmers and other small industrial borrowers of money, and in the interest of the Nation at large.

"I have introduced a bill similar to this in the two preceding Congresses, and have reintroduced it in this Congress in slightly amended form. With your permission, I shall proceed to analyze it section by section. The first two sections are as follows:

"Be it enacted, etc., That the short title of this act shall be The Industrial Savings Act.

"SEC. 2. That all the members of the President's Cabinet shall, ex officio, constitute a board of trustees for the administration of this act, hereinafter to be referred to as the board.

"These officials broadly represent all the basic economic interests of the Nation. They are appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate. They guide and shape the policy of the bank established by this bill within the very definite limits which it provides. They will not have time for the work in detail, but they will fashion general policies, choose and supervise competent heads and principal employees, who will do the work under the safe, businesslike rules of the Civil Service Commission.

"SEC. 3. That for the proper and efficient organization and conduct of the business of the board it shall appoint under the rules of the Civil Service Commission a first chief, a second chief, and a third chief, having such powers and duties as the board may designate; also such other assistants, attorneys, and other employees as the board may consider necessary. The compensation of the persons so appointed and other expenses of operation under this act shall be such as the board may authorize and shall be paid from the profits of the postal savings bank.

"This section provides that expense of operation shall be paid from the profits of the bank by depositors and borrowers instead of being taken from the pockets of taxpayers by appropriations from the Treasury. The wisdom and fairness of this would seem to be beyond question.

"SEC. 4. That the board shall, as soon as possible, take over the control of the existing postal savings bank, the details of its administration to continue in connection with the post offices throughout the country under the direct supervision of the Postmaster General acting for the board.

"SEC. 5. That as soon as arrangements can be made therefor every post office, postmaster, and all letter carriers and other post-office employees shall hereafter be made to serve the people through the postal savings bank as they now serve them for letters, money orders, registered letters, and parcel post, without limitation as to amount of deposits, as letters and parcels are without limitation, the manner of such service being as in this act provided, and all limitations on the amount of deposits in the postal savings bank are hereby removed.

"The Post Office Department is already one of the most enormous, best-organized, best-equipped, and best-conducted business plants in the world. In connection with the enlarged postal savings bank it is proposed almost to double, or more than double, its utility at an increase of expense remarkably small when results are considered. This act will establish within the Post Office Department the largest, strongest, and most useful financial institution in the world.

"There is to be no limitation as to the amount anyone may deposit. Letter carriers, rural and city, may accept deposits for the postal savings bank and deliver receipts as they accept and deliver letters, money orders, and parcels. Also they may, if desired, take certificates of deposit and checks to the bank and return the proceeds to the owner. They are agents both of the bank and of the people. What a service this will be to the masses of the people, who need not leave their homes or places of business in order to deposit their savings or draw funds as they may need them. The Government thus maintains a perpetual open door to thrift and economy, the great permanent foundation of general prosperity. See also section 17.

"Every existing bank in the United States in good standing, as well as every post office and letter carrier, may receive deposits and make payments, and the banks may make loans, for the postal savings bank, as provided further on in this bill.

"According to available statistics, taking our population in 1920, and the deposits in the existing savings banks of the State of Connecticut (which are far from being 'unshackled' as here provided), as a basis of comparison, the Nation would have in the postal savings bank over 54,000,000 depositors (instead of a beggarly 500,000, as now) and over $27,000,000,000 deposits instead of only about $155,000,000, as now.

"These big figures are, in fact, probably less than half as large as should be the reality, for reasons which will appear further on.

"Note incidentally that here is legitimate 'Government guaranty of deposits,' simply because the United States is 'custodian,' as it is for money-order money. There are no runs on the postal savings bank 'for fear,' as is possible with all other banks.

"As the business of the post offices will be largely increased, increased ability, labor, and efficiency of postmasters and employees will naturally be required, and their compensation will naturally be largely increased. In county seats generally, and in larger cities especially, men of large caliber—even bankers—will be required or desirable.

"SEC. 6. That of the funds which are now or may hereafter be deposited in the postal savings bank any portion thereof may, in the discretion of the board, be invested in the bonds of the United States bought in the open market at the lowest obtainable price or bought at such price from the Treasurer of the United States. Any portion of said bonds may, in the discretion of the board, be sold in the open market at the highest obtainable price or sold to the United States Treasury at such price.

"This section affords financial preparedness for the Nation on a scale hitherto unparalleled. The investment in United States bonds is an opportunity, not a requirement. The postal savings bank will naturally tend to absorb all available United States bonds on the market, and thus tend to reduce the interest rate the United States will have to pay for loans. The right to sell any portion of the bank's United States bonds in case of need provides a liquid reserve power that is not equaled in the financial world, since the bonds of the United States have a world market well-nigh without limit.

"While the sale of United States bonds will be, as now, open to individual buyers, and such sale should be in amounts of billions of dollars, it is here contemplated that the great mass of small buyers will prefer that their own postal savings bank shall buy and hold the United States bonds for them, their personal individual holdings being certificates of deposit in the postal savings bank, which are always instantly available at par (as deposits in solvent banks always are available) and which pay depositors approximately the same rate of interest as the United States bonds.

"Indeed certificates of deposit in the postal savings bank might earn depositors even higher rates of interest than do the United States bonds, because much of the bank deposits, being loaned in the business world for any legitimate use on unquestionable security, will command higher rates of interest than the United States Government need or should pay.

"But, for the sake of expediency, to avoid possible injurious competition with existing savings and commercial banks, earnings of depositors are limited to 4 per cent, any profits of the postal bank above that being turned into the United States Treasury, thereby reducing taxation for these same depositors and for the rest of the American people.

"SEC. 7. That no other investment of the funds deposited shall be made, but, with the exception of a working reserve the amount of which shall be determined by the board, the balance of the funds shall be loaned at the highest obtainable rate of interest for such purpose and use only as rules and regulations of the board may determine, within the scope of this act, on what, in the discretion of the board, is considered adequate security, in manner as follows and as in this act further provided:

"(a) Preference shall be given—
 "(1) To small loans over large loans.
 "(2) To short-time loans over long-time loans.
 "(3) Loans adequately secured by readily marketable collateral over loans on real estate or other less readily marketable security.

"(b) In accordance with the above, the board shall, from time to time, fix the rate of interest to be charged, according to the supply of and demand for loanable funds, the profit and security of the depositors being the basis of decision.

"(c) The borrower shall always be required to protect the market value of his collateral, as is customary with other banks making similar loans, either reducing the loan or providing additional security, in case of falling market.

"SEC. 8. That the board shall give clear and ample publicity to its rulings as to character of securities required for loans and the terms of such loans, under the following limitations:

"(a) Loans not to exceed 95 per cent of the market value of United States bonds or the bonds of States.

"(b) Not to exceed 90 per cent of the market value of such other securities as are now admissible investments under the existing laws of New York or Massachusetts for savings banks, or as are estimated by the Industrial Savings Board as of equivalent good standing.

"(c) Not to exceed 85 per cent of the market value of wheat, cotton, or other nonperishable products, so called, in safe, adequately insured public storage, under regulations as the board may prescribe.

"(d) Loans against marketable collateral shall be made at any county seat postal savings bank, or at postal banks in larger cities, as designated by the board and as provided for under section 15 of this act, in accordance with rules and regulations made by the board.

"Sections 7 and 8 contain conservative and practical provisions insuring the safe and proper conduct of the bank. The borrower must protect the market value of his collateral, and no collateral is accepted at its full market value. All borrowers are on an equal footing—the banker, the merchant, the farmer, the millionaire, the man of limited means. If any preference is shown at all, it is to the small loan over the large one. The farmer is enabled to borrow money on nonperishable products, properly stored, to the extent of 85 per cent of their value. The banker is allowed a small brokerage in return for useful service in negotiating and guaranteeing the loans he makes, as provided elsewhere.

"No other investments shall be made, etc. The bank is to take no risks on rise or fall of market prices or securities or commodities other than bonds of the United States and those of the States. It will loan only against good security, the borrower taking all market risks.

"The laws of New York and Massachusetts are referred to merely as examples of laws defining security. All the provisions of these laws may not be found applicable to the postal savings bank, especially those relating to local bonds. The savings bank laws of all the States and of foreign countries should be studied and their best features adopted and covered by rulings of the board.

"SEC. 9. That not to exceed 50 per cent of the deposits in the postal savings bank may be loaned for such length of time as the board may specify in its regulations, and with or without amortization payments, as the borrower may prefer, on unencumbered real estate to an amount not to exceed one-half the appraised value in States and Territories where laws for the protection of creditors are by the board deemed adequate and fair, in manner as follows:

"(a) Through any national bank, or other incorporated bank, or corporation whose business is dealing in or guaranteeing real estate mortgages and which is subject to the examination and control of the United States Treasury or of the banking department of any State which, in the estimation of the board, adequately protects depositors, loans may be made to an amount at one time outstanding not to exceed ten times the capital and surplus of bank or corporation, which shall be required to guarantee the prompt payment of the principal and interest of the loans made through said bank or corporation.

"(b) Said bank or corporation shall be entitled to a commission of 5 per cent of the interest paid on such loan by the borrower, or such less per cent as the board may prescribe, and said borrower shall not be subject to any other charge except the necessary expense of examination of title and drawing papers, which charge may be fixed by rules of the board, all terms and commissions to be uniform throughout the United States.

"Note that loans on real estate are to be made through banks and other financial institutions of established standing which guarantee principal and interest for a small commission on the interest paid. The borrower pays the expense of examining title, drawing papers, etc. Savings banks generally lend more than 50 per cent of their deposits on real estate, while building and loan associations invest in this way nearer 100 per cent of their funds. The banks and other institutions through which real estate loans may be made have established machinery and facilities for making loans. They have the necessary knowledge of local conditions and personalities. Self-interest will prevent them from making excessive or risky loans, and they can probably do this business at less expense than that with which the postal bank could itself organize and conduct a safe direct loan department. If they are compelled to foreclose, they will be entitled to such costs and fees as the courts allow.

"The commission in the great cities allowed agents for collecting rents is from 1 to 5 per cent of the rent—commonly 2 per cent for large buildings. The monthly collection of rents is certainly more onerous and expensive than the collection of interest on mortgages once or twice a year. Interest is the rent of money. The commission to the bank guaranteeing the loan, runs during the life of the loan and is payable annually.

"Let us illustrate. A bank with $100,000 of capital will first loan its own funds to such extent as it pleases, under legal limits; then it may loan for the postal bank to any amount not exceeding $1,000,000 or an amount not exceeding ten times its capital and surplus. Interest on loans of $1,000,000 at 5 per cent is $50,000 a year; 5 per cent commission on such interest is $2,500 a year. Thus its loans for the postal bank produce a perpetual income of $2,500 a year, with trifling, if any, additional rent or clerk hire. How many times, under present conditions, are the banks compelled to quit lending because of lack of loanable funds? Here there will rarely, if ever, be such lack.

"Note further that this commission of 5 per cent is double that allowed for dealings on the New York Stock Exchange, and still further that it is annually renewed during the life of the loan instead of being paid but once, as on the New York Stock Exchange.

"SEC. 10. That personal loans without requirement of collateral security by the postal savings bank may be made in manner as follows:

"(a) The borrower to make written statement showing his assets and liabilities; the amount of loan not to exceed $1,000; the length of time, which shall not exceed one year; the purpose for which the loan is to be used, which shall be in accordance with the stated purpose of this act, which statement shall be attached to the borrower's negotiable note.

"(b) The principal and interest of the loan to be guaranteed prompt payment by a bank or corporation, as in section 9 of this act, which shall be entitled to a commission of 5 per cent of the interest paid thereon, or less, as the board may direct, the borrower being subject to no other charge, and the total of such loans at one time outstanding not to exceed five times the capital and surplus of the guarantor.

"(c) The limit of the loans specified in (a) of this section, if after two years' trial is deemed too small for the best results, may be extended by the board from time to time to larger specified sums, the terms to be uniform throughout the United States.

"These personal loans are to be made without collateral through the banks or other financial institutions, which guarantee principal and interest, for an annual commission of 5 per cent of the interest. The bank through which the loan is made may exact what security it pleases.

"These personal loans should amply meet the wants of small farmers, mechanics, and even merchants, for short-time loans to provide for planting and marketing crops, or other temporary needs.

"Here is the possibility of $1,250 additional income a year for the bank with $100,000 capital. Remember that the bank has the opportunity, first, to utilize its own capital on the pick of the loans. So there is an annual profit for the bank in question of $3,750 for handling the funds of the postal bank. Now, observe further, that this profit may be greatly increased by the commission received by the bank on the deposits it receives and maintains for the postal bank under section 20.

"As agents for the loan of postal bank funds, there will be legitimate profit for commercial banks of scores of millions of dollars a year in return for honorable, highly useful economic service.

"If the postal bank can earn its depositors 4 per cent, commercial banks, with greater initiative, and warrant to take risks, which the postal will not take, can earn their depositors or stockholders even more, and they can always serve in the worlds of commerce and manufacture as the postal bank can never do. Thus the postal savings bank is not in reality a competitor of commercial banks but is rather a gigantic ally on whose practically unlimited resources the commercial bank may draw, on adequate security, for its own profit.

"SEC. 11. That to induce the largest possible savings and serve the greatest possible convenience, security, and economy of use to depositors and to the postal savings bank, the board shall cause to be prepared and issued certificates of deposit of the size and form, but different in color and appearance, of customary bank currency, the said certificates being of the following tenor and in manner indicated:

"(a) [Face of certificate.]

"Issued (date and identifying marks).

"THE UNITED STATES POSTAL SAVINGS BANK
 "HAS RECEIVED FROM

"(Here the depositor will write his signature, or not, as he pleases, thus identifying his signature on the back when he indorses and passes it.)
 "----- dollars.

"And will pay the same, together with interest at 4 per cent per annum, compounded semiannually, on surrender hereof, properly indorsed.

"If no signature is written on face indorsement is needless and payment will be to bearer. (For other details, see the other side.)

"[Back of certificate.]

"If signature is written on face hereof for payment or transfer, indorsement should be made below:

"Value: $100 with interest, compounded semiannually at 4 per cent, will be worth (other sums in proportion):

$100 in 6 months equals	$102.00
$100 in 12 months equals	104.04
$100 in 18 months equals	106.12
$100 in 24 months equals	108.24
$100 in 30 months equals	110.40
$100 in 36 months equals	112.61
$100 in 42 months equals	114.85
$100 in 48 months equals	117.15
$100 in 54 months equals	119.49
$100 in 60 months equals	121.88

"Interest hereon shall cease at the end of five years from date of issue, but any certificate may at any time be surrendered in exchange for a new certificate of current date bearing the rate of interest then current.

"Issued and payable at Washington, D. C., but procurable or cashable through any post office. Signed by authorized representative of the postal savings bank and guaranteed by the United States of America.

"(b) Certificates in the above form shall be issued in denominations of $1, $2, $5, $10, $50, $100, $1,000, and larger, as the board may order.

"(c) Certificates similar, but bearing no interest, shall be issued in denominations of $1, $2, $5, and $10.

"(d) To encourage the beginning of deposits, and also serve the convenience of those who desire them in preference to coin money, certificates payable to bearer, both with and without interest, shall also be issued in denominations of 5 cents, 10 cents, 25 cents, and 50 cents, of size and form similar to United States fractional currency issued in 1862 and later.

"(e) An additional form of certificate of deposit of similar purport to (a) shall be a registered certificate, issued in sums of $100 and larger, the principal payable at any time on surrender, properly indorsed, the interest to be remitted semiannually, all details, including manner of registration, being in accordance with the regulations of the board.

"(f) The different kinds of certificates, issued as described, shall be distinguished by different colors of either paper or printing."

"The United States of America guarantees payment of all certificates and interest due thereon, and any profits of the postal savings bank in excess of interest due depositors and of expense of the conduct of the postal bank shall be paid semiannually into the United States Treasury.

"Redeemed certificates may be reissued in accordance with regulations of the board.

"To facilitate their use and simplify accounting all certificates issued in any year shall bear date as of the first day of that year, and purchasers thereof from the postal savings bank shall pay par and accrued interest.

"(g) These certificates shall not be legal tender, but may pass from hand to hand by mutual agreement, as is done in the case of 'certified' or other bank checks. All certificates shall be receivable by the United States Government in payment of any obligations due the United States and not specifically made payable in gold.

"(h) Checking accounts may also be permitted by depositors who carry an average balance over $500 at cities designated and in accordance with regulations made by the board, interest on daily balances to be paid on such accounts semiannually."

"I do not insist on this last subdivision. It is not vital to the bill and is submitted merely for consideration.

"You give the postal bank $10 in gold, or in what will get the gold and get a certificate, which you prefer to gold, because the certificate earns compound interest for you or for the United States, whereas gold-in hand earns no interest. Printed tables will tell you certificate values at 4 per cent or other interest for any number of days, months, or years.

"The bank loans your gold 'on call' on security of specified bonds at 4 per cent; or on wheat or cotton for a month or a year at 5 per cent; or on a farm mortgage, for five years, at 5 per cent, always at the highest market price for money; or it buys Liberty bonds, now at a discount, thus boosting them toward or to par. Whoever gets the gold, of course, deposits it again in the postal bank and takes a certificate like yours, and the bank, of course, loans the gold again, and so on, perhaps 10 times over, so that $10 gold is earning possibly 50 per cent per annum, and the postal bank still has gold to loan to the next man. This shows how banks have gotten rich in the past; how depositors will hereafter get, not rich, but each what his money fairly earns in interest or in reduction of taxes. Nobody wants to keep that gold any more than you want the man's yardstick when you buy 10 yards of muslin. If you get certificates of deposit drawing no interest on their face the bank loans the gold just the same, and so earns a profit for the bank, which twice a year goes into the United States Treasury, reducing taxation.

"These certificates, 'automatic money mobilizers,' do away with all necessity for the clumsy, antiquated 'individual accounts' bookkeeping methods and will reduce bank expenses in that respect to one-fourth or one-tenth of usual cost and be far more convenient for depositors and just as safe as the customary clumsy method.

"Instead of clipping coupons twice a year, as in United States bonds, the depositor simply pays out part of his holdings, those he retains growing in compound-interest value.

"These certificates of deposit, each virtually a 'certified check'—certified by the United States—will be good anywhere in the United States, just as gold certificates are good anywhere, though the gold is in the United States Treasury vaults. Thus they will serve 'for exchange' and tend to do away with the present cumbersome and vastly expensive 'exchange' system.

"Postal banks will almost never pay out real 'money' at all, but pay out instead, because preferred, only its own certificates of deposit, which serve every possible purpose of real money, and every dollar of which earns interest or tax reduction for depositors every day they are outstanding.

"These certificates will make the money in your pocket, cash drawer, or safe draw interest for you while you hold them, for the next man, when you pay them over, will buy anything which gold will buy—will buy gold itself. Only the banker wants gold, which in possession earns no interest, because he may use it as a basis for larger credits or for foreign exchange. The average citizen will prefer certificates, because they earn compound interest while in possession.

"It is a remarkable fact that of all the so-called money in existence, nearly one-half of it is not at one time in any bank. Some of it is foolishly hoarded by those afraid of banks, but most of it is just idle money in your pocket and mine, earning nothing, of no good at all till we pay it out for something we want. Ever since banks were invented bankers have been trying to 'corral' this elusive outside money going to waste just as much as water running over the dam instead of through the turbine is wasted. This simple device of a negotiable postal bank certificate of deposit will naturally and certainly as the law of gravitation draw this money out of your pocket and mine, even out of knot holes, stockings, tin cans, and other hiding places. Then it will be loaned, redeposited, and loaned again, till over $3,000,000,000, according to the 1920 report of the Comptroller of the Currency, of now idle money are multiplied to thirty or more billions of available useful credits perfectly good, not so much because always 'payable in gold,' but because based on solid property assets, earning or growing into money or what brings money. This will practically nearly 'double the money crop,' and as doubling the crop of wheat or cotton tends to 'cut the price,' so should this tend to reduce interest—the 'price' of money—to the United States when it wants to borrow money to fight with, or for other purposes, or to you and me if we want to borrow money to build a silo, buy a farm tractor, or build a home. Note that this tendency to the 'reduction of interest' is not inimical to bankers, whose profit is not so much in loaning their own money as in a 'brokerage' in loaning the money of others, nor inimical to the 'capitalist,' the bulk of whose profit is in the 'turnover' of business, because cheap interest enormously stimulates business. The saying, 'a nimble sixpence is better than a slow shilling' is a true one.

"Obviously a feature of infinite value in this measure is its incitement to thrift and saving—universal, far-reaching.

"The present gold basis of all money will in no way be altered. Of course, actual gold will be called for only as limited commercial exigencies compel its use, because gold in possession earns no interest, while certificates of deposit in the postal bank in possession earn compound interest. If some one really wants gold from the postal bank they can get it, all right. Somebody will undoubtedly deposit gold with the postal, because it will thus earn them 4 per cent instead of nothing as when it lies in a vault; but if the postal should be short of gold it will have some billions of dollars of Liberty bonds bought at a discount, by that time boosted to par or to a premium, which bonds it can sell and buy the needed gold.

"Take emphatic note that nothing is here suggested in the line of fiat money nor even of inflation of credits. Certifying a bank check does not inflate, and every certificate of deposit in the postal bank is nothing but a certified check representing 'savings' deposited.

"The essence of 'inflation' is so-called money not based on reality, or credit not based on solid security but on 'speculative' values, rather than on the earning, creating power in the investment made.

"When the Federal reserve bank buys $6,000,000 gold and against that gold, as authorized by law, issues $10,000,000 of its notes for circulation as money, that is real inflation to the extent of $4,000,000. There is nothing whatever of that nature in this whole industrial savings act.

"The three different kinds of certificates issued are of different color, or appearance, plainly distinguishing them from each other. The holder is constantly reminded that one color earns him no interest, while the other two colors do earn him interest—work for him while he sleeps. So he is tempted and stimulated to save those two colors.

"As to the rate of interest promised, 4 per cent, justice to depositors and economic expediency for us all—it is to our advantage that others save, even when we do not—demand that depositors get all the interest their deposits can legitimately be made to earn. As we have already pointed out, the market price for money is now around 6½ to 8 per cent. But we are compelled to take into account many financial and economic conditions, including the fact that there are now in existence throughout the Nation several thousand savings banks with deposits of about $6,000,000,000, and injury to these should be avoided; 4 per cent is the most these banks generally pay, and if the postal banks were to pay more there would be a tendency to promote 'runs' upon them; therefore, the rate of interest payable by the postal is limited to 4 per cent and any excess profit is to be paid into the United States Treasury. Furthermore, all savings and other banks in good standing are, by provision elsewhere in this bill, made agents for the postal bank, and will receive a commission on all registered certificates they sell, so that their patrons will not be influenced to leave them for the postal bank, but will get postal bank certificates through them.

"Sec. 12. That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized hereafter to deposit any money in the Treasury in the postal savings bank (without requiring security therefor) as he does in other banks of deposit, and shall, so far as practicable to do so, make disbursements from the Treasury in the form of certificates of deposit in the postal savings bank, provided this method is acceptable to payee."

"No security is required for deposits of Treasury funds, because in the postal bank they are in the custody of the Government, the same as when in the Treasury itself.

"Thus the United States Treasurer need not—but may do so—any more offer bonds for sale, but may simply issue them, when authorized by law, to the postal bank in exchange for certificates of deposit, which he will pay out. The workman will prefer them to money for wages, the farmer for grain or stock, the mine owner for coal, and so on.

"The United States Treasury may continue to deal with commercial banks the same as now, but with the postal bank also.

"Sec. 13. That all banks in the United States may hereafter deposit their funds in the postal savings bank, and certificates of deposit issued therefor may be counted as part of their legal reserve.

"Of course, banks may continue, so far as they desire, to carry gold and other 'reserves,' and those having foreign relations, especially, may naturally do so to an extent, but these certificates of deposit represent such assets in the postal bank, and therefore serve the same end, and they earn interest for the depositing bank, while the gold they carry in reserve earns nothing. The approximately $2,000,000,000 of gold in the vaults of the Federal reserve bank earn it no profit—the notes it issues based upon them may do so—but if deposited in the postal savings bank it would earn the reserve bank $80,000,000 a year profit, and would be just as accessible in case of need for foreign exchange as if in its own vaults.

"Thus the postal savings bank becomes a gigantic 'ally' rather than competitor of existing savings and commercial banks—becomes one vast 'reservoir'; not many thousand separate, competing banks—into which everybody, other banks included, pour deposits and draw them out again, with interest, as wanted.

"Sec. 14. That at the county seat of every county in the United States, or similar civil divisions otherwise called, and in such other cities as the board may elect, post offices shall be designated by the board as postal savings banks of deposit and loan.

"(a) Such banks of deposit and loan shall issue and record as required by the board certificates of deposit as described in section 12 hereof in exchange for bankable funds as per regulations made by said board, and may redeem the same, whether issued by itself or by other similar bank of deposit and loan, either in money or in new certificates of deposit, as the applicant may desire.

"(b) Each depositor in said banks shall record his signature and address in duplicate with the bank on a record provided, as is customary in commercial banks, so that indorsement of signatures on backs of certificates may be verified when desired.

"(c) These banks of deposit and loan shall supply minor post offices in their region, and letter carriers, with facilities for serving all who desire to do business with the postal savings bank, requiring such security as may be determined by the board from those handling the funds of the bank or of its patrons.

"Sec. 15. That the board shall designate 12 or more districts covering the United States in a central city of each of which it shall cause to be organized a district bank, which shall act as clearing and reserve banks for all the banks of deposit and loan within the district, in accordance with rules and regulations of the board.

"Sec. 16. That the board shall further cause to be organized in the city of Washington, D. C., a national central postal savings bank, which shall deal with the 12 district banks, and may have direct dealings with and oversight of all the county banks of deposit and loan as the board shall order.

"Sec. 17. That every smaller post office and every letter carrier may, in accordance with regulations made by the board (adequate bonds for safety being required), keep in hand limited amounts of certificates of deposit, secured from the local county banks of deposit and loan, to be given to known applicants in exchange for bankable funds to be forwarded to the county bank of deposit and loan, and may also redeem small certificates of deposit as they can conveniently. Such post offices and letter carriers shall also give proper receipts to any applicant for bankable funds, or for certificates of deposit, to be sent to the county bank of deposit and loan to be exchanged for money or other certificates of deposit, and deliver the same to said applicant in exchange for their own receipt originally given to the applicant.

"Sec. 18. That each county bank of deposit and loan and each district bank shall keep in hand such working balance as the board shall direct, the county banks forwarding any surplus to its district bank, and the district bank any surplus to the national central bank, and each of said banks shall make loans as authorized by the board, the county bank drawing for funds when deemed necessary on its district bank and the district bank drawing on the national central bank as the board may direct.

"Sec. 19. That existing savings and other banks in the United States which desire and will submit to satisfactory examination and supervision of the appointees of the board and are found of standing satisfactory to the board may be made agents of the postal savings bank, to receive deposits and pay certificates in accordance with regulations made by the board, and shall be allowed as compensation for such service a commission to be authorized by the board and not to exceed 5 per cent of the net earnings of the deposits, for which registered certificates only are issued, which said existing bank secures through its agency, such commissions to be uniform throughout the United States.

"The provisions of this and other sections permitting any bank in the United States in good standing to become a deposit and loan agent of the postal bank would tend to strengthen rather than to injure by competition any and every such bank. Their depositors would not leave them for the postal, because they can supply the postal certificates when preferred to their own. As private enterprise and initiative have certain advantages over public institutions, due to more accurate knowledge of local conditions and opportunities and better means of keeping in touch with them, the agents by offering slight additional interest inducement may secure enlarged deposits for themselves. To applicants for loans the agent may always loan his own funds instead of loaning the postal funds, if he desires.

"Note the profit to existing banks in this connection illustrated in note under section 11. Commissions for deposits are allowed only on those for which registered certificates of deposit are issued, as it would be too complicated and difficult to keep accounts in connection with other deposit certificates. It is believed depositors generally will prefer the registered certificates for all larger and long-standing balances, and agent banks will, of course, work particularly to secure such deposits.

"Sec. 20. That in lieu of the principal amortization (which may be applied when the borrower desires) loans secured by real estate or other collateral may be made, as follows:

"The mortgage or other paper shall be drawn to secure any sum due from the borrower not exceeding the amount named therein for any time not longer than the longest time therein specified, the borrower thus being permitted to adjust the amount of his loan from time to time according to his needs and his opportunities.

"Under this plan, while the borrower would naturally make application for the largest loan which the pledged security would be sufficient to cover, his certificate being passed he would actually borrow not the most but the least sum that would serve him and borrow only as it was actually needed, and would repay it as fast as he could, so as to stop interest, knowing that he could at any time borrow again if he should have need or find profitable use for the money. This elasticity of loans would be of almost incalculable value to the borrowers, to the bank, and to the community, stimulating enterprise, thrift, economy, providence, and would certainly be more desirable than iron-clad, unalterable amortization loans.

"Sec. 21. That commercial and savings banks may make deposits in and draw upon county banks of deposit and loan to such extent as said county banks may be able conveniently to serve them, but may without limitation deal direct with the district banks and national central bank as per regulations of the board.

"If any bank should prefer to keep gold or other form of so-called money as a reserve, it can do so; if such other form of reserve than certificates of the postal bank makes it any stronger, then it will have what advantage there may be in the increased strength.

"Certificates of deposit in the postal bank are not legal tender but each is a certified check, certified by the United States Government, and is good anywhere. Certified checks of banks are not legal tender, but do they not serve amply every commercial want except in rare technical legal quibbles? If what is offered is good—as gold is recognized as good even when not coined—it does not need to be legal tender. Of course, the law of inviolability of contract will continue, and the debtor must always make good according to his contract, where it is formal or by implication. Postal bank deposits will always be good while the United States Government is good. These certificates legitimately meet the popular demand for guaranteed bank deposits, because the United States is custodian of the deposits, as it is for money-order funds which it guarantees through the Post Office Department.

"Sec. 22. That the board shall cause to be prepared and printed for the general public simple tables showing the value of $10 or other sums at compound interest for days, months, and years at various rates of interest, such as will be useful to depositors.

"This will be a matter so simple that any intelligent person can know the value of the certificates he owns. Of course, it will be the smaller certificates, $10 and less, which do not on their face bear interest and are always worth par, that will mainly pass from hand to hand. Larger interest-bearing certificates will pass principally in the same manner as the ownership of United States bonds passes, the market value of which is known every day. Certificates of deposit issued in any year bear date as of the first day of that year, in this following the precedent of the war-savings certificates. The year of issue and the year of expiration (when they will be either paid or renewed by issue of new certificates possibly bearing other rate of interest) will naturally be made prominent and clear for convenience in sorting and computing value.

"Sec. 23. That needless and expensive records and statistics shall be avoided, but the board shall provide for such as may materially serve the interests of depositors and enable the board annually to report to Congress such information and recommendations as may be of service to Congress.

"Sec. 24. That to the extent that the mails shall be used in facilitating the business of the postal savings bank, either by the bank itself or by its patrons, the board shall provide special stamps for free use of the mails, keeping records so that approximately the actual cost of such postal service shall be paid by the postal savings banks to the Post Office Department as the board may order and provide.

"These provisions are matters of simple sense and justice, and encourage the most liberal use of the postal bank. Such use will be principally local, or within the county, and the actual cost of postal service for each transaction nearly infinitesimal, but whatever the cost is it will be paid by the bank at the expense of the beneficiaries, the depositors, and borrowers, and not of the taxpayers in general. This principle is maintained throughout the industrial savings act.

"Sec. 25. That the sum of $1,000,000 is hereby appropriated for any necessary expense, in the discretion of the board, in the rapid development of the postal savings bank, the sum used to be considered as an advance and to be repaid to the Treasury, with interest thereon at 5 per cent per annum from the profits of the postal savings bank, which is to be made self-sustaining without subsidy or other charge against taxpayers.

"Sec. 26. That all provisions of an act to establish postal savings, etc., approved June 25, 1910, and of amendments thereto not inconsistent with this present act, shall continue in force, and all other provisions are hereby modified or repealed, as are all other acts of Congress inconsistent herewith.

"In case it is found that certificates of deposit in postal savings banks crowd out of use forms of paper money now in use, causing the depreciation of the market price of bonds of the United States used to secure their circulation, below par, the Treasurer of the United States should be authorized to purchase or redeem such bonds at par, issuing, so far as may be necessary to do so, other bonds of the United States bearing higher rate of interest and marketable at or above par. It is doubtful whether this will ever occur, but if it does, this provision would be a matter of simple justice to bankers who have invested in such bonds because of the currency advantages they gave. The United States received par for the bonds, and the consideration for the use having in part terminated, the Government should pay par for them.

"Never have justice, patriotism, necessity, and business sense united more emphatically than in this industrial savings act. It establishes a new and immense reservoir of capital on which all people and all institutions possessing requisite security may draw on terms of exact equality—a reservoir from which fresh streams of credit will issue to expand and multiply the channels of production, manufacture, and distribution.

"It provides the greatest incitement to thrift and savings the world has ever seen.

"It does immaculate justice to depositors and to borrowers alike; it involves no favoritism for any 'interest' or any 'class.' Both long-time and short-time loans will be possible for farmers, manufacturers, merchants, home builders, abundant in supply, practically without limit, except the limit of good security and legitimate profitable use. Every borrower is compelled to declare the object of his loan, and it will be made only for purposes in harmony with the public good. Speculative 'cornering' of markets is to be ruled out.

"As I have said heretofore, let us mobilize the dollar as well as the man. Let the people's funds serve the people.

"I now present a statement by Postmaster General Hays at Sullivan, Ind., July 3, 1921, favoring the reconstruction and reform of the Postal Savings System:

STATEMENT BY POSTMASTER GENERAL HAYS AT SULLIVAN, IND., JULY 3, 1921.

"It is very certain that the Postal Savings System must be reformed. With a treatment of depositors that has amounted almost to fraud, with the number of offices receiving deposits reduced from 12,823 in 1912 to 6,314 in 1920, and with no real efforts to secure deposits, the postal savings nevertheless has practically twice as many depositors as any other savings bank in the country and pays less than half as much interest on deposits. Over 70 per cent of postal savings depositors are foreign born or of foreign extraction, many trusting no one but the Government of the United States. In all foreign countries the number of depositors in savings and other banks is in direct proportion to the attention given postal savings and the number of postal savings depositors.

"With $161,000,000 on deposit last year from 508,000 depositors, and with the law providing that 2 per cent interest be paid, the Government because of the system paid less than 1½ per cent interest to these depositors, and by redepositing at 2½ per cent made a net profit over all interest payment and expenses of $1,720,000.

"This was sheer profiteering. This money belonged to the depositors. The certificates issued unequivocally pledge 2 per cent interest and fail to say anything whatever about no interest being paid if the deposits are not left a year. The Government is not in the banking business for profit. The Government is in the banking business to facilitate and increase the national savings and to promote economy and thrift. The postal savings has not scratched the surface, notwithstanding the magnificent conception of public duty that inspired its founding.

"Postal savings shall not compete with savings banks. We do not want depositors from savings banks. But there is a tremendous hoarded wealth in the country estimated by many well informed at $1,000,000,000. The savings banks can not bring it out. The postal savings has not yet brought it out. Nothing can bring it out but the faith in the security of the Government of the United States and a larger interest return on the deposits and the acquainting of the holders with our purpose and their opportunity. This we hope to do. This money is needed in circulation now. If $1,000,000,000 can be brought out of stockings and closets and saved from waste and 'wild cats,' it will do incalculable good. It will make general bank depositors and ultimate Government bond owners out of the timorous; it will give small capital a chance for an honest return the same as large capital; it will furnish the tonic to conclude the business convalescence in the country and will help make economy and thrift a national trait much needed.

"We believe this can be done. First the Government must stop profiteering and the interest rate should be increased from 2 to 3 per cent, with a compensatory rate charged the banks where the funds are redeposited. The method of computing the interest should be reformed so that the depositors shall receive interest on funds held less than one year. Joint and trust funds should be allowed and the youth limit should be removed. Savings should be received at 50,000 instead of 6,300 post offices, and fourth-class postmasters should be fairly compensated for handling the business. The funds should be redeposited in the local banks where collected and a more liberal arrangement perfected for depository banks to qualify. And the system should be reorganized at the top, with an enlarged board of directors, into which the Federal reserve bank may be brought.

"There is a lot of business in this country that is really sick, still staggering with the shell shock of war and the debauch of extravagance, but there is a good deal more that is merely malingering. What we need more than anything else is the common sense of courage and confidence. There is, of course, the greatest era of expansion and prosperity ahead that the world has ever seen. Everyone knows this, and the only question discussed is when it will start. Well, it's time to go out and meet it. This we propose to help do."

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, August 10, 1921.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Holy, holy, holy, Lord God Almighty, vouchsafe to listen unto us as we speak and meditate our petitions of confession and thanksgiving. Blessed be Thy excellent name for all the testimonials of personal triumph over sin and sorrow. Give unto us, O Lord, the inspiration of the ascending power of the soul that we may rise above tempest and storm and be lifted into the upper air of spiritual outlook and vision where there are palaces not made with hands and crowns of glory that never fade away. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY.

The SPEAKER. To-day is Calendar Wednesday. The Clerk will call the committees.

When the Committee on Military Affairs was called:

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the bill H. R. 7204, relative to the Fort Monroe water system. The bill is on the Union Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California calls up the bill, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7204) to provide a government-owned water service system for the Fort Monroe Military Reservation.

The SPEAKER. This bill is on the Union Calendar, and the House automatically resolves itself—

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the request.

The SPEAKER. The House automatically resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 7204, with Mr. WALSH in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 7204, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to sell and transfer upon such terms as he may deem expedient such part or parts of the Government's installations, improvements, interests, and lands established, constructed, or acquired in connection with the development, improvement, and extension of a water-supply system or systems at and near Newport News and Fort Monroe, Va.; and the Secretary of War is hereby further authorized, if deemed by him to be in the public interests, to accept as in part or full payment for such Government property so sold such pipe lines and their accessories, reservoirs, reservoir sites, water-pumping plants, and lands, rights, and interests of or in existing water-service systems at or near Newport News and Fort Monroe, Va., clear of adverse interests and liens, as may be necessary to provide a Government-owned water-service system for the Fort Monroe Military Reservation: Provided, That the acceptance of such property or any part thereof in exchange or as payment in part for said Government property is authorized only in the event the United States is released from all obligations to all individuals, companies, corporations, associations, and municipalities arising out of, resulting from, or created by the contract of December 2, 1918, executed on behalf of the United States with the Old Dominion Land Co. and Newport News Light & Water Co., Virginia corporations, or either of them, concerning the installation, development, or improvement of a water system or systems at or near Newport News or Fort Monroe, Va.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair:

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had concurred in the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1934) granting the consent of Congress to the Huntington & Ohio Bridge Co. to construct, maintain, and operate a highway and street railway toll bridge across the Ohio River, between the city of Huntington, W. Va., and a point opposite in the State of Ohio.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendment the bill (H. R. 1475) providing for a grant of land to the State of Washington for a biological station and general research purposes in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 5676) taxing contracts for the sale of grain for future delivery and options for such contracts, and providing for the regulation of boards of trade and for other purposes, had requested a conference with the House on the bill and amendments and had appointed Mr. CAPPER, Mr. KENYON, and Mr. SMITH as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

GOVERNMENT-OWNED WATER-SERVICE SYSTEM, FORT MONROE.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. FROTHINGHAM].

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, this is a bill which not only asks for no appropriation of money but which asks for authority to bring into the Treasury of the United States $158,000 [applause], to be paid for 80 per cent in Liberty bonds and the rest in cash. During the war the facilities which were needed for the various camps—Camp Hill, Camp Stuart, Langley Field, Fort Monroe, port of embarkation, Army supply base, and so forth—on account of the number of troops gathered there, together with naval activities, made it necessary that an increased water supply should be obtained. Now, the private corporation—and there is only one that operated there, the Newport News Light & Water Co.—could not supply the needs of this great body of troops concentrated in these different camps with sufficient water, consequently on December 2, 1918, a contract was made between that company and the War Department whereby the United States Government should spend sufficient money in making developments and improvements in the water system so that the requisite amount of water needed for this great body of troops could be supplied. There were four basins in which this water was collected and from which it ran through pipes to these Army camps and was supplied to the troops. The provision in the contract of December 2 was that three years after the termination of the war with Germany an appraisal of the value of these developments should be made by a board consisting of one man appointed by the Government, one by the water company, and in case they could not agree, a third to be agreed upon by those two. This is the usual provision in contracts where arbitration is provided. Under a tentative agreement which has been made by the Government and which the present Secretary of War does not wish to sign until he is authorized by Congress—and it is to ratify that agreement that this measure is now before the House—the improvements made by the Government on those three basins it is now desired to get rid of, and leave with this private water company, I will not say when peace has been brought about, but now that there is no need for that great body of troops there. The Government spent over $530,000 on those three basins which belonged to the private company and the Government does not wish to take over. These improvements put in by the Government in extensions, dams, pipes, and all the other necessary equipment to make those basins available, have been appraised for $435,000. Under the tentative contract, which it is now sought for this House to ratify, the water company will pay the Government this $435,000, plus the rental for use of those improvements while they had them during the war in the sum of $4,127.07, making the credit due the Government $439,127.07. Now, there is another proposition consisting of the fourth basin, which I mentioned, called the Big Bethel Basin, that was not covered by this contract at all, but an option was made whereby the Government should have the privilege of purchasing that Big Bethel Basin. It was with that option in existence that the Government went ahead and made improvements on that basin which they meant to keep, because they needed the basin and need it now to supply water to the military population at Fort Monroe and at Langley Field, and it is shown that if the Government acquires this Big Bethel Basin, as provided for by this option, they can save $48,000 a year, because it now costs the Government in payment to this private water company for water to supply Langley Field and Fort Monroe $4,000 a month. They have to pay for the million gallons a day that are used on the basis of 19½ cents a thousand gallons, which is the price fixed by the Public Utilities Commission of the State of Virginia. The Government says they can operate the plant so that the water will cost them only between 9 and 10 cents a thousand gallons.

The Government will retain all the money that they expended—$700,000—on the improvements on this particular basin, and they wish to acquire the basin too. That basin is capable of supplying 2,000,000 gallons of water a day, more than enough for the Government needs. Now, on the debit side, to be subtracted from what this private water concern is to pay the Government, you will find on page 4 a figure which the Government is obligated, or will be obligated for, unless Congress passes this measure, of $125,000. If this act does not go through they will have to pay that, and possibly more, to purchase a strip of land that they were obligated to purchase under the contract of December 2 made by this water company. They will have to replace certain roads and bridges at an amount which will equal $100,000 more. Added to that, they desire to purchase the land comprising this Big Bethel Basin, which is now owned by this private water company. Though at first, under the option of which I have spoken, it was agreed to pay this private company $45,000, the Government now gets it for $30,000, plus the interest, for the use thereof and the taxes due on it, which amount, as you will see, to a little over $3,000, and which, added to the price of the land, will be thirty-three thousand and odd dollars more. Now, that land originally, when this private company bought it, cost them $35,000.

Mr. CONNELL. Did I understand the gentleman to say that the price of the land, $30,000, plus interest and taxes, amounts to $30,000 more?

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. Oh, no; $3,000 more; $33,000 in all.

Mr. CONNELL. I had not seen the report.

Mr. FROTHINGHAM. The water pipes which are necessary to connect this big Bethel Basin, which the Government wants to own under this option made in 1917, will cost the Government $12,000 more, making in all $280,931.54, which, taken from what you will find in figures at the bottom of page 3, namely, $439,127.07, will bring into the Treasury of the United States, if this bill passes—and the Secretary of War is given authority to put through this tentative agreement which has been made—$158,195.33. If the bill is not passed and this is not done not only will the Government lose this money which can be made available at the present time but they also will lose these valuable water rights with which to supply the military population at Fort Monroe and Langley Field. They will lose all the money that was expended in development on this one Big Bethel Basin, amounting to $700,000, because there was no provision made in that option that any payment back should be made by the company for those improvements, for the reason that the Government under its option wanted to take that one basin for its water supply for Langley Field and Fort Monroe.

This is a plain business proposition, gentlemen, and it is good business for this House to pass this measure and give authority to put this transaction through and have this money go into the Treasury of the Government. [Applause.]

I reserve the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has used 15 minutes.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, as I recall, when this bill was before the Committee on Military Affairs the officers of the Government made their explanation and the committee seemed to be unanimous in favor of the legislation. I do not know whether anybody on the other side is opposed to it or anybody on this side is opposed to it, but I would suggest, Mr. Chairman, that we begin the reading of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The bill was read for amendment.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. WALSH, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 7204) to provide a Government-owned water-service system for the Fort Monroe Military Reservation and had directed him to report the same to the House with the recommendation that the bill do pass.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. KAHN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. RICKETTS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills and joint resolution of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 6320. An act to regulate interstate and foreign commerce in live stock, live-stock products, dairy products, poultry, poultry products, and eggs, and for other purposes;

H. R. 7328. An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Pend d'Oreille River, Bonner County, Idaho, at the Newport-Priest River Road crossing, Idaho;

H. R. 6877. An act to permit a compact or agreement between the States of Arizona, California, Colorado, Nevada, New Mexico, Utah, and Wyoming respecting the disposition and apportionment of the waters of the Colorado River, and for other purposes;

H. R. 7208. An act to extend the time for the construction of a bridge across the Roanoke River in Halifax County, N. C.; and

H. J. Res. 112. Joint resolution authorizing the erection on public grounds in the city of Washington, D. C., of a memorial to the employees of the United States Department of Agriculture who died in the war with Germany.

RAILROAD RIGHTS OF WAY, CAMP HENRY KNOX, KY.

The SPEAKER. Has the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] any further business?

Mr. KAHN. We have several bills.

Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the bill H. R. 7251.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7251) to authorize the Secretary of War to make and receive conveyances effecting an exchange of title to the railroad rights of way at Camp Henry Knox, Ky., and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 7251, with Mr. SANDERS of Indiana in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 7251, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7251) to authorize the Secretary of War to make and receive conveyances effecting an exchange of title to the railroad rights of way at Camp Henry Knox, Ky., and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to execute and deliver a conveyance of title to the Chicago, St. Louis & New Orleans Railroad Co. to that certain strip of land in the military reservation at Camp Knox, Ky., upon which the line of said railroad was relocated and the new depots and transportation structures were erected at Camp Knox, described as follows: Beginning at the point of intersection of the present westerly right of way line of the Chicago, St. Louis & New Orleans Railroad Co. with the southerly line of a highway which crosses said railroad under Bridge J-29-8, said point being 780 feet northerly from mile post 30 from Louisville, Ky., and running thence westerly along said southerly line 17 feet more or less to a point 50 feet distant westerly from the center line of the main track of said railroad measured at a right angle thereto; thence southerly parallel to the center line of the relocated main track of said railroad and 50 feet westerly therefrom a distance of 780 feet to a point opposite mile post 30 from Louisville, thence westerly perpendicular to said relocated main track 90 feet; thence southerly parallel to said main track 1,701 feet more or less to the northerly line of the highway which crosses said railroad under Bridge J-30-3; thence easterly along the line of said highway 50 feet more or less to a point which is 90 feet distant westerly from the center line of the aforesaid relocated main track measured perpendicularly thereto; thence southerly in a direct line 964 feet to a point which is 50 feet distant westerly from the center line of said relocated track; thence southerly parallel to the center line of said relocated track and 50 feet distant therefrom 4,457 feet more or less to a point in the westerly line of the present right of way of said railroad about 1,800 feet southerly from mile post 31 from Louisville, Ky.; thence northerly along the westerly line of the present right of way of said railroad 610 feet more or less to a point 50 feet distant easterly from the center line of said relocated main track measured perpendicularly thereto; thence northerly parallel to said center line 3,700 feet; thence easterly at a right angle to said line 50 feet; thence northerly parallel to said center line and 100 feet distant therefrom 1,125 feet; thence westerly perpendicularly to said center line 25 feet; thence northerly parallel to said center line 1,861 feet more or less to a point in the westerly line of the present right of way of said railroad; thence northerly along said right-of-way line 655 feet more or less to the point of beginning.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to receive, on behalf of the United States, deed or deeds of conveyance, and release from the mortgage obligations of said railroad companies to the old right of way of said companies, described as follows: All that part of the original right of way of the Chicago, St. Louis & New Orleans

Railroad Co. which lies south of a line drawn parallel to the center line of the relocated main track of said railroad and 50 feet distant easterly from said center line, measured perpendicularly thereto, near mile post 30 from Louisville, Ky., and north of a line drawn parallel to said relocated main track and 50 feet distant easterly from the center line thereof, near a point about 1,600 feet southerly from mile post 31 from Louisville, Ky., said original right of way herein conveyed consisting of a strip of land 66 feet wide and approximately 7,200 feet long, and also a tract of land 575 feet long, 77 feet wide at the southerly end, 23 feet at the northerly end, lying on the easterly side of the aforesaid 66-foot strip, and containing .85 of an acre, more or less, and being the tract of land acquired by the railroad company from P. A. Jones and wife, recorded in book 20, page 59, in the deed records of Hardin County, Ky.

SEC. 3. That the description of the metes and bounds of said property above stated shall be inserted in said conveyances and in addition thereto proper specifications and reference to the next immediate source from which the grantors therein derived title thereto as required by the statute of Kentucky on the subject of recording conveyances of real estate in that State, as set forth in Carroll Statutes, 1915, volume 1, section 495.

SEC. 4. That all laws in conflict herewith be, and they are hereby, repealed.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to explain the bill to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL].

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, this is a bill to complete a transaction that took place during the war. It occurred at Camp Knox, in Kentucky, where during the war the War Department took over some 37,000 acres of land. They bought it of the owners around a little station on the Illinois Central Railroad. Now, in order to make it practicable for the War Department to use it as they wish to, they found they would have to move the Illinois Central Railroad tracks over on a ridge. They wanted to put in subways under the track, and by moving the track over and straightening it out they could put those underways in. So they did it. They transferred the Illinois Central Railroad track over to the hill on the ridge, and the Illinois Central abandoned their old track, running some 7,000 feet from this point [indicating], which is a northerly point, to this point, which is the southerly point.

The same thing is shown here in a map which runs north and south. This large map could not be hung very conveniently that way, so we hung it this way. This is north and that is south. [Indicating.]

Now, after the war there were a good many things to settle up down there, and they sent a board of officers in connection with some of the Illinois Central Railroad officials, and they went down there, and this was the first agreement that was to be carried out, the transfer of this property. As a matter of fact, to-day the Illinois Central is running over Government property, and we are using Illinois Central property. This bill is simply to carry out the transfer of that property as it is being used to-day.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL. Certainly.

Mr. SINNOTT. I understand that the Government proposes to deed the red line to the railroad company?

Mr. HULL. Yes. The red line there, from here to here. [Indicating.]

Mr. SINNOTT. I see that the Government in this bill makes no reservation for overhead, surface, or subway crossings. Are there no overhead crossings?

Mr. HULL. There are subway crossings, but no overhead; that is, so we are informed.

Mr. SINNOTT. You do not reserve them. Why does not the bill reserve the subway crossings?

Mr. HULL. They are there. You do not need to reserve them in a right of way that is used by the public for a subway.

Mr. SINNOTT. In every right-of-way deed I ever prepared there was a reservation of the crossings. There should be a reservation of the crossings. Otherwise, by virtue of this bill, the Government makes an absolute transfer of title to the lands described.

Mr. HULL. The public has a right to use a subway under a railroad right of way for public-road purposes.

Mr. SINNOTT. They would have no right by virtue of this bill to even reserve them. An amendment could very easily be prepared.

Mr. HULL. I would not have any objection to such an amendment. If the gentleman wants to prepare an amendment to reserve that right, very well. I do not think it is necessary; but if the gentleman wants to prepare it I have no objection to it, and I do not think any member of the committee would have.

Mr. SINNOTT. Does the gentleman know whether the Government needs to cross the railroad track at the surface?

Mr. HULL. No. That was the reason for having underways under the track. They are in there to-day as subways.

Mr. SINNOTT. But under the terms of this bill you deed to them an absolute fee simple title to the land described. You could reserve here the necessary subway crossings.

Mr. HULL. You can put in an amendment anything that would not interfere with their rights.

Mr. BOWLING. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL. Yes.

Mr. BOWLING. Are those public roads that run under that railway there?

Mr. HULL. Yes. They are used as public ways to-day.

Mr. BOWLING. Would it not be in the nature of public easements there, and should we not control the right to use them, protected by the laws of State of Kentucky?

Mr. HULL. Yes. I might say that at this same camp they took the Dixie Highway and transferred it for 40 miles, and built a new road for the State of Kentucky at a very enormous cost. But that has nothing to do with this bill.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL. Certainly.

Mr. BLANTON. I think the suggestion made by the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. SINNOTT] is a wise one, and that the gentleman should offer such an amendment as he suggested, reserving these subway crossings. Otherwise you might have trouble in the future, because you are granting this fee simple title after this use, and it has not been used for such a length of time as that the law would create an easement there that you could enforce in court.

One other question: The Government paid for straightening this road did it not?

Mr. HULL. It is hard to say. I want to be frank about it. The board of officers that adjusted this matter allowed the Illinois Central something over three hundred thousand and odd dollars in the proposition to settle it all up. There were a lot of buildings concerned in it. Some of the buildings were moved, and the Illinois Central did all the work and built the buildings. There were a good many elements taken into consideration in settling up this problem.

Mr. BLANTON. The primary object when a railroad constructs its roadbed is to make its track as straight as possible, and railroads will go to an enormous expense sometimes in order to straighten the track. I do not know whether the Government ought to require reimbursement for having performed this service or not. But I want to ask the gentleman this question: I notice in the bill that part of the track that is to be conveyed to the railroad company, designated by the red line, is set out by metes and bounds in such a specific manner that an engineer or surveyor could go there with a compass and lay off the property on the ground. But when it comes to providing for the conveyance of the part that comes to the Government from the railroad company that specific description is not had. It is just left to a question of deeds to be drawn later.

Mr. HULL. The details are left to the War Department.

Mr. BLANTON. Why was not the bill just as specific with regard to laying out the property by metes and bounds that comes to the Government?

Mr. HULL. You could not convey property to the Government in any other way than by metes and bounds.

Mr. BLANTON. And you can not transfer to the railroad company from the Government except by metes and bounds, yet in the one case you were specific and in the other not.

Mr. HULL. You can confer the right by specific description, that exists in the right of way there, to the War Department to receive same. That is the way they do it.

I will say to the gentleman that it is true that sometimes railroads want to straighten their track. It is also true that they do not want grades. In this case they straightened the track, but made a grade there.

Mr. BLANTON. Over 1 per cent?

Mr. HULL. I do not know how much. I only know it was done during the war. It was done by the administration at that time, and it was necessary to straighten it out.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL. Certainly.

Mr. KAHN. As I understand it, the original track was on a ridge.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. No. It was just the opposite.

Mr. HULL. The original track ran right there [indicating].

Mr. KAHN. It was desirable to straighten it out, and the old track was in the way of the use of the camp for artillery purposes, and it was very desirable to make use of the land by straightening the line as proposed by this bill.

Mr. HULL. The reason the Dixie Highway was changed was largely because of the artillery range. I was there and can speak from personal knowledge of that. This railroad right of way was changed not so much because of the artillery range as for the convenience of the soldiers, who used the buildings and everything else, and they wanted underways, and so they put this track a little higher on the ridge and then built the subway under between the tracks.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL. Certainly.

Mr. RANKIN. A great many of the railroad rights of way granted by the original owners of the land over which they passed were not deeded in fee simple, but the transfer contained a reservation to the effect that if the railroad ever abandoned the right of way or any part of it and ceased to use it as a railroad right of way, it should revert to the original owners. I will ask the gentleman if he has investigated the transfers from the original owners of this land to the railroad company to see whether or not such reservations are contained in those deeds of transfer.

Mr. HULL. I have not gone to the records myself, but we inquired with regard to this, and this original right of way is owned in fee simple by the railroad, and at the present time it is mortgaged.

Mr. RANKIN. If the gentleman has not gone to the records, he does not know that it is owned in fee simple by the railroad.

Mr. HULL. We have only the statement of the officers of this Government who did investigate it. That is all we can have without going down there and spending our time and money to investigate it.

Mr. RANKIN. Did they not produce certified copies of the deeds or abstracts?

Mr. HULL. I do not think it is necessary, because we have the statement of the officers that it is owned in fee simple by the Illinois Central Railroad Co.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL. Certainly.

Mr. BLANTON. I think that is a very serious question, because in practically all right-of-way deeds, and especially where the right of way was acquired by condemnation proceedings, the title reverts to the original owner whenever the property ceases to be used for railroad purposes. Now, if there is such a clause in these deeds, the very minute that they cease to use that property for railroad purposes there will be a reversion to the original property owners.

Mr. HULL. I think the gentleman is building up something that does not exist.

Mr. BLANTON. That is a sound legal proposition.

Mr. HULL. There are only very few railroad rights of way that are owned in that way. They are owned in fee simple.

Mr. ARENTZ. All the railroads in the West were built under that reversion clause. In other words, the railroad company only acquired the use of the right of way for railroad purposes, and the deed so specifically states. I am a railroad builder myself, and I know that.

Mr. RANKIN. Is this the old, original Illinois Central right of way?

Mr. HULL. Yes; I think so; but owned in the name of another company now owned by the Illinois Central.

Mr. RANKIN. Built back about 1851 or 1852?

Mr. HULL. Yes.

Mr. RANKIN. At about the same time the Mobile & Ohio Railroad was built right down through my section of the country, and practically every foot of the right of way, I am told, was obtained in that way; and I am told also that the Illinois Central down through Mississippi obtained its right of way in that way; and I am of the opinion that it is more than likely that if we pass this bill in this form we shall be giving the railroad company a new right of way without getting anything in return, and I think we ought at least to have an abstract or have this title investigated by some one who is willing to look into it and find out whether the railroad company has any title to transfer.

Mr. EVANS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL. Certainly.

Mr. EVANS. Does the gentleman know whether the Illinois Central has in fact a title to the land in fee simple, or simply an easement of the right of way?

Mr. HULL. I only know what the officers told us. I will say that this is not the original name of the railroad. The name of the original company was the Chicago, St. Louis & New Orleans Railroad Co.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HULL. Certainly.

Mr. RAKER. How was the original right of way acquired by the railroad—by deed of grant from the original owners or by condemnation proceedings?

Mr. HULL. As I understand it was obtained by purchase, but I am not certain about that, and that was the testimony before our committee.

Mr. RAKER. Undoubtedly if it was acquired by condemnation they only acquired the right of way, and when the railroad ceases to use it as a right of way it will revert to the original owners, will it not?

Mr. HULL. I do not think it was obtained in that way. As I was informed, they purchased it and own it in fee simple.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL. Certainly.

Mr. WALSH. Is it not important that somebody know about that, if the United States is to give the railroad company land in exchange for this railroad right of way?

Mr. HULL. The officers and lawyers of the Government told us that the railroad company owned the land in fee simple.

Mr. WALSH. What officers?

Mr. HULL. The Army officers and the counsel for the Railroad Administration.

Mr. WALSH. Oh, well, the officers of the Army probably never thought to inquire about it.

Mr. HULL. They should have inquired. Now, is there any other question in regard to it? If there are no other questions, I will simply say that, as far as I can see, there is no objection to the passage of this bill. You are simply taking property from the Illinois Central and giving them property in exchange. As a matter of fact, you are using the property in that way today and have been for some three or four years.

Mr. ARENTZ. I would say that until the committee finds out whether this land is held in fee simple by the railroad or not, or whether it is held according to the regular standard way of receiving rights of way, the bill ought to go over.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, as nearly as I recall, the original right of way was held in fee simple by the railroad company. If I recall the testimony correctly, there was a mortgage on the land.

Mr. HULL. Let me read from the testimony. This question was asked by Mr. PARKER: "Do they own the title to the land, or do they own a title to the right of way?" The answer was: "They own a fee simple title to the land." That is the statement before the committee, made by Mr. Smith, special counsel of the Railroad Administration.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, that is no more binding on the railroad than for me to get up and say that I own it. The chances are three to one that they do not own a fee-simple title to the land.

Mr. KAHN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL. Yes.

Mr. KAHN. Was that the testimony given by Mr. Smith, of the Railroad Administration?

Mr. HULL. Yes; Mr. Smith, of the Railroad Administration.

Mr. RANKIN. Did Mr. Smith say that he had gone to the records and investigated it?

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. I notice section 2 provides:

That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to receive, on behalf of the United States, deed or deeds of conveyance, and release from the mortgage obligations of said railroad companies, to the old right of way of said companies, described as follows:

As I understand, the railroad has given the mortgage and issued some bonds. As a matter of fact, there are two bond issues, are there not?

Mr. HULL. I think so.

Mr. WINGO. How are they going to procure a release under the mortgage from the bondholders?

Mr. HULL. This bill is designed to give the right to the War Department to transfer the property—

Mr. WINGO. How can the Secretary of War compel the bondholders to give a release of their mortgage rights?

Mr. HULL. They will be compelled to do it before they get the transfer. If they do not want to take title to their own land—

Mr. WINGO. The railroad can not give the release.

Mr. HULL. The bondholders can give the release.

Mr. WINGO. Does the gentleman think it is a practical proposition to get the bondholders scattered throughout the United States to give them a release?

Mr. HULL. I imagine so.

Mr. WINGO. I wish the gentleman would give me the plan for doing it, for I know several that would like to have it.

Mr. HULL. I have no plan myself, but the bill gives the right to the War Department to carry it out, and I have no doubt that it will do it.

Mr. WINGO. The War Department has the authority to accept a release of any claim against the Government land in an Army reservation. The Secretary of War has authority to accept a release because all on earth he does is to receive the paper, the release, and put it on file. You do not give him any more authority.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL. Yes.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I have known many railroads and railroad mortgages, and there is always a provision in the mortgage for the release or acceptance, and it is done as an ordinary thing. In this case we had before us the attorney of the Government, who is a lawyer in Kentucky. He knew all about it, and he said that it had all been arranged.

Mr. WINGO. Did he say that he had authority from anybody representing the scattered bondholders?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. The bondholders are not scattered; they have given authority to the trustees under the mortgage.

Mr. WINGO. Is the gentleman sure that in the old form of railroad mortgage in the State of Kentucky the trustees have authority to release?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I do not speak for the State of Kentucky, but I do speak for the whole United States.

Mr. WINGO. If the gentleman has studied railroad law, he knows that there is a peculiar situation in railroad law in Kentucky.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I know that the trustees under a mortgage when they want to improve the road, or anything like that, have the authority to release for the benefit of the road.

Mr. HULL. I urged the passage of the bill and yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH].

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, the language of section 2 in this bill is to authorize the Secretary of War to—receive, on behalf of the United States, deed or deeds of conveyance, and release from the mortgage obligations of said railroad companies, to the old right of way of said companies, described as follows:

And the concluding part of the section reads—containing eighty-five one-hundredths of an acre, more or less, and being the tract of land acquired by the railroad company from P. A. Jones and wife, recorded in book 20, page 59, in the deed records of Hardin County, Ky.

It is true that the special counsel of the Railroad Administration has said that the railroads acquired the fee-simple title to the land, but what I would like the gentleman from Iowa to state is whether or not the fee-simple title to the land was acquired by this deed, which is referred to in section 2.

Mr. RANKIN. The gentleman from Iowa does not know.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to a question?

Mr. WALSH. I yield to the chairman of the committee.

Mr. KAHN. The counsel for the Railroad Administration informed the committee at the hearings that under a Kentucky law the name of every person who has deeded property to an owner must appear in the deed, to make the chain of title, and he assured the committee that on account of that rule in Kentucky it was very easy to trace the title. I imagine that if this is the only name that appears on the deed it shows that they gave the fee-simple title to the railroad and to nobody else.

Mr. WALSH. But the language of the section would make it appear doubtful, because in line 8 it refers to "said original right of way herein conveyed," and it would appear that all that was conveyed was the right of way, and they might have had what they call the fee simple title to the right of way, if there is such a thing, and still not have the title to the land. In view of the fact that this transaction is of some importance to the Government, and that apparently the War Department has not set forth to the committee with any definiteness the facts with reference to this conveyance, it would seem that the House ought not to act until we find out whether in fact the railroad company has a right to convey this land, or if all they are going to convey is just the right of way back to the Government.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with the statement that the committee has come to no resolution thereon. In that event, we will then be able to get the information which gentlemen require.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I think we can dispose of this if we will insert the words "full fee simple title."

Mr. BLANTON. We could fix that by an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from California make the motion that the committee do now rise?

Mr. KAHN. I do.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from California that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SANDERS of Indiana, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 7251 and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I desire now to call up Senate bill 1574.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, before that is done I make the point of order that where a bill has been called up by a committee and the House resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for its consideration there must be some disposition made of that bill before another bill can be called up. The previous bill should be referred back to the committee, or some action should be taken.

The SPEAKER. It strikes the Chair at first blush that the gentleman from California has a right to call up any bill he desires. He calls it up and the committee acts and reports, and then he can either call the bill up again or call up another bill.

Mr. KAHN. It is unfinished business.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I suggest that this is the situation: The chairman of the committee has called up one bill. We went into the Committee of the Whole for its consideration. The Committee of the Whole decided that it would not consider it further at this particular time, and it has reported the bill back to the House. The bill is now before the House and I think it would be the better practice if the gentleman from California would ask unanimous consent to defer further consideration of the bill. The House certainly has the bill before it and it has to do something with it. I do not recall any precedent and I am not interested one way or the other except that it occurs to me that if we do that we put it into the power of one man to defer the consideration of the bill indefinitely, which the House can only do by a majority vote on a question of consideration. After the bill is once brought up it is in the possession of the House, and while the chairman has certain rights in the way of motions he can not arbitrarily say that he will withdraw it from further consideration. If he will ask unanimous consent to defer the further consideration of it until after the consideration of some other bill, well and good.

Mr. WALSH. But the gentleman can withdraw the bill under these circumstances if he so desires. It does not require unanimous consent. The gentleman has called it up and he can withdraw it.

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman thinks the chairman of the committee can stop proceedings altogether?

Mr. BLANTON. But he has not withdrawn it.

Mr. WALSH. It goes over as unfinished Calendar Wednesday business of the committee, and if this is the last day of the committee's call on Calendar Wednesday, and this committee does not complete its program, then under the Calendar Wednesday business the committee has to wait until the next call of committees when it is reached.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, the point of order I make, and I do not do it captiously, for it is in the interest of orderly procedure, is this: The gentleman has the right to withdraw this bill from consideration, but the gentleman has not done that. It is still before the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman ought to withdraw the bill if he so wishes.

Mr. WINGO. The parliamentary clerk I presume has not been able as yet to find any precedent, and in order to save the situation I suggest that the gentleman from California ask unanimous consent to withdraw the bill.

Mr. BLANTON. He does not have to do that.

Mr. KAHN. I shall do that in order to straighten out the situation. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the further consideration of this bill at this time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to withdraw from the consideration of the House at this time the bill just reported from the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Well, Mr. Speaker, it does not require unanimous consent. I do not desire to establish a precedent, and I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts objects. The Chair thinks the gentleman has a right to withdraw it.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the bill from consideration by the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks in the House the gentleman has the right to withdraw any motion or amendment he makes. The Chair will look the question up.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WINGO. What becomes of the bill? Does it go back on this calendar or does it go back to the committee?

The SPEAKER. It goes back to the calendar, the Chair thinks.

Mr. WINGO. It is a new proposition to me, although it may have been settled, but my mind is a blank in regard to it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will look it up.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. The bill having been called up in order, does it not then become the property of the House?

The SPEAKER. Any motion that a gentleman makes becomes the property of the House, but a gentleman can always withdraw any motion at any time in the House, not in committee.

EXCHANGE OF SAMPLES OF ARMS.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California calls up the bill which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 1574) authorizing the Secretary of War to exchange with foreign nations desiring the same, samples of arms and equipment in use by the Army of the United States.

The SPEAKER. This bill is on the Union Calendar, and automatically the House resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for its consideration.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill S. 1574, with Mr. SANDERS of Indiana in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill S. 1574, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he hereby is, authorized in his discretion to furnish to a foreign nation by loan, sale, or exchange, for exhibition or study, such articles of arms, matériel, equipment, or clothing as have been issued from time to time to the United States Army or which have been or may hereafter be produced for the United States Army: Provided, That this authority shall not be construed to require such loan, sale, or exchange of any article in the production of which there has been embodied any method or idea which public interest requires to be kept secret or confidential: Provided further, That this privilege shall not be extended to a nation which does not reciprocate.

The committee amendments were read, as follows:

Page 1, line 5, after the word "of," insert the word "small."

Page 1, line 7, after the word "which," strike out the words "have been or may hereafter be produced for" and insert "may hereafter be issued to."

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to explain this bill to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER].

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, a year or more ago the United States requested of a friendly nation—I have the name here, but I am sorry to say I have forgotten it for the moment—a full sample of their regimental equipment, which included uniforms, arms, pack, and all sorts of things, perfectly public things, issued to the soldier, in order to have them here for inspection, and this friendly nation furnished and delivered them at its own expense. It has now requested of us a sample of our rifles and ammunition which are in the hands of every soldier. The Secretary of War thought, under the statutes, he had no right to extend this courtesy to that friendly nation, but had to sell under certain provisions all arms that he did not issue in the Army. The officer who reported this action to the committee stated that he thought the Secretary was perhaps a little too careful about the law, and that in a trifle of that sort he could have supplied them. But the bill comes before us. It was drawn by the War Department a little loosely, as we thought, because it includes the words "everything that has been produced or may be produced," and some of those things produced might be secret; therefore we limited it to the articles actually issued to the soldier. All arms are not issued to the soldier; that is, cannon are not, and are in the hands of the captain; but small arms are, and we amended the bill so as to apply only to small arms, and as it is worded now we think it thoroughly guards the interests of the United States. It is to the interest of the United States that we should be able to inspect all arms which are issued to soldiers elsewhere. It is to the interest of the United States that we should in proper cases afford a like courtesy to other nations.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I will.

Mr. RAKER. I find in lines 4 and 5 of the bill this language: "That the Secretary of War be, and hereby is, authorized in his discretion to furnish to a foreign nation by loan, sale, or exchange" certain articles. What is the Secretary of War going to do? Is he going to exchange or loan or sell such articles?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. It depends upon the case. In the particular case to which I referred we received as a favor a full regimental equipment of a soldier. In this case it would amount to an exchange when we loan them or give them to the other nation.

Mr. RAKER. Who is going to determine where there should be an exchange or a sale or a loan?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. The Secretary of War, according to the courtesy of each case, and it is a mere courtesy, they being nothing but samples.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I will.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I think gentlemen who may be interested in this broad general subject will find in the Smithsonian Institution or in the National Museum down here a very excellent collection of the very things which are comprehended by this whole bill.

Mr. RAKER. What I was getting at was that the word "sale" seems to cover the whole business. If it is a loan or an exchange, the Secretary of War has something on which to go.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. This collection in the National Museum is very extensive and is being added to from time to time and is intended to represent the standard military dress and accoutrements of the armies that took part in the World War. It is an educational matter.

Mr. RAKER. The purpose of this bill is to be able—

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. To do the same thing that other people do, and make a reciprocal exchange. The word "sale" is a safeguard there in case there should be a peculiar thing about some odd part of the collection that has heretofore been made because the law of some nation may be unyielding about making a gift of it, or the collection may be in the hands of a private person.

Mr. RAKER. Is it not a curtailment on the Secretary of War to use the word "sale"?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I think the word "sale" was put in with these other words denoting courtesy and exchange simply as a precaution, so that if there is a special thing that the law of a country does not permit to be offered free it would provide for purchasing it.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I would say in addition to that that sometimes it is to a museum, and museums buy.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. As I said before, there is a possibility that some of these things to complete a collection may of chance be in private hands. That is all. There is no other use for it at all when it is obvious that no particular military secrets shall be given to other nations.

Mr. RAKER. In other words, other nations want our accoutrements for exhibition purposes?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. It is the same thing that they see on the soldier that they want for these collections.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. I am desirous of knowing, having just seen this bill for the first time, what good can come of it. I would like to have the gentleman explain. It seems to me the only good it can accomplish would be to gratify the vanity on the part of somebody that wants something.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I think not, sir. It is for the purposes of instruction.

Mr. NORTON. I would like to ask the gentleman what we maintain a military establishment for?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. To use.

Mr. NORTON. Use it by telling other people what we have got?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Well, we can make better arms by knowing what they have got.

Mr. NORTON. Then why give the information to them?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I was going to explain to the gentleman—

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Would it not also have a tendency to give other nations the benefit of our improvements and knowledge in arms and weapons of the kinds specified, and will it not have the further tendency, probably, of being an advertisement for the sale of munitions by our manufacturers?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. No, sir. I will state what the advantage of it is. During the last war the Allies put everything at our disposal. The 75-millimeter gun used by the French had some parts of it that were absolutely a secret. They put those parts at our disposal. Their small arms we always had. Any soldier that happens to desert or go away can give his small arms to somebody else. But we did not have the guns. We obtained their secrets as to fuses. We used their artillery on the field. We have been all these years finding out that the nations who want peace ought to be at the service of all nations that desire peace. We have studied such small matters. We have seen better packs, and better shoes, and other things, that have been issued regularly to the soldiers, and we want to try the foreign make alongside our own to see whether our own is better than any other. They are doing so with our equipment. Is it not better that it should be done by courtesy than that it should be done by secretly obtaining these articles? I am thoroughly convinced that courtesies of that sort tend not only to the peace of the world but to the military preparation of the nations that afford such courtesies and receive them. Now, it ought to be limited, and it is carefully limited by this bill, to small arms and equipments. It does not apply to other matters. It is carefully limited in this bill by saying that nothing shall be given out which is secret, the proviso being:

That this authority shall not be construed to require such loan, sale, or exchange of any article in the production of which there has been embodied any method or idea which public interest requires to be kept secret or confidential.

And there is the further proviso:

That this privilege shall not be extended to a nation which does not reciprocate.

It is carefully guarded, and is for the benefit of the Army of the United States.

Mr. WALSH. I would like to ask the gentleman how we have secured all this information in the past?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. By the courtesy of foreign nations. In the old times we used to reciprocate. We did not have such careful statutes that prevented getting rid of any material except by sale.

Mr. WALSH. Have the foreign nations been doing this, and has our Nation reciprocated in the past?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. They did in this last case.

Mr. WALSH. I mean before the last war.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I think before that time we did it. I am not sure. We did not go into that.

Mr. WALSH. This is placed upon the basis of the United States securing some benefit. I would like to know how we got the benefit in years gone by.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. We got the benefit by the courtesy of the nations or, if not, by getting old uniforms that had been discarded. I want to add one thing more, which is a matter of quite some interest.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Yes, sir.

Mr. RAKER. What is there in the way of equipment or arms or clothing that anyone can get, except the rifles that we used during the war?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. They can not get the uniforms, because they are junk.

Mr. RAKER. Everything that was used in the Army, except that which is secret, has been sold as junk to dealers, and they are selling those things now.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. No man can wear the uniform unless he is in the Army.

Mr. RAKER. I mean selling them.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. I think they are only sold as junk, but I am not sure.

Many years ago, during the Franco-Prussian War, I went to Berlin. It was just after the triumphal entry of the German troops into Berlin, and things were in confusion, and as a visiting American I got what I found was a curious permit, by which I was permitted to go into the private house of Emperor William I of Germany, on Unter den Linden. In that house there were many things that interested me. At his desk and alongside of it was a plan of the Battle of Sadowa—Koenig Gratz—in relief, and on the mantelpiece and all over the walls were little manikins showing the equipment and uniforms of the Bavarians, Saxons, Hanoverians, Prussians, and Austrians, showing that that great military man found that in such particulars of uniforms and equipment were to be afforded subjects of sufficient importance for his consideration.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey yields back the remainder of his time.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has 20 minutes, and the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] has 40 minutes remaining.

Mr. KAHN. I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, long before I came to Congress, from reading the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and noting the debates that then occurred here from time to time, I formed the conclusion that the biggest Republican in the House of Representatives was from the State of Illinois, and that his name was JAMES R. MANN. I have been here over five years, and I have been intimately associated in work here with him on the floor day after day, and I have not changed that opinion. I still believe that he is the biggest man you Republicans have in the House, and I will tell you one reason why. He is a man of great discernment. On the 25th day of July a colloquy occurred here between the said gentleman from Illinois and the leader of the majority, the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL]. The gentleman from Illinois then told your leader what he and his party ought to do. He told the gentleman from Wyoming that there were a few conference reports that ought to come in here and be passed, so as to enact such bills into law, and he advised him that as soon as that was done your leader ought to take a recess during the present dog days, because, he told him, that if he held the House of Representatives in session there would be nothing but chicken-feed measures considered here from then on.

His prediction has come true. What have we witnessed here during the last week? The great Committee on Military Affairs has been bringing in what it calls "legislation" here for a Congress to remain in session during the dog days to pass. And what is the "legislation"? Last Wednesday it called up a good bill to distribute captured cannon, not one like the present to give and sell munitions of war to other nations, but to distribute the cannon that the brave soldiers of this country valiantly won in battle in the trenches in France; to give their own captured German cannon to them as their spoils of war. All of our ex-service men wanted that bill passed. That bill was brought up here, and because of a little fight against it, a little floor maneuver against it, the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] took stage fright, and stampeded in broken disarray from the encounter, after his bill had been recommitted to the committee, and since he carried it back to the committee room we have never heard of it. And both he and his committee seem to be too timid to bring it back. That concerned the soldiers of this country who had brought back from France those treasured trophies of an incomparable world victory. That bill had merit, yet he let it die.

What was the next bill? Then he brought in the little chicken-feed bill here to establish military succession in selection of the personnel of our Army. The House killed that for him.

Mr. MCKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. MCKENZIE. The gentleman wants to be fair, I know, to the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. MCKENZIE. He took the cannon bill back to the Committee on Military Affairs by the order of this House.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; and he never has brought it back, but let it die.

Mr. MCKENZIE. I know, and I hope he will not soon. If he had seen fit to—

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I was with the gentleman on that bill. I am trying to protect him on it. While it was not a great constructive measure, it had merit, because our ex-service men were entitled to have their captured German cannon distributed in their States.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. KAHN. The committee had one meeting since. It had no quorum present; but even then I tried to bring the bill back, but there was a majority against it.

Mr. BLANTON. And that shows just what I said, that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is the biggest man you Republicans have in this House. He knows more than all of you. He told your leader that if he kept you here you would be passing nothing but chicken-feed measures. He told you that you ought to recess. He told you that the country would be safer and better off with all of us at home instead of passing foolish measures here. Ever since he told you that you have not even passed chicken feed; you have been trying to pass it and have failed. Every bill that comes up is either killed or sent back to committee or has its enacting clause stricken out. A surgical operation is performed on every one of those bills.

Take the bill you had up on yesterday, to increase the cadetships at West Point by putting in Army officers' sons in the place of the boys from our own districts. I honor the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BLAND] for making the motion to strike out the enacting clause of that bill. I have fought it ever since it was first proposed. Take also the little old bill that was called up here some few hours ago, to transfer property of the United States to a railroad for its old abandoned right of way, right in face of the fact that every lawyer here knows that likely by abandoning same the title to such old right of way reverted to the original owner. There are just four ways by which a railroad right of way is acquired. First, it can be bought outright; second, it can be bought for a specific use, providing that when the use ceases or it is abandoned it reverts back automatically to the original property owner. Third, it can be acquired through a donation, and in almost every such instance of donation you will find a reversionary clause. Then, fourth, it can be acquired by condemnation proceedings, and under the law of condemnation the very minute the right of way is abandoned the property reverts to the original property owner.

And yet the great Military Affairs Committee brought in here a bill to give Government property to a railroad company in exchange for property to which the railroad company probably does not hold any title to-day, because the title has probably reverted back to the original property owners, having been abandoned. And when it was convinced of this defect the chairman withdrew this bill from consideration after it had been debated for some time.

Then the Committee on Military Affairs called up this bill to exchange war munitions with other nations. Now, if I came from the State of Connecticut, like our good friend Mr. TILSON, probably I would be in favor of this bill, because it is the biggest advertisement abroad for the arms and munition makers of Connecticut that you can think of.

Mr. LAYTON. Would it not be all right for business?

Mr. BLANTON. We are not in the military business. We are in a better business than that. Germany was in that business, and now her Kaiser is ostracized from his own country. He is an exile in a foreign land. And yet he is going unwhipped of justice. He does not deserve even as good as he is getting. He deserves the most severe punishment the ingenuity of man can devise. We are not in the military business. What good could come from a bill of this kind? The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] knew what he was talking about when he told you that you ought not to be taking up the time of the House with this kind of a measure. It just shows you how ridiculous the great Military Affairs Committee is making itself, despite the fact that it has some splendid men in its personnel, just how it will deteriorate when it is forced to work during dog days; it can do nothing else than bring in a lot of little chicken-feed measures that would make a State legislature look ridiculous before the people. Are you in favor of this kind of a bill? Do you want to exchange and sell our guns and other war munitions to foreign Governments? Do you want to see Congress advertise the kind of rifles that are made by our good friends in Connecticut? Are you in that kind of business? Are you wasting the people's time and money in passing such advertising legislation? I am not. I am against this bill. You ought to do to this bill just what was done to the military succession cadet bill yesterday and strike out its enacting clause.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN].

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, it is highly probable that my objection to this bill could be cured by amendment, but I certainly can not give my consent to vote for it as it is now written.

The great movement that has been set on foot by this Congress to bring about an agreement for disarmament in the world certainly has my hearty approval. It ought to have the approval of every man who has any conscience and who is intelligent enough to look back across the last decade and see the destruction that has been wrought by the militarism so insidiously practiced and taught by the autocrats of the world. I want to say now that in my opinion this bill contains great danger for the people of the world who have not reached that degree of civilization perhaps attained by the people of this Republic, if not for the American people also. I am opposed to it for this reason. We are told that there is to-day a great awakening of the nations less civilized than ourselves. For instance, look at the Orient. Napoleon said on one occasion that you would awake the Orient some day and that she would give the world trouble. What do you propose to do by this bill? You do not propose to give them discarded guns that were used in the World War, but you propose to furnish them not only with everything perfected in that way but furnish them with and keep them informed of everything that is developed and issued to the Army of the United States.

I do not doubt that within your lifetime and mine, if we should happen to attain the age of three score years and ten, we will see the Orient, or a part of it—China, for instance—aroused to a point of military development that she has never before attained in the history of the world. Are you going to lend the force of American genius to that movement? If you furnish them with everything that is developed in a military way, they will secure instructors from other sections of the world, and you will plant among those nations that very germ of militarism that has just exhausted the manhood and resources of the western world to check or subdue. Take, for instance, the little nation of Liberia; take the nations of the West Indies which are all clamoring in that direction. If you are going to furnish them with every invention that America perfects in the way of small arms—and that is all they can use—at the same time you will directly or indirectly furnish them with instructors who will teach them how to use them, and in the years to come when they break forth in their destructive cyclones of war as a result of their military training and instruction at least a part of the responsibility will be laid at our door. I would not mind furnishing them, for their museums, for their parks and public places, samples of those things that were used in the World War, with which all the world is now familiar, but I am certainly opposed to going further and keeping them informed of every step that is taken by the inventive genius of America in the art of destruction of human life. I may be alone in my contention—I may be wrong or I may be misled—but I for one shall most assuredly vote against this bill unless that defect is cured by amendment.

Mr. McKENZIE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. McKENZIE. I want to get the gentleman's opinion on one matter. He spoke of China. Does not the gentleman believe that China would have been infinitely better off if she had had a little militarism and had not been compelled to submit to the outrage, so called, of the Shantung proposition?

Mr. RANKIN. My friend, if you will excuse me, that question absolutely carries the germ of the Kaiser's arguments. That is exactly what the Kaiser talked to Germany for 40 years, and look where he is. China would possibly have more influence and perhaps Japan would have none, but the argument that you better a nation by teaching it militarism is a farce, and civilization is paying the penalty of it to-day. No; you will not do them any good. If they were as well instructed to-day in military tactics as the Germans or the Japanese, the entire Chinese Republic would probably be weltering in a sea of blood.

Mr. McKENZIE. Does it not naturally follow that if you were to pursue the course that has been pursued by China you eventually become a nation of slaves to some other nation?

Mr. RANKIN. I am not advocating the course pursued by China; nobody else is advocating such a course; but I am trying to avoid the course pursued by Germany. [Applause.]

Mr. LAYTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I will.

Mr. LAYTON. As a matter of fact, we have a certain bill under discussion, and I do not think it involves China. The essence of the bill, if I understand it, is simply to bring about a matter of reciprocal courtesy. There is no purpose in the bill to let any nation, big or little, on the face of the earth have any of our inventions that they can not get now.

Mr. RANKIN. Oh, yes; the bill says that any that "may hereafter be issued to the United States Army." No matter what you invent, it is included. I want to know what in the name of God you would get in a reciprocal way from Liberia in the way of modern invention of small arms or matériel? This is a one-sided proposition and carries the germ of teaching the semicivilized nations of the world the practice of militarism. That is what there is in it, and I am opposed to it. I see no argument in favor of it. You simply drive right down that old beaten path of militarism that has led to destruction every nation that has followed it from the Roman Empire down to the present day. It is right in the face of the doctrine you are preaching, the doctrine that the President is preaching, when he calls the nations to meet for disarmament. [Applause.]

Mr. LAYTON. It is a mere matter of courtesy and exchange of small arms known to the whole world and of which any individual can get a specimen. Does the gentleman think that is going to destroy the idealism of the world?

Mr. RANKIN. Oh, I can kill my friend from Pennsylvania here [Mr. WYANT] with a pistol borrowed through the courtesy of the gentleman from Delaware [Mr. LAYTON] just as easily as I can with one stolen or purchased with my own money. There is no difference in the proposition. I am opposed to it, and I sincerely hope the bill will be defeated. [Applause.]

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill to the House.

Mr. RAKER. Oh, Mr. Chairman, I demand recognition for an hour.

Mr. BLANTON. The committee amendment has not been agreed to yet.

The CHAIRMAN. Is the gentleman from California opposed to the bill?

Mr. RAKER. I am opposed to the bill.

Mr. KAHN. Nobody indicated, Mr. Chairman, that he wanted time in opposition.

Mr. RAKER. I was waiting until the gentleman got through.

Mr. KAHN. The gentleman allowed me to use all my time, and then rises to oppose the bill.

Mr. RAKER. The gentleman was firing so fast that I had no chance to get in. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will suggest to the gentleman from California that the committee amendment has not been agreed to yet.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I am going to use a little time and then reserve the balance of it, yielding it to those opposed to the bill. There could be a great deal said in opposition to this bill and the principle of it and the purpose of it. There is nothing in the report to show the necessity for it. There is nothing to show upon what the committee acted. There is nothing in the report to indicate what is to be gained by the exchange of these articles. What nation can not get the articles that it wants to exchange the report does not show. I doubt if there is anything in the hearings to show it. If I am advised correctly, people can go to the secondhand junk stores and secure any of these old rifles and equipment, although no one knows how they came by them. But that is not the purpose of this bill. This is unlimited. Any nation can get any quantity it desires under this bill to supply every schoolroom and every public place and educate people as to the kind and character of munitions used by the United States. The wonderful record made by this country in the late war on account of its men and its munitions will make every other nation desirous of getting the small arms and equipment of the United States. Now, any nation that wants to can procure every kind and character of machinery, guns, clothing, and material that was used, and place them in its schools and libraries. For what purpose? First, to get its nationals in the attitude of warlike disposition. Second, to be like the Americans, because we were good fighters, and this material was used in the fighting; therefore the people who arm themselves with them will always be ready to fight. Having used the same kind of material that the United States uses, whenever they want to they will be willing to fight, and think that they can whip any other nation in the world because they use the same material that the United States uses.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. I will.

Mr. RANKIN. Does not the gentleman think that this bill will tend more to result in a world-wide distribution of American munition manufacturers than any other one thing?

Mr. RAKER. I was using the other argument first, but when one lets his imagination run a little further he will see that after it has been demonstrated that this kind of material was used by the American Army so effectively, it will increase the demand on the manufacturers, and they will be selling this material to the United States to be scattered all over the globe; and, being war material, they will be ready to fight and prepared to fight. Nothing gets a man into a fight so easily as to carry a six-shooter in his pocket and a dirk under his vest on the left-hand side so that he can get it easily.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. KINCHELOE. The gentleman said that the report does not show the purpose of the bill. Does the gentleman not think the effect of the bill in extending this harmless military courtesy to the other nations will be to give these other nations a knowledge of our military strategy and of the mechanism of arms so that if we ever go to war with them they will know all of our military secrets?

Mr. RAKER. Not only that, but these small nations and places scattered all over the world will immediately apply for a full equipment for many locations in their countries to the end that their people may get the same kind of an idea and use the same material that the Americans used, because it was effective. They will want all of their men prepared with American munitions, in order to go forward at the drop of the hat.

Mr. LAYTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. LAYTON. Does the gentleman assume that under this bill we will be furnishing any nation, big or little, with a specimen of weapons of war which the gentleman himself or any other citizen of the United States can not get, or which any foreigner can not get now, by merely going and purchasing them? If the gentleman assumes that and can show me that, then I shall vote against the bill.

Mr. RAKER. Yes; this is the purpose of it. When the Government is behind anything, the people will more readily buy, and they will more readily adopt it, and this particular locality or community will say that they obtained this full equipment from the United States, through the War Department, and that it is authentic, and that they can see the brand of a man who made it upon the material and the firm that has it for sale. They will then be told that the American soldiers and the American people used this equipment in winning the war, and that they should be prepared by sending and getting a supply of this kind of equipment, so that they may be ready for the scrap when the time comes. They will all be looking for it. Instead of trying to encourage people by advancing them in education, instead of trying to improve agriculture and good roads, instead of developing the mind, we are working upon the old system of a hundred years ago for militarism. Anyone traveling through France or Italy is met at every turn with what occurred 200 years or 100 years or 50 years ago, and it is all militaristic. Instead of having erected the statues of men who accomplished something in the ordinary walks of life to better humanity, we find the reverse. We do not want to be advertising our articles of death and destruction.

We do not want to send to the little children and women of other countries the word that we used this kind of gas mask and this kind of gas whereby we could destroy human beings. It is bad enough to have it locked up and kept inclosed and within the knowledge and confines of the War Department, so that if we do need it it is ready; but let us not advertise our barbarism; let us keep it under cover and use it only when it becomes necessary.

Mr. LAYTON. What was the gentleman's attitude and vote on Mare Island, for instance, and these other military and naval establishments.

Mr. RAKER. O, my dear Doctor, let me tell you this: I am for Mare Island and I am for any other place that ought to be located as that should be. We ought to have repositories of sufficient munitions of war and matériel to protect our country.

Mr. LAYTON. Then the gentleman is not a pacifist; he is for preparedness?

Mr. RAKER. Very few people put me down as a pacifist, and if any do they misjudge me.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. In a moment. That is a very different thing. We are here looking to our own home and preparing for ourselves, and can not the gentleman see any distinction between our having these necessary equipments within the knowledge of the War Department, properly cared for, properly preserved, and advertising them and sending them broadcast over the world as samples of the means whereby we may disembowel a man or by which we may destroy a hundred who may be worshipping in a church?

Mr. LAYTON. I told the gentleman he might have my vote, and I shall give him my vote if he will show me that by this bill we will furnish any military secret of any kind whatever to any nation, big or little.

Mr. RAKER. You can not help it. This is up to the Secretary—

Provided, That this authority shall not be construed to require such loan, sale, or exchange of any article in the production of which there has been embodied any method or idea which public interest requires to be kept secret or confidential.

So that, so far as the present wording of the bill is concerned, the Secretary of War could give our future military secrets to any foreign nation. Do we want that? Certainly not. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. As the only excuse for passing this measure, the proponents of it say that everything that we issue to our soldiers other countries can get anyway; hence, as a matter of courtesy, we ought to thus provide for the gift and sale of munitions to each nation. Now, what I want to know of the gentleman is this: Is any good going to be derived from our sending some of our munitions of war over to a country and saying to it, "We are courteous to you in peace, but here is what we are going to kill you with if we have any trouble with you; here is the bayonet with which we will stab you, and here is the deadly rifle ball which we will drive through you, and here is the new-model machine gun with which we will tear you to pieces." Is any good going to be derived from that?

Mr. RAKER. No. I believe in having a sufficient amount of these matériels on hand and men capable of using them, and not telling the other fellow when and how you are going to use them, and, if necessary, to use them very effectively and to final results; but I do not think we should advertise to the world that we have these things and send them abroad for everybody to study. The bill should be defeated. I reserve the remainder of my time and yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES].

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I think there are two good and sufficient reasons why this bill should not be passed. In the first place, I do not think the bill is timely, even if it had any merit, and I do not think it has any merit, even if it were timely. In the first place, I can not understand why it should be considered important just at this period of our country's history to bring in one military bill after another. For a long period of time, in fact practically ever since the war ended, and as a matter of fact during the war, the cry went up continuously that we were fighting a war to end wars. As soon as the war was over the cry went up that we wanted to establish a policy and to provide a system which would tend to bring peace on the earth. A disarmament conference of the nations of the world has been called for November 11.

Neither this Nation nor any other nation is going to crash in the meantime. Every thinking American, every citizen of all the world who believes in peace, in prosperity, and in progress, is hoping that something will come from that conference that will give the world a surcease from destructive conflicts that have cursed the world heretofore. Why should we adopt any military measures in the meantime in so far as changing the system or strengthening the system is concerned. Within the last few days, just when there has been the most talk of this conference, the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs has been here with a pocket full of bills, and when the House throttles him on one bill he reaches out seemingly in the air and draws down another measure. I do not know where he finds them, but as fast as the House votes him down on one, like the magician, he pulls another out of the hat and presents it to the House for its consideration. I would like to see the attitude of this Congress and of the American Nation be such that we would say to the world that we are going to rest right here, plant our pickets thick, and cease any further step in the form of militarism until final action is had by the disarmament conference.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES of Texas. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I notice that this bill would permit, if enacted into law, the Secretary of War to sell arms to any foreign nation and without any restrictions as to quantity?

Mr. JONES of Texas. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. And it says for exhibition or study, but after we have sold the arms to the foreign nations we can not prevent them from using them as they please, can we?

Mr. JONES of Texas. Not at all; of course not.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Now, then, is not this attempting to enact a bill into law which in effect we defeated some weeks ago?

Mr. JONES of Texas. It seems to me that it would accomplish that purpose, and I thank the gentleman for the suggestion.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. RAKER. I yield the gentleman five additional minutes.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is making such a good speech I think we ought to have a quorum, and I make the point of order there is no quorum in the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas makes the point of order that there is no quorum. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred Members are present, a quorum.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES of Texas. For a question.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. In view of the fact that the American people are not burdened with taxes at the present time, and the public exchequer is full to overflowing, does not the gentleman from Texas think that the Government can afford to buy these different arms from the manufacturers and send them out to other nations as samples and pay transportation charges, with a view of obtaining sales for these different implements for these different manufacturers?

Mr. JONES of Texas. Yes; Brutus is an honorable man. I think the manner in which my friend asks the question indicates the answer, and that no further answer need be made. Now, my friends, when my father and mother were small I have heard them say that in those days no man's education was considered complete until he had seen the Mammoth Cave. In this day and time no one ever speaks of going to the Mammoth Cave. The reason of that is this: The advertising man is dead. Nobody ever advertises the Mammoth Cave any more. The way the world has been kept in a warlike attitude, the manner in which people have been aroused to interest in the various forms of destruction has been by the method of advertising. I have never heard of a better system of getting advertising of arms and ammunition of warfare, of death and destruction, than is supplied by this bill. [Applause.] It not only authorizes the United States Government to swap arms so that such methods of destruction may be advertised abroad, but it says, let us get them up here where we can show to the children of the coming generation the various means and methods which the genius of man has conceived and contrived to bring destruction to one another and to the progress and prosperity of each other. It also authorizes a sale in unlimited quantities. I do not think the Secretary of War would use it for that purpose, but that is no excuse for loose legislation. This bill puts the United States, or rather the Secretary of War, if he wants to do so, in the attitude of going into the business of selling arms to the various nations of the world with which they can turn around and smite us if they see fit to do so—at least, such action is made possible by the bill. The trouble with the world to-day has been that in the histories that are taught the school children the war hero, and the war hero only, has been idealized. Much has been accomplished in war, and much has also been accomplished in peace, and both should have a place in history. I thought when I was a boy that Napoleon, Hannibal, Alexander, and the various military heroes of the Old World were the greatest men who ever lived on the face of the earth. We constantly advertise that as a fact; we constantly talk it and drill it into the minds of children. We have taught them to worship the purple robes of authority and the shining lance of power. That is what is the matter to-day, and that is the effective method that those who are carrying on that kind of propaganda in this and other countries are using to contravene the very purpose that those have in mind who are trying to bring about disarmament and a surcease from the burdens and sorrows that are incident to warfares between the nations of the earth.

I do not believe a more unwise bill could be passed at any time by this Congress. If we have any military secrets, if we have any powerful weapons of destruction we might want to use sometime, what good will it do us to give them to the other nations of the world, and if we are not going to give them our secrets what is the use of swapping our nonsecrets when they will only swap us their nonsecrets. If this Nation or any nation wants arms or outworn war implements for use in museums, it will be easy for such nation or nations to secure them, without cluttering up the calendar and taking up the time of the House with special legislation on the subject.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. LANKFORD].

Mr. LANKFORD. Mr. Chairman, hundreds of bills are offered either to compensate in some way for past wars or to prepare for future wars. Ninety-three dollars of every $100 spent by this Government are for these purposes. Think of it, $93 for past and future wars to every $7 for all other purposes. What an argument for a sensible disarmament program.

Oh, that all wars would forever cease and there be a reign of perpetual peace. The United States spends $93 for past and future wars for every dollar spent for the education of children. Ninety-three times as much is spent to pay for killing folks as is spent in preparing the boys and girls of our country to live. Something is radically wrong somewhere. Our last appropriation bills carried in round numbers seventy-seven times as much for other purposes as was carried in the Agricultural appropriation bill, and yet out of the one seventy-seventh that the Agricultural appropriation bill carried, probably 90 per cent is for officers, overhead expenses, and so on, with only 10 per cent actually going to the farmers. So as a matter of fact out of every $700 appropriated by the Congress less than $1 really gets back to the farmers. Congress appropriates nearly as much of the people's money for the city of Washington as is appropriated for the entire agricultural interests of the whole Nation.

Mr. Chairman, I protest. It makes me sick at heart to think of it. How can this lamentable situation be remedied? The farmer is the greatest factor in the Nation's existence. Nothing of importance can be done in the Nation's life without him. He is our savior in war and in peace. If you would prepare for war, help the farmer. If you would prepare for peace, help the farmer. If you would solve railroad problems, labor unrest, financial difficulties, and make this Government steadfast and secure, help the farmer. Make his burdens lighter and his pathway easier, so that, happy and contented, he may properly feed and clothe all humanity, giving a new life to all industry and making his fellow creatures everywhere happy, thus proving the fruits of his toil to be an ever-new refreshing benediction and receiving therefor his full and just reward. [Applause.]

The farmer supports all. He made and saved the Nation, and yet the Congress does practically nothing for him. Without the food of the farm the last war would have been lost. Without the boys from the farm it would have been lost. Without the farmer all would have been lost. In fact, without the farmer all that is worth while in this Nation would have never been. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, if the farmer, the laboring man, and the common folks are prosperous, the prosperity they enjoy flows to all mankind. But when the rich become richer and the mighty mightier, the poor become poorer. Very few are the crumbs to fall from the rich man's table for suffering humanity. If we could only see that by helping the farmer to produce to the limit, by helping him finance his enterprise, by helping him to market his products, and by helping him in every proper way, we would help the railroads by giving them more freight to haul, so the railroads could reduce freight rates and yet make more than the roads make now.

Thus the farmer would be enabled to help solve labor problems by giving the laboring man more and better food and clothing for less money. There would be a greater production, a better system of marketing, and a fairer distribution, and much of the present unrest would be eliminated. The financial situation would be helped. The farmer would pay those he owes. The money would flow from one individual to another. The deposits of small banks would increase. The larger banks would be prosperous and all the country would be benefited.

Then, why can not things be thus? I admit I do not know. It seems to me everyone here would agree that legislation for the farmer is of first importance, and yet I am shocked almost beyond expression at the fight made here against every move for the farmer. In spite of the efforts of those of us who fight for the farmer, the Congress not only does nothing of much consequence for the farmer but the burdens of the farmer are made heavier and yet heavier. The last tariff bill to pass the House is an example of this kind of legislation. A tariff was placed on practically everything the farmer buys, and yet there was practically no tariff left on anything the farmer sells. Even potash, an ingredient used in fertilizers, used in seven Southern States, is taxed $50 per ton, increasing the cost of fertilizers about $10 per ton. Every friend of fair play and of the country should join in the fight some of us are waging to get the Senate to take this tariff off before the bill finally passes.

Mr. Chairman, it is time for us to legislate for the farmer and quit talking about it. We have to fight here not only for the farmer but we have to put forth our best efforts to keep the enemies of the farmers here from passing legislation which would mean the ruin of the farmer and the Nation. The newspapers carry glaring headlines about legislation to be passed for the farmer, and yet a casual examination of the proposed legislation shows little or nothing helpful directly for the farmer. During the last few days much has been said about legislation now pending authorizing the War Finance Corporation to loan money to the farmers. I have studied closely the bill which passed the Senate, and I confess I see very little direct benefit for the farmer in it. The bill takes care of exporters of cotton, who now hold much of the cotton produced last year. I find that it provides for the buying of securities and notes from the individual or corporation who is engaged in shipping farm products across the Atlantic Ocean. I realize when you do that, when you help the export business you help indirectly the farmer who sells to the exporter; but after all you are helping directly not the man that farms but the man who makes money out of the farmer.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANKFORD. I will.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. If you do not export the surplus of farm products you can not have prosperity for the man who raises the products, can you?

Mr. LANKFORD. I agree with you absolutely. But I want to help the man who produces, directly and not by indirection, and that is the purpose of a bill recently introduced by me. Let us amend the Senate bill so as to do this. Of course, if we help in the exportation of cotton, we help indirectly the producer of cotton. I am not shortsighted enough not to see this, and I favor this. But I want the bill to go further and help the man who produces cotton, as well as the cotton factor who ships the cotton across the seas. I want to help the man who made the cotton last year and got practically nothing for it, or who is still hanging on to it, much more than I want to help the man who has bought that cotton for a song and is now to get help from the Government to ship it at a splendid profit. I want to help the man and his wife and children who are now struggling to make more cotton, much more than I want to help the corporation which will later buy that cotton. I want to help the farmer who lost on his cotton and other products last year, and who will probably lose this year. I want to help the farmer who, on account of present conditions, can not pay his debts, however much he wants to pay them, and who lies awake at night and tumbles in his bed because his taxes are falling due and the interest on the loan on his farm is rapidly coming due, and he does not see how on earth he is to meet either of them.

I want us to help the farmer himself, and not devote all our energies to helping the man who makes his living not by farming but out of the farmer. I know there is a provision in the Senate bill authorizing the purchase of $100,000,000 worth of farm loan bonds; this will help the farm loan business, but in a time like this we need funds for the farmers and for the banks which handle farmers' papers, without the delay of negotiating a long-term loan. The War Finance Corporation was created to meet emergencies which have followed in the wake of the war. An emergency exists among the farmers. Let us meet it like men. I want the War Finance Corporation to buy notes of farmers now held by local banks and which may hereafter be acquired by such banks.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. LANKFORD. The banks could thus renew paper of their farmer customers and get it carried. The banks could also make additional advances to farmers and get it carried. The banks could loan on safe paper either secured by first or second liens or by chattel mortgages or by indorsement. This would get money to farmers speedily and later the farmer would have time to get his long-term loan increased or to secure a new long-term loan. This kind of a scheme will help the whole country and that without the loss of a single penny, for the money would be paid back. Just think what we have done. This Government has loaned to foreign nations more money than it cost this Government to run from the days of George Washington to the beginning of the second term of Woodrow Wilson. The interest on this stupendous sum is a million dollars a day and yet our leading men are advising an additional loan to Russia. It is also proposed now to loan $500,000,000 to the railroads. My God, has it come to this? Millions for everything and for every demand whether on safe security or not and not one cent for the farmers of the Nation on the best of security. [Applause.]

I fear that the much heralded Senate bill will be so amended before it reaches final passage as to make it impossible for the banks of the country to borrow a single dollar on ordinary well secured notes of the farmers. I think it is in that condition now, as it passed the Senate.

There is no doubt about the bill providing for help for the exporters of cotton and for the men who never produced a pound of cotton or other farm product, but who have profited and still profit at the expense of the farmer.

Mr. KING. This is a bill that is now before the Banking and Currency Committee, of which I am a member.

Mr. LANKFORD. Yes.

Mr. KING. And nothing but the title is left of it.

Mr. LANKFORD. I certainly hope the bill will be so amended in the committee or on this floor when it comes up next Friday as to leave no doubt that relief will be given directly to the farmer.

Why should there be any doubt as to whether the bill will give relief directly to the farmer? It is called the "farmers' relief bill" for political purposes. Why should it not do what its name indicates? There are only two provisions indicating a purpose to handle notes and securities of farmers, and these two are carefully hedged about so as to make them impotent and of no force. One of these provisions starts with this significant sentence, to wit:

SEC. 24. Whenever in the opinion of the board of directors of the corporation the public interest may require it the corporation shall be authorized and empowered to make advances upon such terms not inconsistent with this act as it may determine to any bank, banker, or trust company in the United States which may have made advances for agricultural purposes, including the breeding, raising, fattening, and marketing of live stock.

That sounds good. But what does it mean? It means that the War Finance Corporation is to make no advances under this section until its directors determine that "the public interest may require it," and then they are not required to make advances on farmers' papers, but then they may make advances if they feel like doing so. Why leave the directors of the War Finance Corporation to determine whether or not the public interest requires that relief be given the farmers? Can not the Members of Congress determine that question? If we can not, we ought to resign and go home. Do not 435 Representatives and 2 Senators from each State know more about the condition of the country than any 4 or 5 directors of the War Finance Corporation? The people elected us to legislate and not to pass our power onto some one else to act for us. Besides, when would we ever be able to convince the directors that the public interest demand that any one farmer should be helped or that any 10,000 farmers should be helped? They would say, "That is a matter of local or private interest and not public." They would say, "The public is not interested in whether or not one poor fellow is sold out of home, neither is the public interested in whether or not thousands of families lose their homes for lack of money and help."

It would be urged that if many lose their homes that some one else would get the land and cultivate it just the same, and that the public would not suffer. What a faulty argument this would be, but it is just what you and I will meet if we pass this bill in its present form and then try to get some relief for our people. It is hard to convince a fellow with a good job, a good salary, and plenty of money that the public interest requires help for a poor struggling fellow down below him. He rides in his fine car and says "the public interest" does not require me to worry about the poor fellow walking in the dust. [Applause.]

He lives in luxury and says "the public interest" does not require help for the fellow in old clothes and without even the necessities of life. He stands on the mountain top of plenty and says "the public interest" is not affected by the suffering of the poor fellow down below in the valley of misfortune who is suffering and struggling to save his home as a place to live and support his wife and children. They will say, the Capitol will remain at Washington, the Mississippi River will still flow, the tide will still rise and fall, the sun continue to shine, we will still draw our salary, the big rich will still prosper, and money will still be plentiful in Wall Street, and the country will still exist, even if a few thousand people are left homeless as a result of present depression.

Mr. Chairman, I know the public interest requires help, and that now for the farmer, and I want us to pass a bill similar to one I introduced the other day providing help for the farmer in no uncertain terms.

If we ever convinced the directors of the War Finance Corporation that the public interest demanded help for the farmer, then they would not be required to help him but could do as they pleased about the matter. The other provisions which smacks of help for the farmer directly ends with the proviso that no help under this provision be given except to help in the importation of farm products. So the bill provides nothing for the farmer directly. It will be as hard for a farmer to get help directly under this bill as it is for the proverbial camel to go through the eye of a needle. [Applause.] There is now a provision authorizing, not requiring, the purchase of $100,000,000 worth of farm loan bonds. This will do great good, but we want more immediate help in this pressing emergency. But I would not be at all surprised to see the authorization of purchase of farm loan bonds later voted out. I fear the bill will be only a sorry shell with a good name when it is finally passed. I beg of the friends of the farmer help us amend the bill so there will be no doubt about its helpfulness to the farmer and the banks handling farmers' papers.

Help us make it a farmers' relief bill not only in name but in truth. [Applause.]

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM].

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Chairman and gentleman, it has been long recognized that one of the controlling elements in human nature is curiosity. If we see two dogs, we wonder which can bark the louder; if we see two horses, we wonder which can run the faster. And as I have noticed standing sponsor for this proposed legislation those gentlemen who hail from sections of the country where munitions are manufactured, it has occurred to me that, perhaps, this same psychological principle might be found to underlie the efforts to pass this bill, because it is perfectly natural that when you display two guns the popular curiosity arises as to which gun can shoot the farther and which can shoot the stronger. When munitions of similar classes and kinds are exhibited, that same psychological principle prompts an inquiry as to which is the better for the various purposes for which they are adapted. And so, methinks that in this proposed legislation there is an insidious desire on the part of the munition manufacturers to cater to that inborn militaristic spirit, fostered by curiosity, and so to order our thinking that instead of learning no more of war we may have war constantly taught us by these ocular demonstrations of the machines of warfare.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas yield to the gentleman from Vermont.

Mr. LANHAM. Yes.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I dislike to disturb the philosophy or assumption of the gentleman's statement, but as a matter of fact he must know that this bill does not emanate from the munition makers at all. I do not think any of them know anything about it yet.

Mr. LANHAM. That may be true. My reference was to those standing sponsor for them here, and evidently those who represent the standpoint of the munition makers can see that the psychology of the proposition is such that popular curiosity as to the relative superiority of different brands of arms will arise from an ocular demonstration to all the people of the world of the arms used in warfare.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANHAM. Yes.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. It would be an impertinence to suggest that the gentleman did not appreciate the real cultural and educational value of a visit to a museum and of looking at a stand of armor and its reminding us of the armament with which our ancestors fought in past times.

Mr. LANHAM. I understand that particular brand of "kultur," which was one of the cardinal and dominant principles of the recent conflict, I appreciate the effort which was made to subject the people of the earth to a certain kind of "kultur"; and if we are to have any more demonstrations that will lead to that kind of culture among the people of the world, God grant that the day may be far distant. [Applause.]

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I like to hear the gentleman make a speech, myself, but I can not applaud and ask questions at the same time. I would like him to get back to the text. Who is trying to start up a school of militarism? Nobody has consciously been representing the munition makers. They are out of business now, so far as making munitions of war is concerned. This was supposed to relate to an innocent collection of military relics placed behind a glass case down here in the Museum.

Mr. LANHAM. Yes; to educate people in the arts of war—a thing the world is trying to forget.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Will the gentleman from Texas then see to it that the collection is taken out of the Smithsonian down here, and will he introduce legislation here to that purpose?

Mr. LANHAM. That, I presume, is in the province of the Committee on Military Affairs. Everything of that kind seems to be, if we can judge from the way they have recently had their day here in court time after time. Besides that, the exhibitions to which the gentleman refers are of obsolete material, whereas this bill provides that material now in use or that which may hereafter be used and issued shall be placed for demonstration purposes all over the world and shall also be offered for sale.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I say it was distinctly understood that those parts issued to the Army that involved any military secret, or secrets of means of combat, and things of that character, are not included.

Mr. LANHAM. That may be very true, but fighting is not a secret thing. People have been taught it from the time the human race started. We are hoping that wars will cease, and recently we have been trying to bring about disarmament.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. They will never cease by reproducing the same kind of documents as those that were scrapped in the last war.

Would the gentleman from Texas go up to New York and abolish the Metropolitan Museum of Art and abolish everything else that reminds us of the story of the human family learned from the past?

Mr. LANHAM. Oh, no.

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANHAM. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. TINCHER. I wondered if it would not be a good idea, in the gentleman's judgment, to refer this bill to the disarmament conference? [Laughter.]

Mr. LANHAM. I thank the gentleman. The suggestion is so pertinent that in commending it I will close. [Applause.]

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. McKENZIE] five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, the little bill under discussion does not amount to much. [Applause.] I am not greatly interested in it. It is simply to permit an exchange of courtesies between our Government and the Governments of other countries of the world.

But I did not rise to discuss the bill. I simply rose to call attention to the fact that I can not understand the position taken by some gentlemen in this House. When I reflect that 4,000 bills were introduced for the distribution of cannon into the districts of the respective Congressmen who are Members of this House and recall the terrific fight that was made on the floor of this House for the distribution of the same, I can not understand why they contend that it is militarism to put a sample of the equipment of the soldier down here in the Smithsonian Institution. If I believed with the gentleman from Texas, not the last one who spoke [Mr. LANHAM], but the one who spoke ahead of him [Mr. BLANTON], and other friends in this House, I would certainly oppose the bill that is going to follow this one, and that is a proposition to put a medal of honor on the grave of the unknown dead over in Arlington Cemetery. If I believed as these men believe, I would take the old battle flags in the museums of this country—battle flags that were captured by heroic men in obtaining and maintaining our liberties—and burn them up. I would take the gray uniforms of the men who heroically fought under Lee and Jackson and Longstreet and burn them, and I would take every relic that is dear to the hearts of the men in blue who followed Grant and Logan and Sherman and Sheridan and Burnside and others who fought on the side of the Union and burn them up. I would penalize McCutcheon for drawing that famous cartoon of Memorial Day, where he pictures the old veteran with the badge of honor on his breast and the little boys around him discussing the war.

Those are the things, my friend, that put the military spirit into the hearts of men, and have we come to that pass in this great land of ours when we can not have one of the heroic sons of our country, that fought and perhaps suffered for us, wear the uniform and badges of honor without being criticized as being in favor of German militarism? My God, men, what are you thinking about? The dearest things that we have to think about in this country, the most glorious memories and traditions that we live upon, are the devotion and heroism of our sons. I hope the day will never come when I shall object to these men wearing on their breasts a medal of honor—breasts that were exposed to shot and shell for you and for me and for those who come after us.

Gentlemen, I am opposed to militarism. You know that I have stood in this House and fought against it when it was a fight. I have not frittered away my time on little bills like this, or on such bills as the cannon bill, and objected to putting a few more young men into West Point Military Academy, where they can get a good education. I disdain to waste my time on things like that.

But I opposed militarism. I said that I did not want it in my country and hoped it never would come; but if we have got to bury every tradition we love, if we must tear down our monuments to Washington and to Grant and Logan and a lot of other heroes, if we have got to go into the capitol of Illinois and take therefrom the battle flags that were captured by the heroic sons of Illinois and destroy them in order not to have militarism, I will take militarism. [Applause.] Do the men from Texas want to forget the heroic record of those who fell at the Alamo and San Jacinto? Do they want the people of this country to forget all that? If they do, then let them go out into Statuary Hall and take down the figure of Sam Houston and throw it over the battlements and destroy it, and forget everything that has tended to make this the most grand and glorious country on the face of the earth, where we have a citizen army that is ever ready to defend our rights. [Applause.]

Mr. RAKER. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SEARS].

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Chairman, I am in hearty accord with the sentiments just expressed by my distinguished colleague [Mr. McKENZIE], for whom I have the highest esteem, but I have never yet heard of anyone being killed by a flag captured on the field of battle. No one more than I regrets the loss of life during the late war, but the speech of the distinguished gentleman [Mr. McKENZIE] fails absolutely to touch upon this bill. The gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GREENE] stated that this was just to get rid of a few little relics in glass cases down at the War Department; but, if I can read the English language and understand it, the bill specifically says that the Secretary of War can loan or can sell to other nations all the arms that this Government now has or that may hereafter be issued.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I think the gentleman mistook what I said.

Mr. SEARS. In other words, on page 1, line 8, of the bill I find the words—may hereafter be issued by the United States Army.

These are not trophies, and have nothing connecting them with the last war.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I think the gentleman misunderstood what I said, innocently enough, of course. I did not say it was confined to show cases. I said they were going into exhibits in museums.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Chairman, we have spent millions of dollars in perfecting our military system. The people of the United States are now groaning under the heaviest debt any nation has ever known, and certainly to me it does not seem the policy of wisdom to give these arms to other nations in order that they may learn to fight and some day perhaps shoot down more American boys with guns manufactured in America. But the committee says, Mr. Chairman, that this is carefully provided for. The bill says that the Secretary of War shall not be required to give away confidential features or anything that may be detrimental to this country, but that is a mere waste of words. It does not prohibit the Secretary of War from doing it. I am satisfied he would not do it, but should this bill pass without an amendment, the time may come when it will be very dangerous.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to read to you a quotation from the West Palm Beach Post, which perhaps says what I would like to say better than I could say it:

"If I may tell you my own ideal for this Republic, I'd like ours to be an America of mutual consideration; an America of good will; an America of perfect understanding; an America of abiding justice; nay, more, I'd like ours to be a God-fearing people committed to the task of reforming the world and teaching mankind that it is not good to make warfare. I believe that it is going to be the mission of America, and if I can be your representative in promoting that ideal I shall not have served in vain."

Thus spoke Warren G. Harding on Friday, August 5, 1921.

And this paper says, if the President meant what he said, then he will remember it for future guidance, and it will not be a mere platitude used for the purpose of fooling the people. I want to call the President's attention to this bill, in which we are undertaking to teach the people of other countries how to make war, and I trust, should it pass, he will give it careful thought and study before he signs the same.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SEARS. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Under this bill could we not send arms to old Mexico which they might want to use against us while they could not send us anything that we want?

Mr. SEARS. Not only send them to Mexico but sell them to Mexico, to the detriment of the American people.

Mr. LAYTON. If the gentleman will yield, I will ask him a question for information. Is there any law in this country to-day that would forbid any country with whom we are at peace buying from the Remington Co. or any other small-arms company all the guns they might want?

Mr. SEARS. No, my friend; but perhaps if there had been some law on the statute books regulating the sale of guns to nations 82,000 or more of our boys would not have lost their lives in France.

Mr. LAYTON. Is there any such law?

Mr. SEARS. There is none that I know of; but, no matter what an individual may do, God grant the time may never come when a nation will engage in the business of selling armaments for warfare and causing further loss of life.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. RAKER. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LONDON].

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, I want to join the opponents of this bill in the useful process of killing time. A good many nonsensical propositions have been before the House, but this is about the most useless and insignificant little bill that has ever taken up our time. Four million men are out of employment. The farmers of the country are in distress. The price of food is rising. Grave international problems disturb the peace of the world. What is Congress occupying its time with?

Little things that do not make the slightest difference to anybody. We are wasting time. The discussion here of the last hour and a half has been a high-school debate of a very low order. So many heroes have risen here, so many men of courage, who say, "We are opposed to war in times of peace. We are opposed to militarism." The very men who voted for the distribution of trophies, the very men who wanted cannon distributed to the different parts of the country, are all at once inspired with the desire to oppose everything that would remind one of the use of arms. Every one of them now is for peace. But let some President come and tell them that it is necessary to conduct a war, and I would like to see their civic courage then. I would like to know how many men will be ready to face political defeat and vote against war. How many of them will dare face the newspapers that will be advocating war? How many of them will have the courage to oppose the munition interests and oppose war when the question of war or peace will not be a high-school debating problem but a problem of life and death to millions? This debate is silly. It is a discussion which is the more useful article, the walking stick or the umbrella. [Laughter.]

Mr. JONES of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONDON. Yes.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Does the gentleman from New York think that the exchange of these articles of warfare will lessen the chances of this country getting into another war?

Mr. LONDON. I assume that the committee is honest about it. It means the exchange of courtesies between Governments. I take it that some Government has presented the United States with a model rifle or a uniform, and that we are to reciprocate that great international favor. That is all the bill means. I will vote against it as a protest against wasting the time of the House with nonsensical bills. The bill itself does not amount to anything.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONDON. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman says the bill does not amount to anything. Does not the bill authorize the War Department to sell surplus munitions of war to other nations?

Mr. LONDON. That is not this bill.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, yes; there is no limit; the War Department can sell its surplus munitions.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONDON. Yes.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Would not the criticism be answered by inserting the word "sample" before the word "articles," as there already is in the title?

Mr. LONDON. I understand that the intention is to permit the sale of models and not permit the sale in large quantities. Of course it may be perverted.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman from New York will remember that about a month ago this same War Department came in here with a similar bill to permit them to sell war surplus, and we turned them down.

Mr. LONDON. I am in entire sympathy with the disposition of the Members on the Democratic side of the House to defeat every frivolous bill that comes here from the Committee on Military Affairs. [Laughter.] I am supporting you in that noble task. [Laughter.] What I am trying to do is to get you to oppose the bigger things that come from the Committee on Military Affairs. I wish we could disband the committee. I wish the whole Congress would adjourn, for the longer we are in session the less safe are the liberties of the people. [Applause.] Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman yields back three minutes. Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. NORTON].

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I do not look at the bill exactly as the gentleman who has just spoken. I look upon it as a very serious bill. Let me call your attention to two or three words. It says, "Provided, That this authority shall not be construed to require such loans, sales, or exchange." It is almost a requirement that we should let the other countries have samples of the various kinds of arms and ammunition that we may be manufacturing at any time. While it says it shall not be construed to require such loans, if another country should ask us for a certain sample and we should refuse it, what would we say to them? We would have to say to them that we feared they were going to use it for an improper purpose.

There was a time a number of years ago when we almost went to the verge on this very line. We permitted the Japanese students to come to Annapolis. When the Russian war was on the men who were in the first rank in the navy, in command of battleships, were two graduates from Annapolis. That is what we did for them.

Now, we do not know what this will lead to. We should never pass a law that requires us, or almost requires us, to exhibit our arms, munitions, and inventions to other countries. We manufacture arms for another purpose. We manufacture them to protect America and not to make war on others or to be exhibited to others. The secrets we have should never be exhibited to other nations. Now, who is to determine this question? Some person must determine this thing.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NORTON. I will.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I think it was contemplated by the committee, and so represented by the people that testified before the committee, that what is covered by the bill is what would be seen on a man in the United States Army walking down the street any day.

Mr. NORTON. That is all right; but this is the opening wedge, the same as Annapolis was at that time. We stopped that, and we ought to stop this to-day before it is too late. No good can come from this bill and harm may come from it.

There is no reason why we should enact into law something that can do the country no good. I am not one of those pacifists. I believe America should be protected, and I believe in legislation to that effect. I do not believe in giving one iota or one inch in a bill that is liable to open us up to the criticisms of other countries when it is unnecessary. Therefore I am opposed to the bill. [Applause.]

Mr. RAKER. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PARRISH].

Mr. PARRISH. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, it is not my disposition to take matters before this House at this serious and critical time lightly or in a humorous vein. I believe that while the country is suffering as it is from the financial depression which now prevails, with agriculture, with labor, with every avenue of human production staggering beneath the burdens of taxation and the conditions everywhere unsettled, it is more becoming of this House to devote its attention to the solution of these great problems and stop wasting time on matters of this trifling character. Furthermore, this bill, like the one we had yesterday, is going in the wrong direction. It is leading in the direction of militarism and inculcating in the American people and in the people of the world a military spirit. It provides specifically for the exchange with foreign nations of samples of arms and equipment. What does that mean? If it means anything at all, it means that the manufacturers of munitions in this country can invent a great gun, a gun which they think is the best gun in the world, and under provisions of this bill the Secretary of War can, if he desires to do so, purchase the gun and send it to France, Germany, England, Italy, or to any other country in the world in order that they may study it and may be induced or inspired to purchase large quantities of it or invent a bigger and more destructive implement of war. That is what this bill means, if it means anything at all. It is time in the history of this country that we get away from that sort of thing. We ought to give our attention to the needs of the people of the country who are now struggling beneath the burden laid on them by the recent World War, and see to it that Congress legislates concerning those things only that will relieve the distress of our people and stop passing legislation that will open the way for further tax burdens.

Let us wait until the world disarmament conference is over; let us wait until the serious-minded representatives of the different nations of the earth come here and consider seriously, as they will, the question of stopping the military preparations of the world. Let us wait until they have concluded their deliberations, and then we can lay out a plan in line with the course that our combined judgment suggests after that conference has adjourned. If we continue to legislate on such matters as these and direct the thoughts of our people to the aggrandizement of military programs, we may help defeat the program of peace now so dear to the heart of the world. It will be remembered that the allied council only recently denied the munition manufacturers of Danzig the right to manufacture arms and send them into Mexico. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. McKENZIE] is logical and sympathetic in his appeal, but his argument does not touch this case. I come from the State that had its Alamo and Goliad; I love the State and all of its glorious traditions, and I love every tradition of this great Republic. I love the flag that hangs behind the Speaker's desk, and I am glad that flag hangs there in order that our people may know that we revere the traditions of the past, but there is a marked difference between revering the traditions of the past and encouraging the manufacture of guns that will kill our children and our children's children. We want to stop somewhere. I think we have come to a stopping place now, and that is the reason I am opposed to this bill. That is the reason I am opposed to any legislation that will lead in that direction at all. At least, that is my position until after the world conference has met and spoken. Then we can mold our policy in line with the course that will suggest itself after that conference has adjourned, and I fervently pray that we may then build for a permanent and enduring world peace. [Applause.]

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GREENE].

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Chairman, I am perfectly willing to admit in the privacy of this room, or under these circumstances, that this bill is not a very important bill. There is no question about that. It is brought out here incidentally in the course of the grist that the Committee on Military Affairs is cleaning up. No one had any anticipation that it would provoke anything like the amount of apprehension and alarm that seems to be all at once manifested by so many patriots here. I wonder really, as a matter of fact, whether we soothsayers can actually look each other in the face this afternoon without laughing. I wonder whether we are not really engaged on a little bit of skylarking business that masks itself under the more cumbersome, pompous, and ponderous terms of parliamentary law and usage, but which is really a little bit of school-boy fun.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. In a moment.

I can not think that men whose heads are high enough to be seen above the multitude in a district so that they have been elected to come to this supreme council of the Nation have any particular uneasiness or alarm about some historical relics of a war being tucked away in a museum case somewhere on the face of this earth, and I do not believe they do. That is exactly the purpose of this bill, the avowed and distinct purpose of the bill, and nobody with any kind of a microscope can read any other purpose into its language. It is intended exactly as the gentleman from New York [Mr. LONDON] has suggested, to permit the Secretary of War to join with representatives of other nations in similar capacity in the exchange of historical relics of this last World War and of the existing military establishments of the several countries, so that the museums of the various countries can be supplied while yet there is time in order that their cases may contain for all the generations to come evidences of some of the curious things used in the "long ago." The school children and the adults will go there and look at the exhibits just exactly as you and I go down to the National Museum now and gaze with a good deal of curiosity and sometimes with wonder on some of the relics left from the Revolutionary War. The matter is a perfectly simple one.

If a few folks see all kinds of mysterious things in it, if a few smell all kinds of Negroes in all kinds of woodpiles, why, go ahead. There are a lot of men who spend four weeks before a fight "shadow boxing," and then get licked in the fight. If you want to indulge in shadow boxing, go to it. There is nothing to hit, though you might throw your arm out. But, as I say, I admit the bill does not amount to much and probably it might have been just as well not to have brought it out just now, but it does not matter.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I will.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Does not the gentleman think the Military Affairs Committee kind of disregarded the open season for that committee?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I rather think it did. I am not proud of it. Only I know this: This Congress is a national institution and, in spite of the modesty which we politicians inherently possess, we know we are being looked at by the people, and when they see that such a trivial thing as this, which is only one of the conventionalities of extending courtesies among nations, is invested with such a nightmare of apprehension, they will wonder whether we have common sense or not.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. RAKER and Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee rose.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Might I have one moment more to yield to a question from the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. The gentleman has passed the point to which I desired to address my question.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Very well.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I want to say this. It was stated the other day that these were the dog days and the bills being considered were chicken feed. Now, it was suggested to me a few moments ago by one of the great men of this House, and if I should give his name you would all recognize the authority, that these bills are not even chicken feed during dog days, but merely chaff.

Mr. KAHN. Will the gentleman use the balance of his time?

Mr. RAKER. I think I will submit without further argument.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] yields back the remaining time, and the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] has five minutes remaining.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, this bill comes with a very strong recommendation from the officers of this Government. The testimony shows that during the war our Government made a request of neutral Governments for samples of their war supplies and they very kindly acceded to that request. They turned over to us guns and wearing apparel used by their soldiers as well as war material of various kinds. The people of this country appreciate the courtesies that have been extended. About a year after the Government of the Netherlands had sent quite a full collection to our War Department and our Government, they came back to our Government and asked that we in turn present them with a set of our supplies. The War Department officials and the Government officials generally believed they had the right to do it, but when they looked into the law they found that there was no paragraph or section of the law that would permit them to return that courtesy by giving supplies used by our Government.

Mr. DOWELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. I will yield.

Mr. DOWELL. What did the War Department present to this committee that they intended to do by this bill? What specific thing did they intend to do upon the passage of this bill?

Mr. KAHN. They intended to give the Governments that have given our Government samples of their war supplies, war supplies of a similar character of the United States, purely intended as an act of comity.

Mr. DOWELL. And had no specific purpose so far as the department itself was concerned?

Mr. KAHN. No, indeed; there was nothing of that kind behind the legislation at all. Some gentlemen seem to think that there is a good deal of danger if we write this kind of a law upon our statute books. Now, I know no fear of that kind. Personally, I think that it is simply an act of comity between nations which we can well afford to perform toward a friendly nation. But I was going to say that I have seen on the floor an evident disposition on the part of Members to refuse to perform such an act of comity. Now, I do not desire to force or attempt to force any action on a bill of this kind. If it is to be forced the friendly nation that gets the material has no right to feel grateful for what is given them. Therefore, in order to avoid an appearance of that kind, I move that the committee rise and that the Chairman report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that the committee has considered the bill and has come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Will the gentleman yield just for a question before he leaves the floor? What will it cost to carry out the purpose of this bill inasmuch as cost seems to be uppermost in the public mind.

Mr. KAHN. But comparatively little. I want to say to the gentleman that any foreign country that wants really to get these materials can get them without getting them from this country. They can undoubtedly buy them upon the open market.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. I will yield.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman withhold his motion?

Mr. KAHN. I withhold the motion.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Upon last Wednesday the Committee on Military Affairs presented a bill which was considered for quite awhile and was recommitted. Upon yesterday the committee presented a bill under a special rule, which rule was adopted unanimously—

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. And the enacting clause of that bill was stricken out.

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. To-day the gentleman has presented two bills—

Mr. KAHN. I think three or four.

Mr. BLANTON. Three.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. One or two of which were at least withdrawn.

Mr. KAHN. One was withdrawn.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Now the gentleman proposes that the committee rise and let it be reported that no resolution has been reached upon this bill. Has the gentleman any other bills that he intends to call up?

Mr. KAHN. Yes. This is "chicken feed," as has been stated. I have called up these bills. They are on the calendar of the House, and it seems to be the program on this side of the House to take up some business during these dog days, and, as the committee has the right to try to dispose of these bills, the committee has attempted to do so.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

The gentleman moves that the committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with the report that the committee has had the bill under consideration and has come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LONDON. Would it be in order to move to amend to refer it to the League of Nations?

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN].

The motion was agreed to.

Thereupon the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SANDERS of Indiana, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the bill S. 1574, had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point that we have no quorum present.

Mr. KAHN. Will the gentleman withhold it? I have an important bill that I would like to bring up.

Mr. BLANTON. I withdraw it. The gentleman states that he has an important bill that he desires to bring up.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to withdraw the bill we have just been considering and let it go back to its place on the calendar.

The SPEAKER. Has the Committee on Military Affairs any further business?

Mr. KAHN. Yes. I have a bill—

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has the right to call it up.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. May I inquire just what will be the situation of this bill? The gentleman from California, I understood, stated that he desired to withdraw the bill and let it be restored to its place upon the calendar. That is the way I caught it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not hear the last part of it, but the Chair presumes that the gentleman is correct.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Does that mean, Mr. Speaker, when it is again called up, if it be called up on Calendar Wednesday, there will be an hour's debate on either side?

The SPEAKER. As to whether it would or not occurs to the Chair as a novel question.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, if I may be permitted, I do not think it lies within the power of the gentleman to withdraw the bill. It is now in possession of the House. The debate upon it has been practically concluded. Of course, I know that a person moving an amendment at certain times can withdraw the amendment without unanimous consent, but I do not understand under what rule the chairman of the committee, even acting on behalf of the committee, can withdraw a bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is uncertain how he should rule if that case should come up. The Chair has examined and finds no precedent. Whether it would be taken up as unfinished business, the way the committee left it, or whether the gentleman withdrawing it would have the right, by withdrawing it, to have annulled everything that has transpired, the Chair is not certain. The Chair's offhand impression would be in favor of the former alternative—that it would go on as unfinished business—but would not wish to so rule.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. If it is not too late, I will make the point of order, and let it be pending when the matter comes up again.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman withdraw it for a moment?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I am not sure I will make the point of order, but I make the point of order the gentleman has no right to withdraw the bill, and I am perfectly willing that that may be pending.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, of course this case is identical with a case that occurred earlier in the day, and one of the leaders on that side insisted that it was necessary for the chairman of the committee to withdraw the bill from the House. The Speaker, as I recall, rather agreed with me, and in order to avoid any further friction the chairman of the committee withdrew the bill, just as he did a moment ago, and that seemed to be satisfactory to everybody.

DECORATIONS FOR VALOR FOR UNIDENTIFIED AMERICAN.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman desire to call up further business from the Committee on Military Affairs?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the bill H. R. 7255, which is on the House Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California calls up a bill which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7255) authorizing bestowal upon the unknown, unidentified American to be buried in the Memorial Amphitheater of the National Cemetery at Arlington, Va., the congressional medal of honor and the distinguished service cross.

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States be, and he hereby is, authorized to bestow with appropriate ceremonies, military and civil, the congressional medal of honor and the distinguished service cross upon the unknown, unidentified American to be buried in the Memorial Amphitheater of the National Cemetery at Arlington, Va., on November 11, 1921.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. HILL], who reported the bill.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, I shall not take more than two or three minutes to explain this bill.

The United States recently fought a great war. The whole people of the United States fought that war, and the soldiers and sailors and other combatant troops were only the agents of the whole American people. In order to honor itself and honor particularly one of those agents, and in honoring one of the unknown dead to honor all of the unknown dead, it has been decided by this country that on armistice day next, November 11, there be buried in Arlington Cemetery an unknown American, selected from the "unknown" burial grounds of the battle fields of France, on which this Nation's representatives participated. It is not known whether that unknown American was a soldier, or a sailor, or a marine, or a Red Cross man, or a Knight of Columbus, or a Jewish welfare worker, or a Young Men's Christian Association man, or whether he was merely a civilian who happened to die at that time for his country. He is to be buried as an unknown American, a representative of this country.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HILL. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I have always understood that the congressional medal had a very peculiar significance. It is given only for service of a very particular character, and that gives it its distinctive significance. Now, how can it be that that medal, given because of the significance of the service, can be conferred upon a man or upon the body of a man of whose service nothing is known?

Mr. HILL. I am glad to answer that question. The congressional medal was created by Congress as the highest decoration it could give to any man for military service to the country, and Congress can confer that decoration on any man they desire, because Congress made that decoration and can give it as it pleases. This is given, if you pass this measure, as recognition of the valor of the American people through their representative who is buried here, a valor above and beyond the mere discharge of duty.

I might say in addition that it is my understanding that Congress authorized the conferring of that same congressional medal on an unknown dead soldier of England and an unknown dead soldier of France. I think that is correct.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Does the gentleman mean to say that this Congress did that?

Mr. HILL. I understand that the Congress of the United States did that.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HILL. Yes.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I raised that question in committee. I think the gentleman raises a very important point, the very same point that was raised in the committee, because, as has been suggested, the congressional medal of honor was instituted to be conferred upon a soldier whose conspicuous gallantry, recognized and identified in the act, of course, was above and beyond the call of duty, and it had to be, as the gentleman from Tennessee so aptly indicated, a specific instance and identified. That point was raised; but, as the gentleman from Maryland has suggested, Mr. FISKE, of New York, the author of this bill and its proponent, said he shared somewhat in this same opinion, that it might be unwise to employ this medal in this general way, which would tend to cheapen its significance. He said the precedent for it was some legislation that had been passed by a preceding Congress bestowing a similar medal on the unknown dead of England and on the unknown dead of France, and therefore we could not afford to do less for our own unknown dead than we had done for the unknown dead of our allies.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I do not want the gentleman from Vermont to understand that I meant cheapening this medal.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I used the word in the sense of misapplying it and thus causing it to lose its significance.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. It is an unknown soldier; his family is unknown. Is the medal to be buried in the coffin with him?

Mr. HILL. In answer to the gentleman's question I will say that the bill is very brief, and the report of the committee, which I was directed to make, simply recommends the passage of the bill. I may say to the gentleman from Tennessee that as to the point he raises regarding the authority of Congress to grant this honor, the question was taken up, and we felt that Congress had the right to grant this decoration under these peculiar circumstances.

I think there is nothing more to be said unless there are some questions that gentlemen wish to propound.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HILL. Yes.

Mr. KAHN. I want to say frankly to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] that practically the entire Committee on Military Affairs doubted the advisability of conferring the congressional medal in this case, but it was called to our attention that on the 3d of March, 1921, just before the adjournment of the preceding Congress, some Members of the House had succeeded in getting through a bill which conferred the two medals mentioned in this bill upon the unknown dead of England and the unknown dead of France. The committee therefore felt that this Government having presented those medals to those foreign unknown dead, it would be eminently proper to decorate an unknown American soldier's grave with a similar medal.

Mr. HILL. I would like to add to that statement of the gentleman that when it came up in the committee it was not urged by the War Department; it was urged by the American Legion; personally I was very glad to vote for this decoration of the one impersonation of the American unknown dead in this war.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HILL. Yes.

Mr. SEARS. I think the gentleman is somewhat in error in his statement, although I am somewhat in accord with the sentiment of the bill. As the gentleman said, we would not know whether this was an American soldier, sailor, or marine, or Red Cross representative, or Jewish Welfare laborer, or Mason, or Y. M. C. A., or Red Cross worker, or what not. In that case how will we know that Congress is not conferring a medal on a German soldier instead of on an American soldier? He might not have been an American citizen.

Mr. HILL. I think the act of Congress will confer the right of citizenship on him when he is taken out of an American cemetery.

Mr. SEARS. That would be so in case a mistake were made. After we bury him no doubt we make an American soldier out of him.

Mr. HILL. After we bury him I do not think there will be a Member here who will rise and say he is not an American.

Mr. PARRISH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HILL. Yes.

Mr. PARRISH. Is it not in the mind of the gentleman in reporting this bill that this is not an attempt to reward an individual, but a recognition of the patriotism and unselfish service rendered by the American people in this war? It is not an attempt to reward an American individual, but the great body of the people?

Mr. HILL. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield in connection with the statement made by the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. HILL. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. That, it seems to me, is the difficulty about it. The congressional medal is awarded for individual service.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Yes; and if the gentleman will permit me to add, it is the unusual definition of its application, in that it is for a service that is not a mere duty, but above and beyond the call of duty; some individual thing, not a mass movement or anything of that kind which may be called an act done within the line of duty.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Exactly. There are precedents for building monuments to organizations, to whole bodies of men; but the congressional medal is given for distinct individual service.

That is the whole purpose of the congressional medal. What are the terms of the bill that the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] referred to that passed here in March, conferring the congressional medal on the unknown dead soldier buried in Westminster and the one buried in France?

Mr. HILL. I will say to the gentleman that I am not familiar with that bill.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I understand that has been made the precedent for this bill.

Mr. HILL. I myself do not think we need a precedent. This bill was introduced by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] at the request of the American Legion, and Congress has the power to give this decoration if it so desires.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Oh, indeed it has.

Mr. HILL. Absolutely.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Indeed it has; but I think I could conceive of a better way to go about giving a typical honor of the whole Government than by conferring a medal that by its very terms is conferred only for distinctive service. It is individual, it is personal in character. That is the whole purpose of the congressional medal.

Mr. LAYTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HILL. I yield to the gentleman from Delaware.

Mr. LAYTON. I rise to ask if the number of the unknown dead are enumerated.

Mr. HILL. They are not. The number of the unknown dead will undoubtedly be enumerated at the ceremonies of the burial on the 11th of November, which will not be affected by this bill.

Mr. LAYTON. There are more than one?

Mr. HILL. There are thousands of unknown dead.

Mr. LAYTON. That is the point.

Mr. HILL. And in this bill Congress is asked to recognize the heroism of the thousands of unknown dead.

Mr. LAYTON. I should like to say to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] that it seems to me that in this Great War, where thousands of men gave up their lives, and among those thousands there were many marked instances of heroism, it would be very significant for this Congress to give to one of them the congressional medal.

Mr. CHALMERS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HILL. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. CHALMERS. I simply want to say to the gentleman that as I understand it this is a personification of an idealism, and there are plenty of individual instances of bravery that will illustrate it.

Mr. HILL. The gentleman is entirely correct. This is asking from Congress an official recognition of the personification of the fame of the thousands of unknown Americans who died for this country.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HILL. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. I am in favor of conferring this honor on the unknown dead; but in line 7, after the word "American," does not the gentleman think this bill would be improved if it read "soldier, sailor, or marine"?

Mr. HILL. The gentleman raises a question which I took up with the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH], the author of the bill. It was my impression that it should so state, but he said that the American Legion thought this might be a Red Cross man or a Knight of Columbus or some other man who was killed at the front, and there were all kinds of men killed who were with the American troops who were not strictly within the category of soldiers, sailors, or marines. We are not picking out to-day the unknown American to be buried. That has been decided on already. All we are doing is asking that he be given the highest decoration within the power of Congress to bestow in order to personify the deeds of all those for whom he symbolically stands.

Mr. KAHN. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HAYS].

Mr. HAYS. Mr. Speaker, on the 10th of August, 1821, just 100 years ago to-day, Missouri was admitted into the Union as a State by a presidential proclamation based upon an earlier vote by Congress. I shall devote my remarks to that historic circumstance, and shall speak somewhat of the antecedent history of our great Commonwealth. Missouri was carved out of the region long known as the Louisiana territory, which embraced that vast area lying west of the Missis-

Mississippi River. By her rights of discovery and exploration and conquest France had claimed title to all that vast domain down to the year 1762. That year marked the close of a war between England and France, in which England was the victor. By reason of a tentative alliance between England and Spain the spoils of war were divided between them; France was compelled to cede Canada to England and to cede the Louisiana territory to Spain. Thereafter Spanish authority prevailed west of the Mississippi River until the year 1800, when Napoleon had become dictator of France and the master of continental Europe. By the treaty of San Ildefonso, which Napoleon compelled the Spanish King to execute in that year, all of Louisiana was retroceded back to France. The formal transfer, however, did not actually take place until some years later. In the meantime negotiations were opened between President Thomas Jefferson and the great Napoleon which culminated in 1803 in the purchase of the Louisiana territory by the United States for $15,000,000.

All governmental business relating to her possessions in America were transacted by France through her Government office in New Orleans. The Spanish Government for similar purposes maintained a Government building at St. Louis and a garrison of troops were quartered in her old fort. New Orleans and Washington were both more than a thousand miles from St. Louis, and the means of travel and communication were not as convenient as we know them to-day.

The result was that the formal transfer from Spain to France pursuant to the San Ildefonso treaty and the conveyance from France to America under the Louisiana Purchase were both brought to final conclusion on the same day in St. Louis in the early part of 1804. The representatives of the three nations concerned had been assembling; the transfer papers that meant so much in future world history had been in the course of preparation; and on the morning of the 9th day of March, 1804, the scene had been laid in St. Louis for this double transfer of sovereignty; a proceeding unique in history and freighted with tremendous influence on generations then unborn. On that day three successive flags floated in the breezes of the Mississippi Valley, and three successive sovereigns ruled over a western empire. At the early dawn the Spanish flag rose for the last time in old Louisiana; the representative of the Spanish King read an address from the Spanish governor, Don Manuel de Salcedo, to the commander of the Spanish garrison; with impressive dignity the keys of the old wooden Government house were handed to the representative of the French Government; and then, as the national music of Spain was heard at the fort, the Spanish troops marched out of the garrison and the flag of Spain was lowered forever. The French flag was then unfurled and for a little while the French Government exercised the sovereignty it had lost in 1762; Charles de Hault de Lassus delivered the documents and the address of the French Government, along with the keys of the Government house, to Capt. Amos Stoddard, who represented the American Government; then, as the national melody of France was heard, Napoleon's flag came down, and French authority had ceased to exist. The Government of the United States had at last come into possession of the great domain of the West; the Stars and Stripes fluttered in the breezes of the new America as the symbol of a western civilization destined to lead humanity through the centuries to come.

By an act of Congress late in 1804 that portion of the newly acquired territory lying north of the thirty-third parallel of latitude was designated as the District of Louisiana, and so continued until 1805; in 1805 this region was designated as the Territory of Louisiana, and so continued until 1812. In that year the Territorial government was reorganized and the boundaries were restricted, and our present Commonwealth assumed the name of the Territory of Missouri. The Territorial Legislature of Missouri in 1819 presented to Congress a petition for admission to the Union as a State. Then followed three years of the stormiest political intrigue and dramatic debate that Congress had ever known. The slavery question had become a dominant issue in American politics, and the question of Missouri's admission hinged on the problem of slavery. On the 3d day of March, 1820, the last day of the outgoing Congress, after months of bitter controversy in the House and Senate, and after the famous Missouri compromise was effected through the ingenuity of Speaker Henry Clay, a bill known as the Missouri enabling act received legislative sanction. By the terms of the enabling act it was made necessary that a constitutional convention of 41 duly chosen members should be held in Missouri for the purpose of drafting a constitution, and it was specifically provided that the people of Missouri through their constitution should determine the issues of the slavery question. Delegates were elected in the various counties, and the convention assembled in the Mansion House Hotel, in St. Louis, in June, 1820. On July 19, 1820, a constitution was adopted sanctioning slavery. It is the belief of historians that popular sentiment in Missouri at that day was against slavery, but the trend of opinion in the Congress at Washington, as evidenced by months of acrimonious debate, was pronouncedly in favor of admitting Missouri as a slave State. The bill of admission was yet in the future, and the result of Missouri's appeal for statehood depended on presenting a constitution that would meet with congressional approval, so it was that the framers of the Missouri constitution, by coercion from Washington rather than from a willing choice, enacted a pro-slavery constitution.

When John Scott, the Missouri Delegate to Congress, presented the manuscript of the new constitution for approval on the 13th day of November, 1820, a new controversy arose in Congress upon that portion of the constitution dealing with the slavery problem. The whole country was again thrown into commotion upon the question of admitting Missouri. On the motion of Henry Clay, the matter was referred to a special committee and a new bill was reported out and passed as the act of admission. This act required that the Missouri Legislature should enact specific legislation defining certain property rights in slaves before the admission should become effective. Thereupon a special session of the Missouri Legislature was convened in June, 1821, at the town of St. Charles, and the required legislation was passed. A certified copy of the required enactment by the Missouri Legislature was delivered to President Monroe on the morning of August 10, 1821, and he thereupon issued a proclamation declaring the State of Missouri admitted to the Federal Union. She was the eleventh State to be admitted after the original thirteen, and hers was the twenty-fourth star in our national banner.

When Missouri became a State she had a population of 70,647, of whom 59,393 were free persons and 11,254 were slaves. In the hundred years that has passed her population has been multiplied fifty times, and the last census showed that she had more than three and one-half millions of people.

There has ever been among Missourians a restless spirit of adventure. The history of our State has not been commonplace or prosaic. From the beginning it has been tinged with the thrill of romance. Her first settlements, at Ste. Genevieve, St. Louis, Cape Girardeau, New Madrid, and St. Charles, were on the banks of the majestic Mississippi and their immediate neighbors on every side were bands of roving Indians. From these points the population early began to spread to the West. Daniel Boone, who found his earthly paradise within her borders in 1797, remained in Missouri until his death in 1820.

Kit Carson, the Missourian, led exploring parties into the wilds of the unknown West. It was from Missouri that Lewis and Clark began their famous expedition of exploration in the immeasurable forests of the Great Northwest. It was the adventurous spirit of William Becknell, a Missouri pioneer, who conceived and executed the plan of establishing the old Santa Fe Trail. It was Missouri blood that furnished the parent population for 20 other States in the farther West. It was Moses Austin, a Missourian, who helped establish the Republic of Texas and who gave his name to the capital of the Lone Star State.

The oxcart, the flatboat, the coon-skin cap, the deerskin clothes, the tobacco currency, the tallow dip, the flintlock rifle, the log cabin, the rocky trails, the rivalries in frontier sports, the courage of the pioneers, the self-denial of their women, the chivalrous solicitude of their men, their hospitality to the occasional stranger, their anxious concern about the outside world, the abundance of wild game, their thrilling encounters with red men and wild beasts, their remoteness from the centers of population, their struggles with adversity, their romantic environment, their quaint social customs, and their pious faith in Providence have all contrived to give something worth while to their posterity. But the oxcart on the rocky trail has made way for the automobile gliding over the concrete highway; the flatboats lazily floating on her rivers have been supplanted by palatial steamboats and steel freight barges; in place of the log schoolhouses with split benches the hills are dotted with modern school and college buildings; the rustic meeting house has given way to the elegant church; the weary messenger is no longer needed, because every home has its telephone and every village its telegraph station, and every locality has railroad communication. The infrequent and uncertain horseback mail has been replaced by daily delivery in the city and the country.

The ancestors of the present-day Missourian came from the Atlantic seaboard States and the great Ohio Valley, with some admixture of the best blood from continental Europe. He owes much to his inheritance of legend and tradition from the early West. Missouri is on the borderland between the North and the South and midway between the East and the West. The character of her people is a composite of the qualities of every section. With the undaunted courage of the rugged West they have blended the refinement of the cultured East; with the commercial spirit of the aggressive North they have mingled the romantic chivalry of the old South.

The landscape and scenery of a country affect in some measure, I am sure, the sentiment and the ideals of her people. The broad, rolling prairies in north Missouri, covered by fields of grain and grass and dotted with attractive homes; her endless stretches of level land in the southeast, with alternating plantations of snowy cotton and golden sunflowers and luscious melons; her Ozark region, known throughout the world as the land of the big, red apple; her hillsides and her valleys; her bubbling springs and her clear, cool streams; her flowers and meadows and woodland, are a constant challenge to those who delight in the beauties of nature. Along the banks of the mighty Mississippi from the Grand Tower Rock to St. Louis the cliffs and crags and limestone bluffs are not surpassed in scenic grandeur by the Palisades of the Hudson. The Ozark Mountain region of Missouri, with its alluring charm of peak and chasm, is coming to its own as the playground and pleasure spot for the millions of people in the great central valley of the Nation. Lake Taneycomo and White River, the Eleven Points and the James River and Current River, and the Bald Knobs, made famous in that Missouri romance, The Shepherd of the Hills, are the rivals in scenic magnificence of any other region in America. From the rocky summit of the Jess-Bald Mountain, in Ozark County, there stretches away on every side a magnificent and inspiring panorama of rugged mountains and deep gorges.

The noted Greer Spring in Oregon County is the largest spring in the world. A river of water rushes forth from a mountain cavern and tumbles and rushes in roaring volume to the valley below. The wonderful beauty of the scene beggars description. This spring and the mountain peak and the lakes and the rivers I have mentioned are but a few of the many kindred instances of nature's lavish display of grandeur in that enchanted region.

If I should undertake to catalogue the natural resources that will spell our future commercial prosperity in Missouri, I would begin with the undeveloped water power of the Ozark Mountains. Then I would tell of the splendid diversity of her agricultural production; her wheat and corn and alfalfa, her cotton and rice and sunflowers, her melons and berries and fruit, her live stock and dairy farms and poultry yards. Without attempting to enumerate all that her wonderful soil produces, I bear her message of challenge to all the world to show another equal area that responds to the farmer's magic touch in such variety of yield or with such prodigal abundance.

The mines of Missouri yield coal and lead and iron and zinc in rich profusion; and a number of other metals are found in sufficient quantities to make their mining profitable. The forest products of Missouri in the last third of a century have been converted into millions of money, while the land that produced the trees is bringing the farmers better returns to-day than the value of the timber it grew. Missouri's railroad transportation system reaches every section of the State; and she has more inland waterways than any other State in the Union. Our people are not only the producers of raw material from field and forest and mine, but the factories that are found in all of our towns and cities have ranked Missouri among the leading commercial States of the Nation.

In telling of the enterprise of Missouri no story would be complete without some mention of the Little River drainage reclamation project, whereby more than a million acres of land that was one day a swamp has been converted into a garden richer than the Valley of the Nile. Before this project was undertaken the flowage from a thousand square miles of Ozark foothills came down to the flatlands of southeast Missouri and spread out in an overflow that rendered the land of little value. Through the bold initiative of the landowners of that region an artificial river was constructed for a distance of more than 30 miles just at the break of the foothills, and all of the flowage from the North was gathered into this one mighty channel and diverted eastward into the Mississippi River. Be it said to the honor of the people who promoted this wonderful enterprise, at an expense mounting into fabulous figures, that not one dollar was received or asked in its prosecution from the Nation or the State or any municipality. It was the manifestation of that characteristic spirit that always makes a Missourian willing to take a chance.

I have said somewhat of the material things of Missouri, but I would not close without saying a word about her people.

Our State has had large influence in shaping the destiny of the Nation. Here in Washington she has been ably represented throughout the hundred years of her statehood. Between the days of Thomas H. Benton, who came to the Senate in 1821, and Champ Clark, who died in Congress in 1921, there was a long line of distinguished Missouri statesmen whose names will be heard when the future historian calls the roll of the illustrious sons of our Republic.

The literary world, too, has been brightened by the efforts of the much-loved Mark Twain, Eugene Field, Winston Churchill, and Harold Bell Wright.

This day must be reminiscent to every Missourian of the valor and patriotism of our people. When the military history of Missouri is written it will have a glorious chapter about that army of Missourians, raised in 1846, which was headed by Col. Alexander H. Doniphan, in the longest military march known to the annals of warfare, through 3,000 miles of wilderness and desert, unpeopled except for savage foes, to a glorious conquest in Mexico. Another chapter would deal with the awful tragedy of the Civil War, which divided her families and her communities, when Missouri, alone among the States, furnished 109,000 men in blue and 40,000 men in gray, gallant soldiers every one of them, who was willing to die for the cause he loved. In that chapter will be told the story of Lyon and Blair and Marmaduke and Price and a score of other leaders whose valor is a treasured memory. There will be a chapter recounting the heroism of the veterans who fought for humanity in the Spanish-American War. It will tell of Col. J. L. Torrey, who, with Roosevelt, organized the Rough Riders for a campaign of daring courage; and it will tell of Arthur Lee Willard, who planted the first American flag on Cuban soil.

Then will come the final chapter, dealing with the great World War. Gen. John J. Pershing, who led the greatest Army the world has ever seen, and Gen. Enoch H. Crowder, whose matchless administration of the selective service act was so essential to success, will lend glory to the State which gave them birth; but not less wonderful in that war was the record of 138,310 Missouri boys who enlisted under our flag—3,400 of them were in the marines, 6,910 were in the Navy, and 128,000 were in the Army. To them I can pay no higher tribute than to quote the words of Gen. Harvey C. Clark, who said:

The record made by Missourians on the battle fields of Europe has never been surpassed in the annals of warfare. To them we must pay the supreme tribute of a grateful people. No words can measure their heroic gallantry or the greatness of their sacrifice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. DOWELL). The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the Record. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT].

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I have tried to be somewhat careful in my votes upon the conferring of medals in so far as that question has arisen and in the matter of the selection of materials to be distributed over the country for memorial purposes. I intend to content myself in the present instance simply with voting against this bill, but I want to give my reasons for it. It seems to me that this is an incongruous thing. I can not believe that the officials of the American Legion who ask for the passage of this bill, so I am informed, gave that careful thought to its consideration which is characteristic of them. The congressional medal is of course the highest honor that can be conferred as a reward for military service, but it is distinctive, it is individual, it is not symbolic. It is conferred upon an individual for a distinctive service in going beyond the ordinary line of duty. It does seem to me that to undertake to confer that medal, which has a significance that is individual in character, upon an unknown soldier—who may have been the bravest of the brave or he may have been one who was cowardly—mean absolutely nothing. I am willing to go to any reasonable expense in voting a mausoleum to be erected above the unknown soldier who will be buried at Arlington to the end that that may typify the spirit of the Nation and the Nation's gratitude. That would mean something; that would be symbolic. That unknown soldier is to represent, and the very reason that his body is brought back here is to represent, not an individual spirit but the typical spirit of the Nation for which he fought and of his fellows with whom he died. It seems to me that to confer this medal, with its distinctly individual characteristics, upon an unknown is a very strange and incongruous proceeding. Therefore I shall vote against the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. KAHN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

LOAN OF TENTS, ETC.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman reserve that for a moment?

Mr. BLANTON. I withhold the point.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, I call up House joint resolution 184, authorizing the Secretary of War to loan tents, cots, and blankets for the use of "buddie week" reunion of the Twenty-ninth and Seventy-ninth Divisions, at the encampment to be held from August 31 to September 6, 1921, at Baltimore, Md., which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House joint resolution (H. J. Res. 184) authorizing the Secretary of War to loan tents, cots, and blankets for the use of "buddie week" reunion of the Twenty-ninth and Seventy-ninth Divisions at the encampment to be held from August 31 to September 6, 1921, at Baltimore, Md.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to loan to the executive committee of the "buddie week" reunion of the Twenty-ninth and Seventy-ninth Divisions in charge of the arrangements for such reunion, to be held in Baltimore, State of Maryland, from August 31 to September 6, 1921, 500 tents, 5,000 cots, and 10,000 blankets, or as much thereof as may be available.

Sec. 2. That no expense shall be caused the United States Government by the delivery and return of such property, the same to be delivered to said executive committee at Baltimore, Md., at such time prior to the date of such meeting as may be agreed upon by the Secretary of War and the chairman of said executive committee.

Sec. 3. That the Secretary of War shall, before delivering such property, take from the said chairman of said executive committee a good and sufficient bond for the safe return of said property in good order and condition, the whole transaction to be without expense to the Government of the United States of America.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the resolution be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend and revise my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the joint resolution to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HILL, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed was laid on the table.

BIOLOGICAL STATION IN STATE OF WASHINGTON.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 1475) providing for a grant of land to the State of Washington for a biological station and general research purposes, with a Senate amendment thereto, and agree to the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 1475, with a Senate amendment thereto, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk reported the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, this is Calendar Wednesday, and I think Members of the House ought not to be subjected to the necessity of objecting to a request of this kind on this day.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the request, and I shall try to take it up in the morning.

DUTY ON CERTAIN REIMPORTED ARTICLES.

Mr. HAWLEY, from the Committee on Ways and Means, reported House joint resolution 183, imposing a duty of 90 per cent on all goods exported from the United States for the use of the American Expeditionary Forces and its allied forces and which have been sold to any foreign Government or person, when reimported into the United States, which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I reserve all points of order on that bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee reserves all points of order.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 3 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, August 11, 1921, at 12 o'clock noon.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, August 11, 1921.

The Chaplain, Rev. J. J. Muir, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father and our God, Thou hast been our refuge and strength and a very present help in trouble. We ask Thee to continue to us those high and hallowed privileges of realizing the same that our fathers did in the consciousness of Thy presence and the overruling of Thy providence. So help us always to recognize the path of duty and to walk therein in Thy fear and for Thy glory. We ask in Jesus Christ's name. Amen.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of Labor responding to Senate resolution 125, dated August 5, 1921, advising the Senate as to the reason for nonpayment of taxes by the United States Housing Corporation upon property of the United States at Bridgeport, Conn., which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I present a resolution of the American Association for the Recognition of the Irish Republic passed July 31, 1921. I request that it be referred to the Committee on Finance and printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas the Penrose bill, known as S. 2135, giving absolute power to the Secretary of the Treasury to refund approximately $11,000,000,000 of Great Britain's and other countries' indebtedness to the United States; and

Whereas J. P. Morgan & Co. are considered the fiscal agent of Great Britain; and

Whereas it is a matter of common knowledge that the present Secretary of the Treasury is closely related to J. P. Morgan & Co. in business relations; and

Whereas it is estimated there are between six and seven million people in the United States out of employment: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That we most emphatically protest against the enactment of the Penrose bill; and be it further

Resolved, That we insist that all debts owing the United States by foreign countries be collected without delay.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia presented a resolution of the Legislature of Georgia, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, as follows:

A resolution.

Whereas the ravages and destruction by the boll weevil in the cotton-producing States of the United States has gone beyond accurate computation in dollars and cents and to-day is practically unchecked; and

Whereas it would be in the interest of science, economy, and humanity that abundant inducement be offered to bring about some form of discovery on a scientific basis which would rid our country of this pestilence and check its inroad upon one of the greatest necessities of the human family; and

Whereas all research in that direction has thus far been left largely to the individual agricultural departments of the States and the Nation, without any special inducement to the scientific brain of the world to devote itself to an effective discovery: Therefore be it

Resolved by the General Assembly of Georgia (both branches concurring), That the Congress of the United States be, and is, memorialized to set aside a gratuity in the sum of not more than $5,000,000 to be awarded as a prize to the scientist or person who will discover to the satisfaction of such examination as the Congress of the United States may deem necessary to provide an effective method of eliminating the boll weevil; the award of the prize or gratuity to be made in such manner that the right to the discovery shall become the property of the United States Government for the use of the people of the United States; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be forwarded to each Member of the National House of Representatives and the United States Senate, properly signed by the officials of this general assembly, and the clerk of the House of Representatives of Georgia is hereby instructed to carry out this provision of this resolution.

BOGUS PROHIBITION AGENTS.

Mr. STANLEY. I ask unanimous consent to incorporate in the RECORD a short article from the New York Times of to-day, illustrating the perils and dangers to the community generally from the unauthorized searches and seizures of persons posing as Federal officers.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request? If not, it is granted.

The matter referred to is as follows:

BOGUS DRY AGENTS ROB SAFE OF $4,000—SEARCH RESTAURANT MAN'S PLACE, THEN HOLD HIM UP AND GET AWAY WITH LOOT—ONE CAUGHT AFTER CHASE—EXCITED WOMAN RUNS BETWEEN OFFICER AND FUGITIVE AND BOTH HOLD FIRE TO SAVE HER.

"Three men walked into the restaurant of Gennaro Damicalo, at 2 East One hundred and twenty-sixth Street, at 5 o'clock yesterday afternoon and told the proprietor they were revenue agents. They suggested a search of the restaurant and upstairs rooming house for liquors, and Damicalo agreed to accompany them.

"The men searched the restaurant with painstaking care. They found nothing save spaghetti, Parma cheese, and ginger ale. Then they said that they would like to go over the entire house. Damicalo escorted them upstairs. In a room on the second floor the 'agents' found the proprietor's small safe. Apparently they knew it beforehand, for as soon as they entered the room and before they even glanced at the strong box they slammed the door and leveled pistols at Damicalo.

"The restaurant man is beyond 60 years of age. He followed orders to open the safe, and the three men took $4,000 worth of jewelry and $162 in cash. One took charge of the loot; the others warned Damicalo that a move to follow them would bring him death. They darted down the stairs, but Damicalo followed.

"On the ground floor the restaurant keeper's cries enlisted three waiters and four customers in a chase that led to Madison Avenue. One of the robbers ran south, the second made east, the third turned around, eluded the pursuers and ran to Fifth Avenue.

"Policeman Michael Mahoney, of the East One hundred and twenty-sixth Street station, joined the chase. He was but a few steps behind one fugitive when the man ran up the steps of 2 East One hundred and nineteenth Street. At the top the man halted, wheeled, and pointed his pistol at the policeman. Before he could fire a woman on the sidewalk inadvertently got between the man and his target. Both the fugitive and Mahoney were afraid of hitting the woman. In her excitement she stood still. During the second of her indecision Detectives Grantner and Shields grappled with the man.

"He fought furiously. Twice the two detectives, reinforced by Mahoney, thought they had him down. But he shook them off and finally struggled free. He dashed into the hallway of the apartment house and into the ground-floor apartment of Salvatore Mallah, whose door happened to be open.

"The police were right behind him. As he tossed his pistol back of a washstand they made him prisoner. At the East One hundred and twenty-sixth Street station, where he was charged with assault and robbery—the police said that he had struck Damicalo—the man said that he was Laberto Burgeure, 23 years old, a dressmaker, living at 39 Carmine Street. The police said that he admitted his share in the robbery. The two other men eluded pursuit and got away with the loot."

EXTENSION OF RENTS ACT.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Morning business is closed.

Mr. BALL. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 2131) to extend for the period of seven months the provisions of Title II of the food control and the District of Columbia rents act, approved October 22, 1919, and for other purposes.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator from Delaware yield to me for about two minutes?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will first ask is there objection to the request of the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. KING. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. POINDEXTER. What is the request?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. To proceed to the consideration of the District of Columbia rents bill.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

Mr. BALL. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill notwithstanding the objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Delaware.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2131) to extend for the period of seven months the provisions of Title II of the food control and the District of Columbia rents act, approved October 22, 1919, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. KING. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Delaware yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. BALL. I shall not yield for any lengthy discussion, unless it be on the pending bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will say that any Senator may address the Chair, and if he secures recognition he may speak upon any subject which he desires.

Mr. KING. I do not desire to take the Senator from Delaware from the floor, if he claims it.

Mr. BALL. I thought I still had the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware has the floor, if he desires to speak on the pending bill or anything else.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Delaware will not become impatient if I occupy two or three minutes in the consideration of another subject.

Mr. BALL. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

RELATIONS WITH RUSSIA.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I shall occupy but a short time as I know the Senator from Delaware is anxious to have the measure which has been before the Senate for some time disposed of.

As Senators know, I have opposed recognizing the bolshevik régime. Lenin and Trotsky, with a few hundred thousand communists, have superimposed upon Russia a tyranny so brutal, oppressive, and degrading as to bring Russia to the verge of ruin. History does not furnish a parallel to the soviet debacle. At a time when the world was on fire and when the fate of Russia as a nation was threatened by the Central Empires, the destructive hand of bolshevism was laid upon the nation and upon the people.

The Russian armies had been fighting bravely and had suffered unparalleled losses in their heroic efforts to resist the German and Austrian armies as they relentlessly pressed toward Petrograd and Moscow. The Kerensky government was overthrown and Lenin and Trotsky, with their communist followers, seized the reins of authority. They betrayed the Russian people and placed Russia for the moment under the control of Germany. The Russian armies were disintegrated, and confusion and chaos existed in every part of the Russian dominions. The constituent assembly was dissolved, and a bloody and tyrannous authority was forced upon the passive and unresisting people. Bewildered at the condition surrounding them, uneducated, with no anchor and no moral leaders, the people helplessly were driven before a brutal military minority who did not represent the views, ideals, or aspirations of the Russian people, or reflect their sentiments upon the economic, political, or other questions which were vital to their welfare.

Religion was banned, the churches were closed, the lips of the priests sealed, and the influences and forces which had guided the people were submerged or destroyed, and they were left leaderless, helpless, and indeed hopeless upon a tumultuous sea, the waters of which ran high before the tempest of bolshevism.

More than a million of the best minds of Russia were driven from their homes and their nation. Hundreds of thousands of loyal Russians, who desired the welfare and salvation of their nation, were imprisoned or murdered, and everywhere the bloody, brutal hand of bolshevism was raised to repress any movement which sought the redemption of the Russian people. As a result there has been moral and material degeneracy, and Russia has been plunged into an abyss so tragic and so horrible as to excite the sympathies of the civilized world.

The hateful form of bolshevism rises above the ruins, and its cruel and heartless laugh seeks to drown the cries and the agonies of helpless millions. The Russian peasant, passive, docile, unresisting, has submitted and still submits to this cruel oppression, and seems incapable of throwing off the grip of the monster which has destroyed the freedom of Russia and her people.

Production has ceased. Transportation not only is disorganized but as a system is practically nonexistent; and the people, scourged by famine and disease, are perishing by the thousands upon the arid plains and sun-baked lands and sterile wastes of Russia. Not alone in the villages but in the cities, hunger, disease, and death lay their blighting hand upon the people.

Undoubtedly some of the reports carried by the press are exaggerated, but the truth as to the awful conditions is so appalling as to bring pity to the hearts of the most insensate. The situation is so tragic as to awaken the civilized world. Russia must be helped. Russia's people must not be destroyed. Steps must be taken to stem the tide of typhus and cholera and disease and death which is sweeping Russia and the waves of which may inundate other lands.

The granting of aid to Russia does not involve the recognition of the soviet régime. We can not recognize, either de facto or de jure, a brutal, murderous force which announces its purpose to destroy this and all other governments. We must disassociate, at least for the moment, the Russian people from bolshevism and think of the great silent, sorrowing, dying people who do not want bolshevism, who hate and abhor it, and whose sufferings have been so great as to produce lethargy and indeed a state of coma from which they are unable to be aroused.

Bolshevism is not Russia, but unfortunately Russia, suffering from the death potion which has been administered, in agony submits to the oppressors' rule. There are millions of Russian people who have abandoned their hovels and their homes and are wandering over almost uncharted wastes suffering and dying from hunger and disease. Cholera, typhus, and other scourges are devastating the land. Thousands of little children are abandoned in the wild flights of the people—flights resulting from misery and madness. In this wretched and unhappy land tens of thousands of people, struggling through the darkness of the night and under the fierce heat of the summer sun, push their way, some to the east, some to the south, and some to the west, intent only upon satisfying the pangs of hunger and finding some relief from the horrors which envelop them. Millions are dying from disease and hunger. The hand of death is laid upon Russia. Cries of the people must arouse this and other lands. Relief must be afforded.

The American people have always been the first to respond to the cries of distress no matter what part of the world they came from, whether the people were black, brown, or white, whether Anglo-Saxon or Slav. America's heart has always responded to the cries for succor and relief.

The Red Cross and other organizations should, in my opinion, obtain funds from all parts of the land. I feel sure that the generous hearts of the American people will be touched by this tragic situation and that they will make contributions to save the children and as many as possible of the dying adults of this unhappy land.

Undoubtedly insurmountable obstacles will arise so that aid can not reach many of the sections where starvation and death are now desolating the land. North of the Caspian Sea and in the region of the Volga it seems impossible, because of the destruction of the transportation system, to reach districts where aid is imperatively required. It is quite likely that it is beyond human power to remedy the distressing conditions, to alleviate the sorrows and sufferings of all whose appeals are heard round the world. However, every effort possible should be made to grant relief and to lay the tender hand of mercy upon as many of these stricken people as it is humanly possible to do.

The premiers of Great Britain and France, the dispatches of this morning announce, are taking steps, in behalf of their respective Governments, to carry aid to Russia. And other European nations will join with them and with this Nation in a broad and comprehensive relief plan.

Mr. Hoover's organization, which accomplished such great results in Europe during and following the war, still exists, though perhaps in skeleton form only, and it is now functioning for Russia's relief. This organization should be strengthened, funds should be supplied, and every possible effort made in order that its operations may be successful. I am willing that the Government of the United States should make contribution to the Russian people, and I have accordingly prepared a joint resolution, which I shall offer for appropriate reference, carrying an appropriation of $5,000,000 to be expended by the President of the United States for this purpose. This appropriation is no recognition of the soviet government nor is it a loan to the Russian people. This measure is not inconsistent with the position which I have heretofore taken and to which I still adhere, that there shall be no recognition by the United States of the despotism of Lenin and Trotski.

The distinguished Senator from Maryland [Mr. FRANCE] has recently spent a few days in Russia. The press announces that he will advocate that the United States Government loan to the soviet government from two to four billions of dollars.

Mr. President, such a course is inconceivable. It is a fatuous and, in my judgment, a preposterous policy. The soviets have repudiated the loans which Russia obtained from other nations. France, as well as other nations, loaned to Russia at various times, and particularly during the war, amounts aggregating billions of dollars. These obligations have been repudiated, and the soviet régime declares its purpose to be to destroy France and Great Britain and the United States and all other nations in order that bolshevism may reign throughout the world. Nations are to be destroyed and international bolshevism is to dominate, oppress, and destroy humanity.

Permit me to say in passing that we are not now in a position to extend further credits, of any magnitude at least, to other nations. We have loaned approximately $20,000,000,000 to Europe. Capital which we need at home we have loaned to impoverished, if not bankrupt, nations. Further credits of any magnitude might impair our own financial stability. We desire, of course, the rehabilitation of Europe. Her prosperity will be reflected by increased prosperity in our own land. It is important that there be an industrial revival in Europe and that the impoverished people increase their production. Our obligations can only be paid when Europe treads the pathway of progress and prosperity. Europe requires our surplus products. As much as we desire that she acquire them, we can not extend credit sufficiently great to enable Europe to purchase all the raw materials and finished products of which she stands in need. Europe must produce and then find markets for her products. When we shall receive her products in sufficient quantities, she can meet her obligations and purchase still more of our surplus products.

Of course, in the absence of the Senator from Maryland, I will not discuss the statements attributed to him further than to say that it would be a most unwise, if not dangerous, policy for the United States to loan to the soviet régime two or four billions of dollars or any sum or amount whatever.

It is the duty of the American people to make contributions to save the starving and dying people of Russia, and I appeal to the generous people of this great land to open their hearts and their treasure to a cause so worthy and so appealing.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 98) appropriating $5,000,000 for the relief of famine sufferers in Russia was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

INTERSTATE HIGHWAY SYSTEM.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, the morning papers carry the announcement that the President and the Republican leaders in both Houses of Congress have agreed upon a recess on the 20th day of this month, conditioned, I believe, upon the passage of the revenue bill in the House.

I do not intend at this time to discuss the advisability, in my opinion, of taking a recess. I feel it my duty to say, however, that unless certain bills, and one bill in particular, are acted upon by this body prior to the 20th day of this month, I shall make every opposition within my power to recessing; and while that effort would not have very much effect here, unless supported, I am confident that the Senators from the public-land States will join in that opposition. In the event of such opposition, I think that any attempt at a recess will prove futile.

I have particularly in mind the legislation intended to amend the good roads act so as to adjust equitably the expenditures on behalf of the Government and the public-land States in the building of roads. This matter has been before Congress for over seven months. The emergency existing has been described not only to the Senate but admitted by the chairman of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads. I do not understand why that committee does not act. It will have to act immediately if there is to be any road legislation prior to the proposed recess.

The public-land States of the West are in the position to-day that they can not make allocations of funds for road purposes because of the indefiniteness of the arrangement that must exist between the Government and the States. Under the present law, as is well known, the Government may put up only 50 per cent of the cost of these roads. Under the proposed legislation it is intended that the States shall put up only such proportion of the 50 per cent as the privately owned land bears to the total area of the State. In other words, the public-land States own only from 10 to 80 per cent of the land within the States. The rest of it is owned by the Federal Government. The injustice of the State paying for building roads on Government land has been recognized. It is only a question of action.

The Sells bill passed the House of Representatives on January 29, 1921, carrying a provision to correct this injustice. That bill came to the Senate and was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads. What was the result of that reference? Was any action ever taken on the Sells bill? Not at all. It carried everything that all of us are trying to accomplish. Instead of taking action upon the Sells bill the Senate reported out a bill introduced by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. PHIPPS] having the same purport. That bill came to the Senate and went to the calendar. At the time that the Phipps bill was reported out of the committee in February and the Sells bill was pending in the committee there came before Congress the Post Office appropriation bill. At that time I called the attention of the Senate to the emergency that existed for this legislation. I reminded the Senate that the fiscal year of all of these public-land States commences on the 1st day of July, and that these States were unable to allocate their funds for the building of roads unless they had information as to what proportion of the total fund they would have to put up. I offered an amendment to the Post Office appropriation bill to accomplish the purpose of an equitable distribution of the expenditures by the Government and the States along the same line as provided in the Phipps bill and along the same line as prescribed in the Sells bill, as they all have the same general idea; but it required a two-thirds vote to attach that amendment to the appropriation bill, and it was defeated, and defeated because the chairman of the committee, the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND], opposed placing this amendment as a rider on the appropriation bill.

I am not criticizing the chairman for that attitude, because the chairmen of appropriations committees very frequently oppose having riders placed upon appropriation bills; but at the time that the chairman of that committee on February 18 opposed setting aside the rule for the purpose of considering my amendment to the Post Office bill he pledged the Senate of the United States that immediately upon the convening of the Congress in April, after the recess, he would take charge of this legislation and see that it was acted on.

What happened? As soon as we met in April I introduced a bill which was practically identical with the Phipps bill, and it was referred to the Post Office Committee. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. PHIPPS] introduced an amendment similar to the bill he had formerly introduced. Both bills went to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads. What happened? The Phipps bill was reported out. It passed this body under a unanimous-consent agreement that it be acted upon. It got almost the entire vote of this body under the view that it was emergency legislation. The Senator from Utah started to oppose action upon that bill, but he did not make his objection to the consideration of it, because he was convinced that if the act should pass at all it should pass prior to July 1, 1921. While he was not entirely in favor of the bill, he did not make his objection.

The bill passed this body and went to the House. In the House the committee struck out all after the enacting clause of the Phipps bill and substituted what was known as the Dowell bill. The Dowell bill and the Phipps bill are practically identical. There may be some little difference in wording, but the pride of authorship probably caused the substitution of the Dowell bill for the Phipps bill, and the House passed it, and it came over to this body in that form about the 10th day of June. It was then, instead of being acted on by this body or a conference committee, referred to the Post Office Committee. Why that bill was not acted upon by the Senate, I do not know. It was in issue between the two Houses. The Senate bill had been stricken out and the House bill substituted. It was ready for conference upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses. A conference committee should have been appointed, and one of those bills should have been agreed to, or a compromise between the two, and this legislation could have been enacted into law prior to the 1st day of July, but it was not. Now, what happened?

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SHORTRIDGE in the chair). Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. PITTMAN. I do.

Mr. McKELLAR. I agree with the Senator entirely about the matter of an early determination of this legislation. I will say to him that the Post Office Committee—I do not see the chairman of the committee here, or I know that he would make the same explanation—has been rather constantly engaged in trying to work out a measure that may be effective. We are to meet to-day at 2 o'clock to go over that matter. Whether we can agree upon it or not, I can not say.

Mr. PHIPPS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. PITTMAN. Yes, sir; I yield.

Mr. PHIPPS. For the information of the Senator I should like to say that there are some differences as between the so-called Phipps bill and the Dowell bill, in that the Dowell bill goes further and lays down certain rules and lines of procedure for the expenditure of appropriations heretofore made. The disposition of the House and the Committee on Roads of the House evidently was that they did not care to enact any appropriation during the present session of Congress.

The feeling on the part of the Post Office and Post Roads Committee of the Senate, I believe, is that there should be a continuation of Federal aid in the construction of good roads. It was feared by myself and by others that many of the States, particularly the Western States, would be unable to file road projects which would receive the approval of the Department of Agriculture and thereby save the full allotments to the various States. But on the date in June to which the Senator has referred, when the Phipps-Dowell bill was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, we had the assurance of the Director of Roads that every State would be able to insure its allotment by filing road projects which would be approved. That, we understand, has been done.

As the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] has said, the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads has been giving attention and study to good roads legislation, endeavoring to combine with the measure which the House has seen fit, in its wisdom, to adopt, the propositions of the Townsend bill, which was reported favorably to the Senate, but upon which action by the Senate has not yet been had.

I feel that the State which the Senator represents and my own State are not in danger of being seriously inconvenienced during the short time which may elapse before both Houses of the Congress may get together in an agreement on a program for good roads for the present year and the ensuing year.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I am glad the Senator does not feel the same uneasiness now he did at the time he asked unanimous consent for the passage of his bill in May.

Mr. PHIPPS. I certainly did have that uneasy feeling at that time, Mr. President.

Mr. PITTMAN. In May the Senator felt that it was an emergency matter. To-day, when he is a member of a committee which either will not act or does not act, he has gotten into that natural habit of preferring to apologize for his committee rather than to insist upon action for his State. I have no objection to the Senator waiving his State interests in favor of his committee, but I beg him not to waive the interest of my State in favor of the committee, nor attempt to tell the Senate what the desires of the State of Nevada are, because I am relying upon the reports of Col. J. G. Scrugham, our State engineer, of our road committees out there, and the governor of the State, who have informed me that there is an emergency existing and that they are tied up to a great extent in the building of roads by reason of the delay in action upon this legislation.

Mr. PHIPPS. Mr. President, I was, of course, a member of the committee during both sessions of Congress, and I was a member when I introduced my bill. I believe the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads has at heart the enactment of legislation at the earliest possible moment which would be suitable, and I can not feel that there has been undue delay on the part of the committee, or the chairman of that committee, in trying to get that legislation into shape. If within a very short time we can bring in a measure which will meet with the approval of the Senate we can go right into conference with the House, and I believe that we will have a piece of legislation which will receive the approval of the House.

Mr. PITTMAN. I have not any doubt that the committee are in favor of legislation of this character—sincerely in favor of it. I am trying to impress upon members of the committee what I consider an emergency. I may be in error in regard to the emergency. I base my feeling about it largely, as I said before, upon reports from my own State. If those reports are incorrect, then I am not correctly informed. But I do say that the committee should make an end to their consideration some time. This subject is not as complicated as some other subjects which have been before the Congress, and which we act upon much more quickly. The great tariff legislation was conceived and considered and passed by the House while one of these bills alone, which ought to have gone to conference, was taken out of conference and referred to this committee, and while it was lying there waiting for the consideration of that committee.

As I said before, this legislation started seven months ago, practically, by the passage of a bill known as the Sells bill, to accomplish the purpose we are all seeking now, and that bill went to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads of the Senate, and it is still there, I suppose. The Phipps bill was reported, of course, right away. It was practically identical in purpose and accomplishment with the Sells bill, and it passed this body on May 16.

Mr. PHIPPS. Mr. President, the outstanding difference between the two measures, as I recall it, is the fact that the Sells bill carried an appropriation of $100,000,000, whereas the bill introduced by myself carried no appropriation whatever.

Mr. PITTMAN. That is true; there was a difference in the appropriation; but as to the accomplishment and the purpose of the bills they were the same, and that was to do justice to the public-land States, where the Government owned a large percentage of the land.

The Phipps bill went to the House, and they amended it by substituting the Dowell bill, and it came back here with a request that the Senate agree to the amendments of the House. What should have been the action of the Senate in that case? What is the general parliamentary action in that kind of a case? The Senate either agrees to the amendment of the House or it refuses to agree to the amendment of the House and insists on its own provision and asks for a conference on the disagreeing votes between the two Houses. You could have had a conference, and the conferees would have decided whether they would have left the $100,000,000 appropriation in or not, and upon that you would have gotten action of the two Houses, and you would have had some kind of a law by this time.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, the Senator from Nevada evidently does not understand the parliamentary situation, nor does he understand the bills. In the first place, the Phipps bill, which came back to the Senate as amended by the House, striking out all after the enacting clause, carried no appropriation. The Phipps bill was passed early in this session, as it was at the last Congress, for the purpose of enabling the public-land States to take advantage of appropriations already made.

It went to the House. The House, after refusing to consider it for weeks, finally amended the whole road law, struck out all after the enacting clause of the Phipps bill, and inserted the Dowell bill, which did not carry one dollar of appropriation for the next year, as I have stated.

That bill so amended came to the Senate. If it had passed, as the Senator now thinks it ought to have passed, or if it had been sent to conference, as he thinks it ought to have been, the conferees could not have considered the matter of appropriations, as it was included in neither bill. None of the special provisions the Senate committee had been working upon for months could have been inserted in the House bill in conference. I asked that the bill go to committee for the purpose of providing a law which would carry some benefits in the matter of road construction for the coming year. The Dowell bill would not have done that, and it is now conceded, I think, that it would not have been possible to have secured an appropriation for that purpose after the bill had been passed. It may not be possible to pass the bill which our committee will report, but it is the only hope for an appropriation for Federal aid.

The Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads of the Senate have given weeks to consideration of this matter, and as soon as practicable after the Senate sent the Dowell bill to the committee we took it up, and we have now practically agreed upon a compromise which will carry an appropriation which will result in some benefit to those States which are now asking for it.

The committee is quite as much impressed with the importance of this as is the Senator from Nevada. Some of the members of that committee are Senators from the Western States, the public-land States, and have been insistent, in season and out of season, to secure the legislation which we have agreed is proper and wise. The Senator's colleague, Senator ODDIE, is prominent among that number.

We have had many meetings of the committee, and we meet this afternoon at 2 o'clock for the purpose of reporting, if we can agree, as I think we can, a bill to the Senate which we shall urge for consideration and passage at the earliest possible day. Whether we succeed will depend upon the will of the Senate.

I have repeatedly stated to Senators not members of the committee that they were invited to be present at our meetings. The Senator from Nevada himself is invited now, if he desires, to attend any meeting of the committee. We have been working on this proposed legislation, and if it had not been for delay, or the refusal on the part of the House to act, the measure known as the Phipps bill would have been passed months ago. We did our duty in this body. We had no chance to act upon any House provision until a few weeks ago, when the Dowell bill came over here as a substitute for the Phipps bill; and that, I repeat, carried not a dollar of appropriation, and there was no prospect of getting an appropriation unless we carried it in the Senate bill, and that, I repeat, could not have been considered if the Senate had proceeded as the Senator now says it ought to have proceeded.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President—

Mr. PHIPPS. Will the Senator yield to me for just a moment?

Mr. PITTMAN. I prefer to speak on what the chairman has talked about first, and then I will yield to the Senator from Colorado.

The chairman is entirely right; there was not any difference between the Phipps bill and the Dowell bill with regard to the $100,000,000 appropriation. The Senator from Colorado got that in his mind by thinking about the so-called Townsend bill, I presume, which carries a hundred million dollars for the purpose of providing a system of Federal roads, and I think the dispute in the committee is not over the difference between the Dowell bill and the Phipps bill, but it is the effort on the part of the chairman to substitute the Townsend bill for both of them as far as possible. Is not that true?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Again may I say that that is not true. I am perfectly willing to leave it to any member of the committee whether the chairman of the committee has been insisting that his bill should be considered to the exclusion of any other measure. The chairman has been willing to consider the bills which have been presented to the committee, and the committee has given consideration to those bills, and I have heard no complaint on the part of any member of the committee that there has been any undue or unfair means or any delay for the purpose of substituting the chairman's bill. I have insisted that its provisions should be known to Senators before final action was taken, and the committee has been practically unanimous in this regard.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield.

Mr. SWANSON. The chairman of the committee will recall that at the last session of Congress, the short session, it was urged on his consideration by members of his committee that the regular session in December would be upon us before any appropriation would be made for road improvement if we did not do something at that short session.

I offered an amendment to the appropriation bill providing for an extension of the existing law, with the amendments desired by gentlemen from States where there were public lands. My amendment was defeated, lacking a two-thirds vote by a large majority. I understood the Senator from Michigan, the chairman of the committee, to state that he thought he would be able to report a bill and get it through before the 1st of July, at this extra session of Congress, and that there would not be this interregnum of a year in Federal aid for road improvement, which would mean the disorganization of the road forces and the complete stoppage of road construction if Federal aid is not afforded quickly. I now ask the Senator when he expects to consider this legislation, and when he expects it to be enacted, and what steps are being taken to prevent this interregnum in road construction?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I stated a moment ago to the Senator from Nevada that the Senate committee had proceeded with as much expedition as possible, and I have called a meeting of the committee for 2 o'clock this afternoon to do what I think will result in reporting to the Senate the bill, as amended, which came over from the House, the Dowell bill.

I want to say to both the Senators, further, that I do not think there is a single Senator who has given consideration to the Dowell bill who wants that bill passed as it came from the House. We had never considered it when it was submitted here.

The Senator from Virginia refers to the amendment which he offered to the Post Office appropriation bill in the last session of Congress. I did oppose that, because it called for the appropriation of $100,000,000 under the old law. Even the Dowell bill recognizes the inefficiency of that law and proposes several amendments to it.

Mr. SWANSON. No; if the Senator will permit me, the amendment was the Sells bill. What is the difference between the Sells bill and the Dowell bill?

Mr. TOWNSEND. They are altogether different.

Mr. SWANSON. They are not very materially different. There might be some amendment, but the plan was to continue for one year the appropriation already made, so there would not be a lapse of appropriation. I am sure the Senator defeated the bill that required a two-thirds vote for passage by an assurance which I think he meant in good faith, but which I urged that he could not carry out. I realized he could not do it. I realized he would not get the committee to examine it. I realized, with the tariff bill and other legislation pending at the extra session—and I urged it upon the Senate at that time—that unless the appropriation was continued one year, as provided in the Sells bill, there would be an interregnum of one year in road construction and the road forces that were then constructing roads would be demoralized and would cease to exist.

The Senator, as I understood, felt assured that he would be able to get it through by the 1st of July. Does the Senator expect the Senate to take a recess for a month and not pass this bill at this time?

Mr. TOWNSEND. The Senator from Michigan does not understand anything of the kind. The Senator from Michigan did proceed with the committee to consider road legislation almost immediately when this session of the Senate began. We passed the Phipps bill. We reported another bill and put it upon the calendar for the consideration of the Senate. The House a few weeks ago passed an altogether different bill and that was sent to the Senate and referred to our committee. We have been considering that bill at every moment of available time and have agreed upon a bill to report. That bill, if we do agree, will be reported this afternoon or to-morrow morning if the Senate is in session.

Mr. McKELLAR. We have tentatively agreed, of course the Senator means. We have not actually agreed. There has been a tentative agreement.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Certainly; that of course is what I mean.

Mr. SWANSON. Does the Senator contemplate in that bill making provision for the time between the 1st of last July and the 1st of next July?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I do. It makes provision for $50,000,000, if the tentative agreement goes through, immediately available, and $50,000,000 available in six months.

Furthermore, let me say to the Senator that after talking with the director of roads I am satisfied that no great embarrassment is coming to the road interests of the country even by the present delay. All of the available money, or the money that had been appropriated up until the 1st of July, was apportioned to the States before that date, so all of the unexpended money is now in the hands of the States to which it belongs. Not a dollar has been lost to the States. Now, if this money is appropriated and we can get the appropriation the work will go on without material interruption.

Of course, the Senator from Michigan can not speak the sentiment of the Senate. I do not know what the Senate wants to do, but it will have an opportunity to consider the bill at the very earliest opportunity.

Mr. SWANSON. I hope the Senator will urge it for consideration at the earliest opportunity. My information is that this money will be needed, or else there will be a demoralization of the road forces now engaged in construction.

Mr. President, I have a letter from the commissioner of State highways in Virginia in regard to the war materials, about which there has been some complaint and some declarations made and an investigation had, which I desire to have read, if the Senator from Nevada will permit me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. PITTMAN. I object.

Mr. SWANSON. Then, I ask permission to have the letter inserted in the Record without reading.

Mr. PITTMAN. I object to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada objects.

Mr. PITTMAN. I simply object to having it in the Record and I proceed in my own time.

There ought to be a clear understanding about this matter. There are two sets of bills before Congress. One set of bills are the Phipps-Dowell-Sells bills.

Mr. TOWNSEND. They are not the same bills.

Mr. PITTMAN. There is so little difference that I shall show the Senator before I get through that they are practically the same. I shall read from them to show there is no practical difference. The other bill or legislation is the so-called Townsend bill.

The Phipps bill does not deal with any new appropriation. It does not deal with any new road system or new road plan. It has only one purpose, and that is to relieve certain public-land States from putting up 50 per cent of the cost of the roads. That is all it is and it is a very simple proposition. It was so simple that the chairman of the committee voted to report it out of his committee, and at the same time voted to report his own bill, the Townsend bill, out of the committee, and have them both here at the same time. Now, then, they were two separate bills, of course. They were not two bills dealing with the same subject, otherwise it would have been an absurdity to have both bills reported out by the committee.

The Phipps bill was simply a remedial measure amending one clause of the good roads act, that clause providing that the Government should put up only 50 per cent of the cost of the project and the State had to put up the balance. But in States, for instance, like the State of Nevada, where the Government owns 90 per cent of all the land in the State, they recognized that it was unjust to make the State put up half, and so it was provided that the State should put up its proportion. That was the object of the Phipps bill.

Mr. PHIPPS. Mr. President—

Mr. PITTMAN. Now, wait a moment. The chairman of the committee, on February 18, when he was opposing my amendment to the Post Office appropriation bill, at page 3370 of the Record of February 18, said this:

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, the subject of the amendment offered by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] has had my consideration for some time. Indeed, a bill which I drew more than a year and a half ago, and before any of the Senators from the public-land States had even called my attention to it, contained a provision which I hoped to incorporate in any measure which might be enacted upon the subject. I am in hearty sympathy with the proper recognition of the public-land States along the lines suggested by the Senator from Nevada.

That was along the line suggested by the Senator from Colorado, and that was along the line suggested by Mr. Sells in the House.

Mr. PHIPPS. Mr. President—

Mr. PITTMAN. Just wait a moment. It is along the line suggested by the Dowell bill. Let me go a little further. The chairman of the committee further said this:

I wish to say to the Senator from Nevada, in furtherance of the statement as to my attitude on the question and my interest in it as demonstrated by amendments or bills before the Senate, that when the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads of the Senate take up the question at the very beginning of the next session this proposition will be included, because I have found but very little objection to it.

Now, what happened? That was in February. There was a bill that the chairman approved in the committee—the Phipps bill. It was not in conflict with the Townsend bill.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Not a bit.

Mr. PITTMAN. Not at all.

Mr. PHIPPS. Mr. President, I merely wish to interpose and call attention of the Senator from Nevada to the fact that the Phipps bill had another object in addition to the one which he mentioned, and that was relief to the States by affording to them one additional year in which their allotments might be expended.

Mr. PITTMAN. That is all right.

Mr. PHIPPS. When the Phipps bill came back to the Senate, after having been rewritten in the House into the Dowell bill, the question of its reference was discussed at length on the floor, and on motion the Senate voted that the bill be referred to the committee for consideration. That has given the committee an opportunity to consider the entire matter of road legislation which it otherwise would not have had.

Mr. PITTMAN. Here was the bill which the chairman of the committee heartily approved and promised immediate action on when we convened in April. What action has been taken on it since April? It went to the Senate on May 16 with a favorable report from the committee, passed that day, went over to the House and was amended as bills generally are amended in the House, and it was then in admirable condition for conference, was it not? If we could not get a conference report satisfactory to the Senate, the legislation would not have been in any worse fix than it is now, and if we could have had a conference report satisfactory to the Senate, we would have had the legislation enacted into law by the adoption of the conference report. Such is the usual practice of Congress.

Mr. PHIPPS. The Senator's attention has been called to the fact that it carried no appropriation whatever, and there was a sound feeling in the Senate Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, I think, on the part of a majority of the members, if not every one of them, that some appropriation for the continuation of Federal aid should be made this year. It was the only opportunity the committee could see to bring that forward and get consideration on the part of the House, because the House in reporting out the Dowell bill cut out the appropriation which that bill originally carried, showing a disposition on the part of the House committee to postpone consideration of further appropriation of Federal aid for roads.

Mr. PITTMAN. The Phipps bill carried no appropriation, because it had but one purpose, and that was to relieve those public-land States of the injustice I have mentioned. The Dowell bill carried no appropriation, but it carried the same provision as the Phipps bill with regard to relieving the Western States of such injustice. Here is a bill passed by two bodies, and after it has passed both bodies it is embalmed in the Senate Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads. Why? Because it does not carry any appropriation. Why do we not have the appropriation in a separate bill instead of killing the bill that we fought for seven or eight months to have passed? Was there anything to prevent that?

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nevada allow me?

Mr. PITTMAN. Certainly.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Many weeks ago the chairman of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads gave notice in the Senate that at the earliest possible moment he would call up what was called the Townsend bill. In a short while afterwards—I do not, of course, remember how long—he did call it up and the bill was before the Senate with a majority report and a minority report. It was squarely before the Senate.

I should be glad if the Senator from Nevada would explain why the Townsend bill was not then in possession of the Senate and could not then have been disposed of. I think it was at least four weeks ago.

Mr. PITTMAN. Well, I do not know, of course. I can not answer that question.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. The RECORD will show it. The bill was here.

Mr. PITTMAN. Let me go a little further in this matter. Here is what the Phipps bill said with regard to helping out the public-land States:

The Secretary of the Treasury shall thereupon set aside the share of the United States payable under this act on account of such projects, which shall not exceed 50 per cent of the total estimated cost thereof.

Now comes the Phipps amendment:

Except that in the case of any State containing unappropriated public lands exceeding 5 per cent of the total area of all lands in the State, the share of the United States payable under this act on account of such projects shall not exceed such 50 per cent of the total estimated cost thereof, plus a percentage of such total estimated cost equal to one-half of the percentage which the area of unappropriated public land in such State bears to the total area of such State.

That is the Phipps bill. Let us see what the Dowell bill has to say on that subject. The Dowell bill provides:

The Secretary of the Treasury shall thereupon set aside the share of the United States payable under this act on account of such projects, which shall not exceed 50 per cent of the total estimated cost thereof.

Here comes the Dowell amendment:

Except that in the case of any State containing unappropriated public lands and reservations under Federal control exceeding 5 per cent of the total area of all lands in the State, as shown by certificate of the Secretary of the Interior, which he is directed to make and furnish annually to the Secretary of Agriculture, the share of the United States payable under this act on account of such project shall not exceed such 50 per cent of the total estimated cost thereof, plus a percentage of such total estimated cost equal to one-half of the percentage which the area of the unappropriated public land plus the area embraced in reservations under Federal control in such State bears to the total area of such State.

That is the Dowell amendment. It is now in the RECORD, and the assertion that the bills are entirely different may now be passed upon.

Remember there is no blame attached to the House of Representatives, in my opinion, with regard to this proposed legislation. The Sells bill, embracing this remedial legislation for the benefit of the public-land States, was passed in February last and came over here. What has the Senate done? Absolutely nothing, except to give great and deep consideration to the proposed legislation. The people of the country admire this deep consideration of legislation by committees; they are proud of the ability, the energy, and the patience with which the committees consider these great questions; but there are some of them who like action occasionally.

There is not any doubt that a conference committee on the Phipps-Dowell bill, which came here in June, could have composed any differences and the bill could have become a law by this time. What is the excuse for it not having become a law? That it did not carry an appropriation of $100,000,000. There is not a dime's worth of appropriation necessary to remedy the wrong that is being done the Western States at the present time. Those States are not asking for more money; they are asking to be relieved from the injustice of putting up more State money than they should put up and that every Senator here has admitted they should not put up. That is the remedy which is desired.

I should not be surprised, of course, that Senators who are not familiar with the western situation, who are not familiar with the wrong and what the remedy is, should be delaying the remedy eternally, in the hope of getting a big appropriation that will help other States; but, as the chairman of the committee has said, the Government money is already allotted to those Western States.

The State of Nevada has three or four million dollars of Federal money which is now available for the building of roads. The question is, Shall the State put up $3,000,000 against the Government's $3,000,000? That is the question. At the present time, without the passage of this bill, it has got to put up million for million with the Federal Government.

It is stated that those States are not being done any harm; but the fact is that with every dollar that they spend on the basis of fifty against fifty with the United States Government they are losing money. Whenever they put up $100,000 against $100,000 which is put up by the Federal Government, when under this bill they would only put up $10,000, they are losing $90,000. It is a continuing loss; it has been a continuing loss for years. Every dollar that goes into every road in those States is a continuing loss. Do Senators tell me that there is no emergency in this matter with the situation as it is?

The House of Representatives has done its duty in the matter. It recognized the emergency and passed a bill remedying this particular wrong away back in February last. When the Phipps bill went over there in May, what happened? That bill was reported out of the committee there in less than three weeks and was acted on by the House of Representatives and sent back here. The Phipps bill, by unanimous consent, was considered on May 16; it passed this body and was reported out of the committee of the House of Representatives on May 20. It was passed right away in the House of Representatives, and it got back here in June. It came back here, having been acted on by the other House in just a little over a month.

Mr. PHIPPS. Will the Senator from Nevada yield?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. PHIPPS. I think the Senator from Nevada is misinformed as to the action of the other House. I know that after the Senate passed the measure on May 16 I exerted every effort to secure its consideration by the House committee. As a matter of fact, according to my recollection, the bill itself was not referred to the committee in the House for over two weeks after it was sent to the House by the Senate; that the Committee on Roads, to which it was finally referred in the other House, held no meetings whatever until at least another two weeks, being the first meeting they had held during the present session; that they conducted hearings extending over a period of three days, during one of which, I think, I had the privilege of occupying the entire morning in order to explain the measure which I had introduced. Then the committee reported back to the House the combination bill, and the House passed it.

I do not believe there has been undue delay in the consideration of the bill after it came back to the Senate from the House of Representatives. I do not think the Senator from Nevada wishes unjustly to accuse the committee of the Senate of dilatoriness. As a member of that committee I feel that I can speak for the committee when I say that it has been the earnest endeavor of the members of that committee to give proper and early consideration to the business which comes before it.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator what became of the bill which the House committee reported and which the House passed? I understood the Senator to say that the House adopted the report of the committee on the combination bill.

Mr. PITTMAN. I will answer the Senator's question. The actual history of these bills is more accurate than the memory of the Senator from Colorado, which is not at all surprising. I have before me a copy of Senate bill 1072, from which it appears it was referred to the Committee on Roads in the House of Representatives on May 20, 1921, and reported by the Committee on Roads to the House of Representatives on June 10, 1921. After the Phipps bill had been passed by the House it came over, as such bills generally do, to the Senate with all after the enacting clause stricken out and the House bill substituted in lieu of the Senate bill. I have read provisions of the two bills which are identical. The conditions were ideal for a general open conference, because there were two bills dealing with the same subject. Now, what happened? This body got action on its own bill in three weeks by the House of Representatives, the bill having been passed, as I have shown, shortly after June 10. To-day is August 11. One would have supposed that there would have been a conference committee appointed immediately, but why was not that done? Let me tell Senators why it was not done. The Townsend bill had been reported to this body, and the chairman of the committee found out that the Townsend bill was having hard sledding.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Where?

Mr. PITTMAN. Everywhere. I am not criticizing the Townsend bill now, nor do I know that I ever will criticize the bill; it may be a splendid adjunct to good-roads legislation, but it is not identical with the measure I am discussing. The Townsend bill is a piece of Federal-control legislation; the Townsend bill does not embody a cooperative scheme between the Federal Government and the various States and municipalities to the extent of the existing law, but it proposes control by the Federal Government of roads across, through, and in States for national purposes. That feature of the measure has aroused tremendous opposition in some States and in some localities and upon the part of certain Senators and Representatives who are opposed to the growth of that character of legislation.

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President—

Mr. PITTMAN. I will ask the Senator to wait for just a moment. It did not look as though the Senator from Michigan could secure the passage of the Townsend bill very easily. Here, however, was a measure, the combination Phipps-Dowell bill, that had passed both Houses; here was a measure that had the support of nearly everybody; therefore instead of allowing it to go to conference it was referred—

Mr. TOWNSEND. Why did not the Senator vote—

Mr. PITTMAN. I will ask the Senator to wait for a moment until I finish the sentence—it was referred to the committee in order that the committee might engraft on the combination measure the Townsend bill and report back the proposed legislation to the Senate in that way, and thus compel western Senators, who are representing States which have suffered for years under the injustice of the present law, to carry the load of the Townsend bill.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, why did not the Senator vote against sending that bill back to the committee? Why did he not vote to send it to conference? The motion to send it back to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads passed the Senate unanimously.

Mr. PITTMAN. There are a great many things which pass this body quietly early in the morning and late in the evening.

Mr. TOWNSEND. The occasion when the bill was sent back to the committee was not one such as the Senator suggests.

Mr. PITTMAN. I do not know that there was any debate on the motion.

Mr. TOWNSEND. It was debated for a long time.

Mr. PITTMAN. But there was great opposition, was there not, to referring it to the Senator's committee? Many Senators wanted it to go to conference, did they not?

Mr. TOWNSEND. There was a motion made, in the first place, to send the bill back to the committee, and then a preferred motion was made to send it to conference; but after discussion the maker of the motion withdrew it and consented that the bill go back to the committee, and it was sent there unanimously.

Mr. PITTMAN. I have no doubt that the Senator who withdrew his objection had an idea that it was the intention of the committee to act; that the committee were going to take it right up and rush it through. I do not think my Senator who is interested in this legislation would have ever consented that it go to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, no matter what the purpose was, if he thought it was going to be embalmed there as it has been embalmed for months. The Senator has said that he is going to have a meeting to-day for the purpose of considering this measure; that he thinks there is a tentative agreement; and that if an agreement is reached it can be reported out. The bill has been in the Senator's committee ever since June; it has been there for two months; and now the committee is going to meet again and consider it. The committee met on July 26 to consider it. To consider what? The leak out of the mind of the Senator from Colorado as to the proposed hundred million dollar appropriation shows the thought of the chairman. The purpose is to have this bill, which has been agreed on by both Houses and concurred in by nearly everybody, because it is a piece of remedial legislation which everyone agrees should be passed, to act as a pontoon over which the ponderous piece of proposed Federal legislation in which the Senator from Michigan is interested may cross.

Mr. McKELLAR and Mr. ODDIE addressed the Chair.

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, for the sake of having the RECORD correct I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Nevada and the attention of the Senate to the fact that when the Dowell bill was reported to the Senate from the House I made the motion to concur in the House amendment, but afterwards withdrew the motion for the reason that the Dowell bill contained general legislation, but it did not contain a provision for an appropriation, and it seemed to me absolutely necessary in the interest of good roads that an appropriation should go along with the passage of that bill. It was for that reason in the main, with the assurance upon the part of the chairman, that the bill would be considered speedily in the committee, as the chairman will recall, that I withdrew my motion to concur. Of course the chairman had a right to present a preferential motion to send it to the committee, and it was sent to the committee, and would have been sent to the committee anyway, because they had the votes over on the other side of the Senate; but I wanted to explain the reason why it was withdrawn. It was for the purpose of securing an appropriation for the general legislation.

In so far as the Phipps bill is concerned, it applied purely to the Western States. It did not concern the rest of the country. I never saw any reason why it should be mixed up with the general legislation. I voted for it last winter, and it should have passed then, as it seems to me. I think the Senator from Nevada has some right of complaint against the delay so far as the Phipps bill is concerned; but so far as the general legislation is concerned there is very great difference of opinion about the matter, and we are trying to work it out.

Mr. PITTMAN. That is all right. There is not any doubt but that further appropriations for good roads are advisable when they can be made. That is a question of an appropriation bill. I offered an amendment to an appropriation bill last February, and it was defeated because I could not carry it as a rider. The Phipps bill and the Dowell bill do not deal with appropriations at all. They remedy a specific wrong. As the Senator from Tennessee says, they have nothing to do with general road legislation. They are to correct an error that everyone admits should be corrected. What I object to—and I think it is fatal to the Phipps bill for a long time to come—is tacking on to it appropriations, and tacking onto it another plan of operations. If you bring that bill back in here, amended by additions of appropriations and new policies, you will have debate for months.

Now, why is that necessary? Why do you not let us pass legislation that everybody agrees on, and fight every other piece of legislation that we do not agree on? That is what I am asking; and I want to say now that if that committee reports that bill back here encumbered with plans and policies of building roads that are disputable questions, you will hang up this western legislation just as long as you will hang up the change of policy. Any western Senator should oppose anything of the kind, and I will oppose it; and not only that but as I rose to my feet for the purpose of saying that there is no use of talking about a recess on the 20th of this month unless you are going to attempt sincerely to pass legislation that you have been promising to pass for several months, and legislation that is vital to the welfare of the public-land States.

I do not know of anything that is of any more immediate benefit to the public-land States right now than the building of roads. We need the roads. We need them for agricultural purposes. We need them for tourist purposes. We need them for every purpose.

Mr. TOWNSEND. And for political purposes.

Mr. PITTMAN. Yes; we need them for the purpose of allowing the great chariots of the Republican Party to pass over those roads and drop the gold as they go, if that is the object of the Senator's remark; and not only that but we need them to put to work a few hundred thousand idle men in our States who have become idle under the magnificent administration that is now in progress.

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, I should like to call the attention of my colleague to a provision in the Dowell bill which practically nullifies the provision providing for a more equitable arrangement as between the Government and the public-land States for paying for these roads. This provision is section 2, to amend section 3, the second proviso:

Provided, That any State desiring to avail itself of the benefits of this act shall, not later than three years after the adjournment of the first regular session of the State legislature from and after the passage and approval of this act, provide State funds each year at least equal to the amount apportioned for such year by the Federal Government to said State for the construction of highways.

I want to make another remark, Mr. President, and that is that the governor of our State and the chairman of our highway commission came on here some weeks ago and approved the Townsend bill; and I want to state further that when the Dowell bill came before the Senate Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads the chairman of the committee stated that he had no pride of authorship and that he would surrender anything of that kind in the interest of a good, workable highway bill which would apply to and help all the States.

Mr. McKELLAR obtained the floor.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President—

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield to the Senator for the purpose of a reply.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, my colleague from Nevada [Mr. ODDIE] is probably right in stating that the governor of the State and the road commission favor the Townsend bill; but I do not think he is right in stating that they favor the Townsend bill to the exclusion of the Phipps bill, nor do I think that my colleague is right in assuming that he should support amendments to the Phipps bill embracing the Townsend bill in the belief that that is going to be pleasing to the governor or to the road commission of the State of Nevada. What they want out there is the Phipps bill, and Mr. Cottrell, the chairman of the commission, stated that they were equally pleased with the Dowell bill, if you are relying on what they have to say; but that is not the object of my argument.

The object of my argument is to take the Phipps-Dowell bill and put it in conference, where it belongs, because it deals with one subject and the Townsend bill deals with another subject. Put it in conference and let a bill be evolved from it. If there is anything in the Dowell bill that the Senate do not like, they will not agree to it; that is all. It is evident that the section read by my colleague from the Dowell bill is in conflict with the general remedial portions of the bill and were inadvertently left unchanged. Of course, the conference committee would correct this. It is the only place it can be corrected. No committee of the Senate can change bills passed by either or both Houses. The conference committee alone can harmonize the legislation. That is the way you get legislation between these two bodies. When you amend this bill by adding the Townsend bill after it has passed both Houses you have not any legislation; and I warn the Senator, as a member of the committee, that if he votes for anything in the nature of an amendment to the Phipps bill (S. 1072) that results in delaying the action of Congress in providing the remedies that are guaranteed in the Phipps bill, he will find out that he is in error in regard to the opinion of our State.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, does the Senator from Tennessee wish to talk on this subject?

Mr. McKELLAR. No; on another subject. Does the Senator desire me to yield to him?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I should like just a minute or two.

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I thank the Senator from Tennessee.

Of course, everybody familiar with legislation on good roads can not help being surprised at the statement of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN]. I do not charge him with a desire to play politics for personal advantage, regardless of the conflict of his statements with the Record, but he has constantly referred to the passage of the Phipps bill in February. That was in the last Congress. That was just before we adjourned on the 4th of March.

Mr. PITTMAN. Pardon me; I never referred to the passage of the Phipps bill in February. I spoke of the passage of the Sells bill in the House.

Mr. TOWNSEND. The Record will show that the Senator said the Phipps bill, but, of course, what he meant should be understood.

Mr. PITTMAN. Then I want to correct it, of course.

Mr. TOWNSEND. The Sells bill, or whatever it may be, passed the Senate the last part of February. The Senate had proceeded in good faith to pass the Phipps bill in the last Congress. It passed it early, in order to avoid complicating it with general road legislation. We got no action in the House on that matter, and the Congress adjourned. Early in this session of Congress we again passed the Phipps bill and sent it to the House. The House gave it no consideration until it got ready to amend the general road law.

The Phipps bill was a simple matter, but the House amended the general road law by striking out all after the enacting clause of the Phipps bill, which thus became the tail to the kite, of little consequence to those who were considering it, evidently of less consequence than we in the Senate had attributed to that measure. The Senator says now we ought to have agreed to it; we ought to have agreed to a conference with the whole road legislation involved, and thus deny to the Senate every opportunity to consider the larger matters involved.

The Senator is so impressed with the needs of the public-land States, 11 of them, that he would sacrifice the interests of the other 37 States. Both Houses had passed the Phipps bill, but the House passed it complicated with general road legislation. Every road bill that I have introduced, every one considered by our committee, has carried this provision for the public-land States, because we have been impressed with the fact that it was right. We have been considering for a long time the so-called Townsend bill. We considered that bill and reported it to the Senate, as the Senator from Georgia [Mr. WARSON] says, after due consideration and before the Dowell bill was passed in the House. The Dowell bill came over here a few days afterwards amending the Phipps bill. The Senator from Nevada says we ought to have sent that to conference right off, because we could have agreed upon the Phipps bill provision, but that we should not have considered anything else. I submit that the Senator will find few who will agree with him on that proposition.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Yes.

Mr. PITTMAN. Would it not have been perfectly possible for the House to recede from all that portion of the Dowell bill dealing with general legislation?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Oh, it was possible, but most improbable; and the majority of the Senate and the House were more interested in the general highway law than they were in the special interest of the Senator from Nevada. Congress, I take it, wants general road legislation, and it is willing to include the Phipps provisions.

Mr. PITTMAN. As I understand the chairman, then, it is that interest of the other States that is delaying legislation for these 11 States?

Mr. TOWNSEND. It can not now be accomplished separately. If it could have been, the House would have enacted it separately. It has twice had the opportunity and twice it has failed to do it.

Mr. PITTMAN. That is exactly what I thought.

Mr. TOWNSEND. But they did not do it, and they can not consider it with hope of success except in connection with the general subject. Now, we take that as we find it, and our committee have proceeded just as rapidly as we could proceed. I am perfectly willing to abide by the judgment of the members of the committee, those who are favorable to our bill and otherwise. The chairman of the committee has been frequently met by members of the committee with the statement that they could not be here at the meetings. I have solicited the membership. I have been pressed with other duties, as has every other member. Finally I have been instructed by the whole committee to prepare the bill as we had tentatively agreed to it, and I have worked assiduously at that job. Yesterday I called a meeting of the committee for 2 o'clock this afternoon to consider the results of what I have done in response to their orders. I dislike very much to interrupt the Senator from Tennessee—

Mr. McKELLAR. That is all right.

Mr. TOWNSEND. But one thing that has impressed me from the beginning of this road legislation is that we should divert it as much as possible from politics. I leave it to the committee to say whether my actions as chairman have ever belied that profession, and whether I have at any time even suggested that the bill which bears my name should be considered to the exclusion of any other.

I have had an interest in good roads for purely unselfish reasons. I am in favor of appropriations for good roads by the Federal Government, but I have felt that those appropriations should be made for a purpose which would serve the national good. I have insisted that that principle should be considered in road legislation, and I have asked for that alone. I have never asked that my bill be passed without consideration. I wanted all of the propositions brought before the committee, and the committee have now had them before it, and we have acted with as much intelligence as we possess, and with due expedition. I thank the Senator.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, I desire to propound an inquiry to the Senator from Michigan.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield to him for the purpose of asking a question. I hope it will not take any length of time, however.

Mr. WILLIS. I think the country would be interested, Mr. President, because it has absolute confidence in the ability and the industry of the chairman of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, in a statement from him at this time, if he cares to make such a statement, as to what will probably be the policy of his committee touching legislation on this subject at the present session. There is much talk about a possible recess. In our State those interested in good roads are very anxious to know, if they can find out, what the attitude of Congress is likely to be on this question. The attitude of the Senate, I think, will be, in the long run, what the attitude of the Senator and his committee is. Will the Senator make a statement on that subject?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I will be very glad to make a statement, with as much authority as I feel I have to represent the committee. If the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads agrees to report the bill this afternoon, I shall present it to the Senate, and I shall ask next week that that bill be given consideration. It is up to the Senate to determine whether that shall be done or not. I believe it ought to be passed, and passed promptly. I shall ask for action next week, if we are in session; at the very earliest day next week when we can get our report out I shall ask for the consideration of the bill, and I hope that it will receive the approval of the Senate.

FEDERAL PATRONAGE IN TENNESSEE.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I send to the desk a resolution which I ask leave to introduce, out of order, and I ask that the Secretary may read it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the Secretary will read the resolution.

The Assistant Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That the Post Office Committee of the Senate be, and is hereby, authorized and instructed to investigate the alleged violations of the civil service act and the alleged selling of Federal offices in Tennessee by John W. Overall, Republican national committeeman and alleged referee in patronage matters in that State.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I now desire to address myself for a few moments to this resolution for the purpose of explaining to the Senate just why it is introduced.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state his inquiry.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Is the Ball Rent Act before the Senate? The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The rule provides that another bill or resolution—

Mr. McKELLAR. I merely had that resolution read for the information of the Senate. I first asked unanimous consent that it might be introduced, and it has been introduced.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The Senator can not introduce it; he can have it read.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have had it read, for the information of the Senate, and will introduce it later, though I believe it has already been introduced by unanimous consent. I now desire to address myself to that subject for a few moments, while we are considering the Ball Rent Act; and I want to say here that I am very heartily in favor of the Ball Rent Act. I regret it has been delayed, and I hope it will be passed at a very early moment.

Mr. President, I want to call attention to a statement in the morning paper, as follows:

The President was much gratified at the report brought to him regarding the reorganization of the Republican Party in the South.

That statement, Mr. President, is a part of a general description in the Washington Post of a luncheon at the White House yesterday, in which some of these matters were discussed, and, among other things, the reorganization of the Republican Party in the South. I want to say that I think if the President is satisfied with the present organization of the Republican Party in the South, he must have been misinformed, just as he was misinformed about their being a state of semi-famine in the South a short time ago. I am sure if he knew of the facts which I am now going to relate, he would not be satisfied with the condition of his party in Tennessee at least.

I want to call the Senate's attention to one of the most remarkable and disgraceful traffickings in Federal patronage that has come under my notice since I have been in public life. I read from an article in the Commercial Appeal, one of the largest papers in the southern country, or in the entire country, for that matter, and the article was published, I believe, in all of the morning papers of my State a few days ago. The headlines are as follows:

O. K. for job assured or money returned. Republicans lead pie hunters to a merry chase. Overall in the saddle. Patronage scandal seems to be brewing over practice of gathering money for expense of Overall as referee in chief.

Mr. Overall is the present Republican national committeeman from Tennessee. He is also referee of Republican patronage in that State.

Mr. CARAWAY. Is that his name, or is that his job.

Mr. McKELLAR. Some of his enemies down there say it is both his name and his job. I read from the article, and I shall in a moment read not only the letters making the charge but the letter of Mr. Overall admitting the charge.

Rumblings of a Republican pie scandal in Tennessee are about to come to a head in the rumor that the Post Office Department has been asked, or will be asked in a few days, to go to the bottom of the activities of John W. Overall, former Republican nominee for governor, now national committeeman and referee in chief of the pie brigade in the five congressional districts in Tennessee not represented by Republican Congressmen.

Overall is admitted to be the ringleader around whom the fire is burning. There are satellites in plenty throughout the State who may be brought in.

The trouble is all over what many well-meaning Republicans who are on the inside insist is a peddling of post-office indorsements. Just how far the investigation will show the system to be organized does not appear, but it looks as those favored by John W. Overall feel better if they dig up a contribution for expenses of the Federal pie cutter. There is more than one case on record where the offer was made to return the contribution if the indorsement was not secured, and in a Memphis case a contribution in a certain case really was returned, though for what reason deponent sayeth not.

John Overall has been spending a good deal of time in Washington since the Republicans, lean and hungry after eight years in the sage grass, took over the Government. He has been recognized as the official dispenser of post offices in the fifth, sixth, seventh, ninth, and tenth districts. There are two big post offices in these districts, Nashville and Memphis, but the story goes that Overall has been looking more closely after the little offices. There are plenty of these. Stories are abroad that he has dabbled in some of the major appointments, such as district attorneys, collectors, and so on, but the great field has been in small post offices.

Anyway, first thing anybody knew some of the boys in different parts of the State began spreading the news that Overall was up at Washington and needed some expense money. "He is looking after our interests," they said, "and we ought to make up funds for him." So far, so good. But about the same time the aspiring Republicans were informed that if they did contribute and Overall failed to indorse the money would be returned. That was the case of Dudley Shivers.

DUDLEY SHIVERS'S CASE.

Shivers lives at Ashland City, a little place on the Cumberland River below Nashville, in Cheatham County. Shivers wanted to be postmaster at Ashland City. Tom May is a Nashville Republican, close to Overall. The rumor ran that Overall had indorsed May, or will indorse him when Charley McCabe's term expires, for postmaster at Nashville. Be that as it may, on May 22 May wrote the following letter to Shivers:

I now come to the letter, which seems to me to be conclusive proof of the trafficking in Federal offices in my State:

NASHVILLE, TENN., May 22, 1921.

DEAR DUDLEY: I have been on the road for past four weeks and I am in for to-day. Was out to see Mr. Overall last night and suggested to him it would be nice for his friends for him to be in Washington looking after us fellows he had indorsed and was going to indorse, and I suggest we should chip in and pay his expenses, and I, for one, would be glad to do so. I am writing to several I know he is going to indorse and asking them if they feel like it to write Mr. Overall, stating to him I had suggested this and inclose check for small amount if they felt like it.

From the results it looks as if it was good money spent.

I assure you it will be good money spent, and if you feel able to kick in, say, $10, do so.

These were little offices they were dispensing. The larger ones seem to have brought a better price.

If not, it is all right. If he fails to indorse you, I will pay your amount. I know positively he is going to put you over when time comes, if he can, and it is a 20 to 1 bet he can.

However, do as you think best. I never mentioned to him who I was going to write to. With best wishes,

Your friend,

TOM P. MAY.

I want to call attention to the last statement:

I never mentioned to him who I was going to write to.

Indicating that he talked about all the rest of it but did not give the names of those he was going to levy tribute from. That he had been to see Mr. Overall and discussed the details of this levy of tribute with him is apparent from his letter.

Mr. CARAWAY. Would that not indicate that whoever finally put up the money would get the indorsement, and they did not know who was going to pay?

Mr. McKELLAR. I think it not only indicates it, but it says it.

Mr. CARAWAY. Therefore he did not name any particular man he was going to write to.

Mr. McKELLAR. Not at all. Now, let us see what Shivers did.

This hint was enough for Shivers. He wanted the office, and $10 appeared to be reasonable enough. Thereupon a month or so later he wrote the following letter to Mr. Overall. This brings Mr. Overall in directly:

ASHLAND CITY, TENN., July 5, 1921.

HON. JOHN W. OVERALL,

Nashville, Tenn.

MY DEAR SIR: I am in receipt of a letter from Tom P. May, suggesting that we make a contribution to you in order to take care of your expenses while you are in Washington looking after our interests, and I think the suggestion well taken. I am herewith forwarding you a check for $10, which I trust you will accept. I realize that it is quite an expense on you to make these trips and takes up much of your time, and feel that we should show our appreciation in this manner.

Please inform me if you have had any reference to the matter of appointment of a rural letter carrier for the Cheap Hill (Tenn.) post office. Examination was held for this vacancy on May 4, and I understood that the applicants have just recently received their grades. Please let me hear from you as soon as possible after receiving reference to this matter.

With kindest personal regards, very respectfully,
DUDLEY J. SHIVERS,
Chairman Republican Executive Committee, Cheatham County, and Member Sixth Congressional Committee.

Mr. Overall took the money.

OVERALL TAKES THE MONEY.

In this letter Shivers put the check up to Overall about as bluntly as possible. Two days later he got the following reply:

NASHVILLE, TENN., July 7, 1921.

MR. DUDLEY J. SHIVERS,
Ashland City, Tenn.

MY DEAR SHIVERS: I am in receipt of your letter of the 5th instant, with inclosure, for which please accept my thanks.

Thanking him for the money.

The matter of appointing a rural carrier at Cheap Hill, Tenn., has not been referred to me yet. Perhaps, as you know, the department has been referring to me the three having the highest grades, and I am allowed to select one from the three for appointment.

Whenever this appointment is referred to me I will consult you about the matter and appoint any one of the eligibles that you may desire.

Paying him for the $10.

Yours, very truly,

JOHN W. OVERALL,
Republican National Committeeman.

I wish to call attention especially to this proposition. Mind you, we have a civil service law. The civil-service rules have been recently changed by the President of the United States—say that the rules of the last administration were not fair enough, and needed reforming—and here is what the department is now doing under the new rules:

Perhaps as you know—

Said the letter—

the department has been referring to me the three having the highest grades, and I am allowed to select one from the three for appointment.

If that is not civil-service reform I have never heard of it! The President of the United States said the civil service laws had not been carried out by the last Democratic administration in the way they should, and that he was going to reform them. This is the way he is reforming them! The department is turning over the question to the Republican committeeman in the county in which the office is situated, and the chairman of the Republican committee selects the one of the eligibles that he wants. Why? Does he select under the law? Does he represent the Civil Service Commission? Not at all, because he is not amenable to the law. He selects them for political reasons only. He knows no other reason. It is a dishonest subterfuge when you talk about applying a civil service law under conditions of that sort.

Then the chairman does more than that. He tells the man from whom he receives the money, from whom he acknowledges the receipt of the money, that he is going to let that man select. I read further:

Shivers made out his check to John W. Overall or his order, payable at the Ashland City Bank & Trust Co. It was dated July 5. On July 7 the check was presented to the Ashland City Bank and paid. It was indorsed: "John W. Overall, N. C." and cashed through the Broadway National Bank of Nashville.

Thus endeth the first case against Overall.

Leading Republicans hereabouts who are demanding a square deal in patronage disposal insist that dozens of similar cases are to be found. Mr. May in his letter said he was writing to several. What luck he had does not appear so far.

However, there is a report that an applicant for the post office at Raleigh—

That is in Shelby County, in which county I live—in our own good county of Shelby, was advised by a local Republican politician that a contribution to Overall's expenses in the amount of $25 would be acceptable, and the story goes further that said applicant kicked in.

It seems, therefore, that for the smaller offices only $10 is being charged by Mr. Overall; that for offices like rural-route carriers, like small fourth-class post offices, Mr. Overall charges only $10 for his indorsement, but when it comes to the larger offices he raises the price and makes it $25. No doubt for the higher offices he charges more. These amounts seem small, but when it is remembered that there are literally thousands of those offices in Tennessee to be distributed by this referee it will be easily seen that the amount Mr. Overall will get in this way will be a very large one.

Mr. President, shall the civil service laws be thus nullified and misused for these corrupt purposes? I ask you Republican Senators are you going to permit members of your party to sell Federal offices to those who have the price and who will pay?

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, it certainly can be stated for him at least that he is taking into consideration the hard times.

Mr. MCKELLAR. Yes; I think he does.

Mr. CARAWAY. He made the price within the reach of all.

Mr. MCKELLAR. Yes. I think any applicant for rural carrier in a State would be able to pay Mr. Overall $10 for his indorsement, and I have no doubt he has to pay it, otherwise he can not get the indorsement, because I will read a little further to show what happens when one can not get his indorsement:

There seems to me to be no doubt that Charles B. Quinn, one of the applicants for the Memphis post office—

I stop right there to say that I do not believe that even my Republican colleagues will insist upon the confirmation of any man who is an applicant for that office at Memphis who has the indorsement of a corrupt man like this referee is shown to be by the admitted letters in this case. I say now in advance that no applicant having the indorsement of Mr. Overall will receive my support for that or any other office in my State.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. MCKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. HARRISON. Does the Senator think there is any significance in the speech made by the Postmaster General last night in which he said, "Let us have less of 'Thou shalt not' and more of 'Come on, let's go'?"

Mr. MCKELLAR. I have not read the Postmaster General's speech. So I can not pass judgment upon it. I will let the statement of the Postmaster General pass for what it shows on its face. I am sure, however, that the Postmaster General will not stand for any referee selling his indorsement for post offices. I do not believe he will accept Overall's indorsement for any applicant for postmaster, after these disclosures.

I read further:

There seems to be no doubt that Charles B. Quinn, one of the applicants for the Memphis postoffice, has the indorsement of Overall. At any rate, Mr. Quinn stands pretty close to Overall. So does Harry True.

Well, it seems that Bond Harmon, an express messenger here, wanted to be prohibition enforcement officer. Bond went to see some of the leaders. They told him to shoot. He confided to a few of them that when on the police force he got a little liquor one night and was laid off, but Mr. Quinn was a city commissioner at the time, and Harmon says Mr. Quinn told him he remembered it and it would not make any difference, and to go on and try for the prohibition job.

A little later the Republican national committee sent out a call for funds to take up a deficit in the last election. Several Memphians, Mr. Quinn among them, gave as much as $100 each. Others gave less. Probably $600 was raised here; that is, according to the books of Fred Upham, the national treasurer in Chicago. Harmon was advised to make a contribution. He gave $10.

On June 29 he received the following letter:

"DEAR BOND. I am returning the $10 you gave me for the deficit I collected for the national committee and which you so kindly gave me. I can not support you, for reasons best known to us both."

"For reasons best known to us both," he could not support him.

"I appreciate what you have done for me and will reciprocate when I can. Am sorry that matters have so shaped:

Yours, truly,

C. B. QUINN."

"I am returning the $10!"

In other words, when they can not deliver the offices they return the money and to that extent they deserve credit, but when they do deliver the offices they retain $10 for the little offices. I read further:

And now the news comes that through some influence or other Overall has indorsed, or is about to indorse, Ernest Miller, formerly deputy sheriff and more recently city claim agent, for prohibition enforcement officer at Memphis. What worries Harmon is what a perfectly good contribution to a deficit of several hundred thousands dollars in the national campaign had to do with Mr. Quinn's indorsement or failure to indorse. The turning down of contributions by political bodies has been very rare, especially amongst the Republicans. Woodrow Wilson refused Thomas I. Ryan's contribution, but no other shining case is on record.

It may be that this is the way the Republican pie-hunters and politicians play the game, but rumblings from all parts of the State are being heard. It is understood that Carroll Reece, in the first; Joe Brown, in the third; Wynne Clouse, in the fourth, and Lon Scott, in the eighth, are getting riled about it. They have no particular objection to "Overall over us" in the Democratic districts, but they do not want the thing to get over into their districts.

If the Post Office Department will not make an investigation, the Department of Justice may. A congressional investigation is even hinted at.

So, Mr. President, I again ask unanimous consent out of order to be allowed to introduce, if it has not, as I believe, already been introduced, the resolution asking for an investigation by the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads. I have read these letters. They are not denied.

In a Nashville letter Mr. May, Mr. Overall's friend and apparently his agent, admitted the genuineness of the letter and undertook to defend on the ground that it cost a great deal of money for men to come to Washington, and we all know that is true, and that they had to pay the money for that purpose. I say you Republicans ought not to have a referee in Tennessee who traffics for money in the Federal offices of our Government, and I do not believe you would stand for it since it is known. I do not think the Senate will stand for it.

Mr. HARRISON. May I inquire the date of the letters?

Mr. McKELLAR. July 5 and July 7.

Mr. HARRISON. Has there been any denial that the letters were written on July 5 and July 7? Has there been any denial by the Postmaster General of knowledge of the proposition?

Mr. McKELLAR. None whatever. I do not know that it has ever been called to his attention.

Mr. HARRISON. Has there been any denial by anyone connected high in the Republican councils?

Mr. McKELLAR. The first knowledge of it that has come out at all from anybody has come through the morning papers published in Tennessee on last Monday, which was August 9. It is true Mr. May undertook to make an explanation, and I shall be very glad to read his explanation. Apparently they have been unable to find Mr. Overall to get an explanation of it from him, but Mr. May, who is his friend, makes this statement, which appeared in the Nashville Tennessean of last Monday:

In reference to the above matters I want to say that I thought, in view of the fact that there was very considerable expense attached to making several trips to Washington upon patronage affairs, it was only fair and just that the friends of Mr. Overall should bear at least a part of this expense.

Yes; they bear it when they get the offices, and when they do not get the offices, if for any reason Mr. Overall could not recommend them, the money was returned, as shown in the previous letters which I have read.

Mr. May continued:

Mr. Overall had absolutely nothing to do with these letters I wrote; he knew nothing of them until after they had been sent, and after he had been told of them he expressed his disapproval of them.

Yes; he knew they were going to be sent; they were sent; the letters on their face show that they were sent in his interest by his friend and perhaps his agent, Mr. May, and he answered one of them and agreed to it and accepted the money and put it to his credit in the bank, as shown by the record.

He has told me that he received a few checks.

He did not approve of it, and yet told him that he had received a few checks, not the one that we have evidence of here but a few checks; how many we do not know.

Mr. CARAWAY. I wonder if it was the amount he did not approve.

Mr. McKELLAR. Nothing was said. He is a very prudent man, and I imagine that had something to do with it. I do not know whether $10 is enough for a rural carrier's job, but they all have to be submitted to him under the rule that he himself states—all rural carrier applicants, all letter carrier applicants, all star route men, all fourth-class postmasters; and there are several thousand of these classes of employees in my State. According to his statement they all have to be submitted to him, and $10, while it looks cheap for one, will amount to a good big sum of money when all are added together. It will be remembered that the rule is that unless the seeker gets the office, the money is to be sent back to him. The applicant for the appointment as postmaster takes no chances. He sends the referee the money and, of course, it is returned to him unless he gets the office. He either gets the office or the money back.

Mr. CARAWAY. He evidently thought they were selling a prohibition office too cheap in Shelby County, because the money was returned. Somebody overbid him, I judge.

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not know how that may be. The Senator asks me about something as to which I am not informed.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President—

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. FLETCHER. Under the Executive order which existed in the previous administration where examinations were held the applicant receiving the highest grade had to be appointed.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; but the present administration changed that. The present administration has "reformed" the civil service laws so that these practices may take place.

Mr. FLETCHER. So I understand.

Mr. McKELLAR. Now the referee in my State—and I suppose it is the same in the State of Florida and in every other State except where there are Republican Senators—has to pass upon the rival claimants, and this is the method that is pursued by this particular referee down there. This practice makes the civil service laws a mockery. It makes the civil administration of the Federal Government in my State under Republican rule a matter of barter and sale—a matter of shame and disgrace.

Mr. FLETCHER. I am merely making the point that the regulation has been changed by Executive order so that the three applicants making the highest grades are certified as eligibles and the selection is to be made from the three. That gives Mr. Overall his opportunity. If the old Executive order existed, the applicant having the highest grade in the examination would get the appointment, either with or without Mr. Overall's indorsement, but now, where there are three to be chosen from, under this new order, which is evidently made for that purpose, Mr. Overall has the right to name the one of the three whom he prefers. That is the operation of the civil service law under the present order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, all that the Senator says is true. I wish to say, however, that so far as the civil service law is concerned, there is absolutely no hope in its administration, for the reason that my information is that there is not a Democrat connected, either nearly or remotely, with the Civil Service Commission. All are Republicans. Of the three present Civil Service Commissioners two are avowed Republicans and the other one declines to say what her politics is, but admits that she has voted the Republican ticket, and I have never heard of her voting the Democratic ticket. There was one Democratic member of the commission, but President Harding asked for and received his resignation and appointed a Republican in his place. The law requires that the appointments to the Civil Service Commission shall be divided between the two parties; but the fact is that there are now three Republicans in charge of that commission, and that all of the officials, including examiners and all others connected with it, are Republicans. However, the commission does not seem to have a great deal to do with the post offices and the rural-route carriers and matters of that kind, because the Republican referee in the States from which there are no Republican Senators are allowed to pick the appointees after the applicants are certified.

The Civil Service Commission merely select three of the applicants as eligibles and the one who receives the appointment is chosen by the referee. The Republican Party, not the Civil Service Commission, selects the officer.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President—

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield to the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. SWANSON. I notice that the check which was read by the Senator from Tennessee was signed "N. C." which I presume stands for "national committeeman."

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; I suppose so, though I do not know.

Mr. SWANSON. The check went back and was indorsed by Mr. Overall, who appended the letters "N. C.," which mean national committeeman. Does the Senator know whether the money went to his private account or went to his account as national committeeman in connection with the collection of funds for the national committee of the Republican Party?

Mr. McKELLAR. There is no evidence as to that, but it is claimed that Mr. Overall will make a statement about it at some time after he consults with his friends.

Mr. SWANSON. I should like to know whether the money for the disposition of these offices went to his individual credit or otherwise, inasmuch as he signed the check as "N. C.," meaning national committeeman of the Republican Party. The Senator, I understand, states that he has no information on that subject at all?

Mr. McKELLAR. No; except that the check was made payable to John W. Overall as an individual.

Mr. SWANSON. And then he indorsed it as national committeeman?

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; he put the letters "N. C." after his signature. Whatever that indicates I do not know, and I do not think it is up to me to explain it. Inasmuch as he is national committeeman, it would look as if that is what "N. C." means.

I think, however, that the resolution which I have introduced should unanimously be agreed to, and I ask the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BALL], if he is present, if he will not permit me now to ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the resolution?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The Senator from Delaware does not appear to be present, and in his absence I object to the request of the Senator from Tennessee. I think the resolution ought to go to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads in any event, and if that committee desires an investigation they can report in favor of it. The Senator's request is certainly not in order at the present time.

Mr. McKELLAR. Does the Senator object to my request for unanimous consent to submit the resolution out of order?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WILLIS in the chair). Objection is made.

Mr. McKELLAR. Of course, the Senator from Connecticut may pursue such course as he pleases, but it does seem to me, when a letter from a referee, who is one of the members of the national committee of the Republican Party, is produced here showing that he received money for recommending an applicant for office in any State, that there ought not to be objection upon the part of any Senator to an investigation of such a matter.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I have nothing to do with the national committeeman from Tennessee. I do not know what he has done. I simply heard the Senator from Tennessee read some newspaper articles. I have no objection whatever to an investigation. I should favor an investigation on the statement of the Senator.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am glad to know that.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I simply object to a matter being obtruded at this time against the rules of the Senate. I want the Ball rental act to remain before the Senate, and not to be displaced.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am glad the Senator from Connecticut is not going to object to the investigation and that he favors it, and at a subsequent hour I shall ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the resolution.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I shall not object to that if the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads does not object. If I were on that committee, however, I should want the resolution to go to the committee.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Post Office Committee is to meet at 2 o'clock, and if the Senator will withdraw his objection to the presentation of the resolution I should be glad to take it up with the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads instantly, as I think should be done.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Two o'clock is only 40 minutes away, and I hope the chairman of the committee will be here before that time.

Mr. McKELLAR. Of course, if the Senator objects that is the end of it for the present. I shall renew my request for consideration of this resolution at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I have a letter here from the State Highway Commissioner of the State of Virginia in connection with the road material which has been given to the State under recent acts of Congress. The letter is very short, and I ask unanimous consent to have it read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Virginia asks unanimous consent for the reading of the letter which he presents. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the letter was read as follows:

COMMONWEALTH OF VIRGINIA,
STATE HIGHWAY COMMISSIONER,
Richmond, August 8, 1921.

Hon. CLAUDE A. SWANSON,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: My attention has recently been called to an article in the Washington Star, July 31, headed "United States lost millions in 'national steel' of war materials," etc.

This department has a large amount of material which was allotted to us by the Government at different times. We can account for all material which has been received. The greater portion of it is in the service of this department or in the service of the various counties of the State on road maintenance and construction. A small percentage of it when received was in unsuitable condition and was junked. If it should be your desire, we can furnish you with a list of all materials and the location of same at the present time.

This war material has been of tremendous value to the State and the counties in their highway work, and we would welcome a visit from an investigating committee, for we believe that we could give them a demonstration of the practical use of the materials which in many instances would have gone to waste.

With kindest regards, I am, sincerely yours,
G. P. COLEMAN, Commissioner.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. LODGE. I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Monday next at 12 o'clock.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that when the Senate adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Monday next. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

PRINTING OF TARIFF BILL.

Mr. LENROOT obtained the floor.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I am compelled to leave the Senate to attend a meeting of the Finance Committee, and I ask the Senator from Wisconsin to yield to me that I may submit a concurrent resolution for the printing of the tariff bill.

Mr. LENROOT. I yield to the Senator from Utah for that purpose.

Mr. SMOOT. It has developed that we are completely out of copies of the tariff bill, both in the Senate and the House. There is a demand for copies from all over the United States. I submit a concurrent resolution for the printing, with an index, of 15,000 extra copies, a part for the use of the Senate and a part for the use of the House, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

The concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 7) was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the bill (H. R. 7456) to provide revenue, to regulate commerce with foreign countries, to encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes, as it passed the House, be printed as a Senate document, with an index, and that 15,000 additional copies be printed, of which 4,000 shall be printed for the use of the Senate, 9,000 for the House, to be distributed through the folding room, 1,000 for the Committee on Finance of the Senate, and 1,000 for the Committee on Ways and Means of the House.

EXTENSION OF RENTS ACT.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2131) to extend for the period of seven months the provisions of Title II of the food control and the District of Columbia rents act, approved October 22, 1919, and for other purposes.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I know how anxious the Senator from Delaware is for the passage of the pending bill, and I thoroughly sympathize with him in that desire. I would not speak at all, except for the fact that throughout the debate upon the bill it has been assumed by many that the bill, if constitutional at all, must rest upon the exercise of the war power of Congress. The distinguished Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] has made that assumption; the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] has made that assumption; the Senator from California [Mr. SHORTRIDGE] undertook at some length to demonstrate that the bill was not constitutional, because it was not a proper exercise of the war power; and the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] assumed that the court held in deciding the present rents act constitutional that such legislation could only be enacted while the country was in a state of war.

Mr. President, I do not think that any of the friends of this measure have at any time rested its validity upon any exercise of the war power at all, and there is nothing in the decision of the Supreme Court that even tends in the direction of resting its constitutionality upon the war power of Congress. If this proposed legislation is constitutional, it is so entirely irrespective of a state of war or whether or not the state of war has ceased. If this proposed legislation is constitutional, it is not under the war power but under the provisions of the Constitution that delegate to the Congress of the United States the right and the duty to legislate for the District of Columbia. It is an exercise of the police power, and the only question that can arise is whether it is a proper exercise of the police power which the Congress has with reference to the District of Columbia, exactly as every State has with reference to the concerns and affairs within its own borders.

That being true, looking to our authority under the provision of the Constitution to legislate for the District of Columbia, only one question can arise with reference to this proposed legislation, and that is whether it is in violation of other specific provisions of the Constitution, notably the two—that private property shall not be taken without due process of law and that private property shall not be taken for a public use without just compensation. The answer to that question depends entirely upon whether this is a proper exercise of the police power, because under the police power of Congress in so far as it relates to the District of Columbia we may impinge upon property rights, as ordinarily termed, in the public interest, to promote the public health and the public welfare. We have done that continually in legislating for the District. For instance, we have enacted legislation to regulate the height of buildings that may be erected in the District. That is depriving an owner of an ordinary property right. Ordinarily an owner has a right to erect a building as high as he pleases, but Congress, under the power to legislate for the District of Columbia, has limited that right. So with reference to usury laws which Congress has passed for the District of Columbia.

With reference to the pending measure, granting that an exigency exists, there is just one limit that determines the power of Congress with reference to this proposed legislation; that is, that we can not enact legislation with reference to rentals in the District that would deprive the owner of the property of a reasonable return upon the value of the property.

What did the Supreme Court decide with reference to the war condition? The Supreme Court decided whenever an exigency existed, creating a condition that is a menace to the public health or to public welfare, when that condition arose the letting of buildings, in this case in the District of Columbia, was clothed with such a public interest that it came within the jurisdiction of Congress to regulate such letting of buildings; and the only significance that the existence of the war had was in the declaration in the original act that it is based upon the emergency growing out of the war with the Imperial German Government, resulting in rental conditions in the District of Columbia dangerous to public health and burdensome to public officers and employees whose duties require them to reside within the District and other persons whose activities are essential to the maintenance and comfort of such officers and employees, thereby embarrassing the Federal Government in the transaction of the public business. That is the declaration upon which this act is based; but if the same conditions existed from any cause other than the war with Germany, the jurisdiction of Congress is exactly the same, and if the state of facts with reference to the rental property in the District of Columbia to-day is as it was when this legislation was passed, this legislation is constitutional, irrespective of whether a resolution of peace has been passed and irrespective of whether the war with Germany has ceased.

The only significance of the war with Germany, in so far as the decision of the Supreme Court was concerned, is that the court took judicial notice of the existence of war with Germany and assumed that these conditions related by Congress naturally followed the existence of that state of war; and so the Supreme Court did not inquire into the fact of the existence of these conditions, but accepted the declaration of Congress as final.

If it had not been for that, if we should enact to-day an entirely new piece of legislation and declare that the exigencies are such that the menace to public health and public welfare and convenience of public officers is such to-day as to call for this legislation, what would be the result when such legislation came before the court? There would be only one difference. In the one case the court might not accept as final and conclusive the legislative declaration with reference to the exigency. The court might inquire into the facts, and unless facts could be shown demonstrating the actual existence of the exigency, the power of Congress to enact the legislation would fall. But given the state of facts, given the circumstances that exist, it is absolutely immaterial whether they grow out of the war or out of other conditions. It is the existence of the state of facts that determines the power of Congress in the premises.

So with reference to this legislation, it is not a question of war power. It is not a question of the existence or continued existence of a state of war with Germany. It is solely and only a question of whether a condition now exists in the District of Columbia so that the letting of buildings covered by this bill can be said to be clothed with a public interest and justify the exercise of the police power. If that be true, this legislation is constitutional and within the powers of Congress. If that be not true, of course, Congress has not any power in the premises; but that is no reason for defeating this bill upon any constitutional question such as has been raised in this debate, because those questions that have been raised, as I have tried to show, have absolutely nothing to do with the case.

Just reading a paragraph from the opinion of the court in this case, the court says:

The fact that tangible property is also visible tends to give a rigidity to our conception of our rights in it that we do not attach to others less concretely clothed. But the notion that the former are exempt from the legislative modification required from time to time in civilized life is contradicted not only by the doctrine of eminent domain, under which what is taken is paid for, but by that of the police power in its proper sense, under which property rights may be cut down, and to that extent taken, without pay. Under the police power the right to erect buildings in a certain quarter of a city may be limited to from 80 to 100 feet—

Citing a number of cases.

The only question, therefore, with reference to this measure is, Do the facts and circumstances now exist that justify the enactment of this legislation? Unless the circumstances and facts have materially changed, this legislation will be sustained exactly upon the same ground that the original act was sustained.

With reference to limitations upon the police power, of course there is a limit upon the police power; and that was considered in this decision, and the court held that the provisions of the original Ball Act did not transcend the proper limitations of the exercise of the police power. Of course the attempted exercise of police power can go so far as to be obnoxious to constitutional provisions and safeguards. That was illustrated in a case going up from the District of Columbia, Martin v. District of Columbia (205 U. S.), where the court said:

Under the police power, in its strict sense, a certain limit might be set to the height of buildings without compensation; but to make that limit 5 feet would require compensation and a taking by eminent domain.

So that we might go to such extremes, even under the police power, as to violate the Constitution; but the Supreme Court has held in the case that it has decided that the provisions of this original rent act did not transcend the limits of the proper exercise of the police power. So it is not a question of the exercise of the war powers at all. It is a question of exercising powers specifically granted by the Constitution to legislate for the District of Columbia; and the question then only remains, Are the conditions in the District of Columbia such as justify the exercise of the police power with reference to the rental of public buildings? That is a question of fact.

I am frank to say that if it had not been for some things that have very recently occurred it might have been possible, if this bill becomes a law and its constitutionality is attacked, for those who are opposed to it to show that the exigency had gone, that it no longer existed; but some landlords in the District of Columbia have, I am told, given notice that rents will be increased this fall anywhere from 20 to 40 per cent. That can be shown whenever this law is attacked, if it becomes a law; and I have no doubt, Mr. President, in the face of these general notices that have been given by landlords of a rise in rents just as soon as this act shall fall by its own limitations, that it will be said by any court that the exigency that existed when this law was sustained by the Supreme Court exists to-day.

Mr. President, I have said this only because if this debate should ever be resorted to for construction as to what was the intent of Congress, I did not believe that the debate should rest upon any assumption that the power of Congress to enact this legislation rested upon the war powers of Congress at all. It rests upon the power delegated to Congress to legislate for the District of Columbia, and upon the existence of a state of facts here in the District of Columbia that justifies Congress in the exercise of this police power in this bill.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I am not finding fault or taking issue with the position of the Senator from Wisconsin. I did not mean to contend the other day—and I said as much as to indicate that it was the impression I did not mean to convey—that this power of Congress rested upon the war powers of Congress under the Constitution; but what I did mean to say, and that I believe the Senator concurs in, was that it rested upon the fact of the existence of an emergency. The Senator calls it an exigency. We will not disagree about terms. I am willing to accept his designation as "exigency" instead of "emergency." The fact that the war was on created the emergency, brought about the war conditions, and brought about those conditions which formed the justification and foundation for this legislation.

That was recognized fully by the Supreme Court in its decision in the test case where the validity of the act was assailed. In that case the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia held that the act was unconstitutional. By a decision of 5 to 4 the Supreme Court held it to be valid, solely and entirely upon the ground—and this is the language of the court—that there was an emergency growing out of the war, resulting in rental conditions in the District dangerous to the public health and burdensome to public officers, employees, and accessories, thereby embarrassing the Federal Government in the transaction of the public business.

That was the situation which the court found to exist. Not only had Congress found that condition to exist when it passed the legislation but the court, in addition to what Congress had to say on the subject, also found that condition to exist because it was commonly known, it was known throughout the world, that this war was on, and that it created war conditions, and these conditions created the emergency. The Senator is in error, however, when he says that he gathers from the opinion of the court that the court held that the conclusion of Congress upon that subject was final, or that the finding of Congress as to an emergency was conclusive upon the court. Just the contrary is the case. They say in that very opinion, and I quote from it:

No doubt it is true that a legislative declaration of facts that are material only as the ground for enacting a rule of law, for instance, that a certain use is a public one, may not be held conclusive by the courts. But a declaration by a legislature concerning public conditions that, by necessity and duty, it must know, is entitled at least to great respect.

And that is as far as the court goes—it is entitled to great respect.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. FLETCHER. I do.

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator and I do not disagree at all upon that. I stated specifically that the only relation the war had was that the court took judicial notice of the existence of the war, and assumed the conditions following, and therefore did not call for proof of the state of facts.

Mr. FLETCHER. Precisely; but I understood the Senator to hold that if Congress reached the conclusion that this emergency existed, that would be conclusive upon the courts.

Mr. LENROOT. No.

Mr. FLETCHER. They say just the contrary. The question finally is, then, do the conditions exist to-day in the District of Columbia substantially as they existed when that law was enacted nearly two years ago?

That is the question. The very able chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia recognized that at the outset. He very frankly stated this at the opening of the hearings, and I quote from his statement:

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will be in order. To-day was fixed at our last meeting for a hearing on the rent act. It having been declared constitutional by the Supreme Court, and, as the life of the act will expire in October next, the question for the committee to consider is whether it should be extended. From the decision of the Supreme Court it is very evident that it was declared constitutional on the ground of an emergency existing at that time. The question for the committee to consider is whether that emergency still exists. If there is no emergency existing now, the decision of the Supreme Court probably would not cover the validity of the act, and the first thing necessary for the committee to find out, as far as we can, is whether or not there is still such an emergency existing.

That was a clear, candid, frank, comprehensive statement of the question to be decided by that committee, made by its able chairman at the very opening of the hearings; and that question, I contend, according to all the evidence produced before that committee, must be decided in the negative, because, according to all that evidence, no such conditions exist in the District of Columbia now as existed when that law was enacted two years ago.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I would like to get the opinion of the distinguished Senator from Florida on the question whether or not this act, under present conditions, is doing any good, even for the purposes for which it was intended, leaving out of consideration the evil effects of the violation of the constitutional principles on which this Government is founded. What I mean by that is that this act has now been in force for about two years; and if we take the testimony of its chief advocates conditions now are just as bad as they were when it was passed. I would like to have the views of the Senator from Florida—an experienced business man as well as an able lawyer—as to whether or not the act is not defeating its own purpose.

Everyone sympathizes with those people who, by reason of circumstances often entirely beyond their control, are placed in conditions in life in which they are not able to pay the rents which are demanded for apartments or houses. But the Government proposes to relieve that situation by commandeering rental properties. It is not a question simply of regulating rents, it is the question of a tenant keeping possession, after it has once been obtained, beyond the period of the lease, which is the same as taking possession in the original instance, and it tends to discourage the building of property for rental purposes.

The distinguished chairman of the committee, the Senator who has charge of the pending bill, says that at the present time there is a great deal of building going on in the city of Washington, and that is true. He says that relatively it compares favorably with the amount of building in other years. But is it not a fact that those houses are being built for sale, and that the existence of this confiscatory law prevents people from investing their money in rental properties, which would tend to bring down rents and, if the heavy hand of the Government were withdrawn from interfering with such building, would relieve the distress?

Mr. BALL. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield.

Mr. BALL. According to the Evening Star of last Saturday, there was more building in Washington in the last eight months than in any eight months in the previous history of Washington. There has been a reasonable number of apartment houses included in that building.

Mr. POINDEXTER. There was a reasonable number?

Mr. BALL. There was.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Then what is the occasion for this proposed legislation? There has been a decrease in the number of applicants for apartment houses, there has been an exodus from the city, just a reverse of the emergency which existed during the war, when there was an army of Federal employees suddenly brought to the city of Washington. The process of evacuation is constantly going on, and if this great increase in the building of apartment houses has taken place, why enact this measure extending the law?

Mr. BALL. Will the Senator from Florida permit me to answer the Senator from Washington?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, if the conditions had continued as serious as they were two years ago, when the law was framed, it would have been extended for two years. The committee admit that the conditions are not as serious as they were at that time; but there is still a serious condition confronting the people employed in the various departments of the Government here in Washington. There is still a shortage of proper housing facilities for employees drawing reasonable salaries. You can find fifteen, twenty, and twenty-five room houses vacant, but very few houses of the kind that can be rented by the employees of the Government. There is a decided shortage of that kind of houses. In seven months we hope that the conditions will so clear up that there will be no reason for a further extension of the law.

Further than that, Mr. President, the conditions are always worse in the fall and winter than they are in the spring and summer. The committee only asks to have the law extended for seven months, to tide over the winter months. Then, from April until October, when there is no great demand, because there are not as many people living in Washington, we feel that the rentals and the prices will adjust themselves and no further legislative action will be needed.

Further than that, we have eliminated all business houses from the effect of the law and made it strictly a housing proposition, to take care of the people for only those seven fall and winter months.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, in reply to the inquiry of the Senator from Washington, there have been, I have no doubt, a good many building operations conducted in the District of Columbia within the last year or such a matter. I am willing to grant that that has been as extensive as the friends of this measure may claim. But I am going by the evidence presented to the committee, not by any outside hearsay or what is rumored or talked about here and there; we ought to pay some attention to the testimony of witnesses who are supposed to know what they are talking about, and upon which the committee must base its findings and reach its final conclusion. According to the testimony before the Committee on the District of Columbia, these buildings are erected for the purpose of sale, not for the purpose of being rented. You will find, if you examine this testimony, that according to these witnesses buildings which have been put up have been put up by people already engaged in selling, and have been built with the purpose of selling them, not with the purpose of renting them.

Some apartment houses have been put up, I grant you; but those apartments will not be completed until this law shall have terminated, and the people who built them knew it at the time. They are not building in contemplation of this law remaining permanently upon the statute books to control their property forever. They are building with the understanding that before their buildings are completed and ready to be rented this law will be dead. They have a right to assume that. That accounts for the building that has been going on.

But unquestionably the Senator is correct in his belief, according to the testimony before the committee, that the legislation has had a serious deterring effect upon the building operations in the District and in that way has defeated its own object. In other words, in order to solve the rent question in the District, you must have more houses. You will not have more houses to rent as long as this sort of a law stays upon the statute books. Therefore you have a situation of more people wanting accommodations than there are accommodations for them, and therefore high prices result; but, on the other hand, if you allow this matter to proceed in its normal way, and without such restrictive legislation as this confronting property owners, they would build houses, and you would have a condition where you would have more accommodations than there were people wanting to be accommodated, and that would mean lower rents and advantage to the very people you want to benefit by this legislation.

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, according to the statement I quoted from the Star, there has been more building since April than was ever known in Washington in a similar period. The law has been declared constitutional, and it was known that it would continue until next October; and that disproves the statement of the Senator from Florida. Further than that, Mr. President, these investors know that they are going to get a reasonable rate for their money, but they will not be permitted to profiteer.

There has been a new apartment house erected, which will be opened up about the 1st of October. I got a schedule of their prices. It is an eight-story building, and I understand cost about $400,000. The rental for that property for one year, according to their schedule, is $98,900. In other words, in four years the building will rent for enough to pay for its cost, even under the increased costs at this time.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, it is not that I find any fault with the reasonableness and the fairness and justice of the present commission. I have no occasion to complain. I have had no business before them, either to resist any action on their part or to seek any action on their part, and I assume they are fair and just people. But we do not know what the next commission might be, and I am objecting to this legislation upon the ground that it is wrong in principle and it is a dangerous thing to enact a law that we feel is either unconstitutional, or, if we do not quite feel that way, even if we think it is wrong in principle, is setting up a very vicious precedent.

I object to it on that ground. Conceding that the present commission may be absolutely fair and just, I say if this sort of legislation is put upon the statute books the time may come when some other commission will sit there, some other commission representing the landlords, and then what would the Senator say?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield.

Mr. POINDEXTER. If the Senator will bear with me, I should like to ask a question of the Senator from Delaware, who spoke a moment ago of this bill being a remedy to curb profiteers. I suppose he is referring to real estate profiteers. If this is a proper remedy to curb profiteers who own real estate, even admitting that this is the purpose of it, and even admitting that that was the only effect of it, which, of course, is not the case, because it applies to the poor man who owns a humble cottage as well as a millionaire who owns a great hotel; if this were the proper way to deal with that sort of thing, why does not the Senator propose to curb the profiteers in food products, the profiteers in steel products, or in cotton or in wool, or in all the great essentials of life? If the remedy for these abuses should be that the Government should seize the property and withhold it from their possession and fix the price of it, why does not the Senator do that?

Nobody has ever gone to that extent. Nobody has ever conceived the idea that the Government of the United States would go so far beyond the purposes contemplated in the great charter upon which it is based that it should enter the field of dealing in commodities and fixing prices; that there should be established here, instead of the system of individualism which is the chief characteristic of our form of government, a system of communism as a remedy for the economic ills that arise from time to time. Yet the Senator proposes to apply that to the ownership of land which in the law and in the customs of our race of people has been regarded with more care by the law and by the constitutions of governments than any other species of property. He proposes that the power on the part of the Government to confiscate property, which it amounts to, not for public use but for private benefit, shall be applied to real estate. Why does he not offer a bill to remedy profiteering in personal property?

Mr. BALL. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield.

Mr. BALL. I only wish to make reply briefly. In the first place, we legislate here only for the District of Columbia. The District of Columbia is neither a farming district, a manufacturing district, nor any other district, so far as business is concerned, except the real estate business.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The Senator certainly does not mean to say that we legislate here only for the District of Columbia in so far as profiteering is concerned?

Mr. BALL. I mean that so far as the District Committee is concerned, we have only the affairs of the District of Columbia to deal with. The Senator is asking a question as to reporting a bill from the District Committee, and I am answering the Senator's question.

Mr. FLETCHER. What about the prices of food?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I was asking the Senator his views as a Senator and not as chairman of the committee. It occurred to me that before going to the extent of undertaking to take possession of houses we should try out the theory at least on something of a less important character, some species of property that is more readily compensated for and as to which the injury to its owner would not be so irreparable as the seizure of the house in which he lives.

Mr. FLETCHER. That comes very close to where we live. The testimony before the committee investigating agricultural conditions shows that the retail merchant is taking from 100 to 300 per cent profit on everything we have to buy from him. Our fruit, our vegetables, our meat, and everything we buy gives him from 100 to 300 per cent profit, and that is true of the retail merchants of this city. If the Senator wishes to correct things, why not look after them a little, as the Senator from Washington suggests?

If we have the power to legislate with reference to the fixing of the price that an owner of property shall charge for his property, why can we not fix the price the retail merchant shall charge, and say to him, "You shall not charge and shall not be allowed to make more than 50 per cent profit"? It would be a very great help to the people of the District to do that by law.

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, I can answer that question in one word. The committee held long hearings upon that very proposition, but found we could not definitely ascertain the costs of those materials to the people in the District who did the retailing. Those products are not manufactured here. There were so many different costs coming in that it made it impossible for the Congress to legislate on the matter.

The pending bill does not confiscate property. The bill does not control the rents of any real estate people in Washington who are charging reasonable rents. I should like to add that not one in ten of the apartments are appealing to the rent commission. It is only those who attempted to charge unreasonable rents.

The Congress has just as much right to control these rents, in my judgment, as it has the right to control property in other ways. We say you shall not build an apartment house more than so many stories high. We say you shall not put certain kinds of houses on certain land in the city. We control your property in many ways. Anything that is necessary for the public health and the public good we have the same right to control as New York City would have to control those things in New York City. New York City has a similar law passed by its city council. It is functioning and it has been declared constitutional, and is more drastic even than this bill, decidedly so. They propose that it shall continue to function.

Mr. POINDEXTER. That was passed as a war measure.

Mr. BALL. But it is continuing to function.

Mr. POINDEXTER. It was passed as a war measure.

Mr. BALL. But it was passed for an unlimited time.

Mr. POINDEXTER. But it was passed as a war measure.

Mr. BALL. And this was not passed as a war measure.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Oh, yes; it was.

Mr. BALL. This was passed because a condition existed here in Washington, a condition that was the result of war, but we might have that condition resulting from any causes.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The Supreme Court said the justification of it was the war.

Mr. BALL. No; the Supreme Court said the justification of it was a condition, the result of war.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Oh, yes; I have the opinion here.

Mr. BALL. It was an emergency growing out of the war.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I must decline to yield further. I wish to finish. I do not wish to be placed in the attitude of occupying the floor here all afternoon on this matter when some one else is doing the talking. I desire to finish, and then the Senators can proceed with their discussion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida declines to yield further.

Mr. FLETCHER. I should like to conclude very quickly. I do not wish to take up further time with the discussion.

With reference to the idea of the Senator from Delaware that the law only applies in cases where landlords are charging unreasonable rents and that it is confined to exacting landlords who are oppressing tenants and that sort of thing, the Senator takes a view of it that is not justified. The law is very sweeping and very broad. It gives the commission absolute power to fix the rents to be charged and paid for all real estate in the District with the exceptions mentioned in the bill.

It applies in the case of an owner. I have in my possession a letter from a lady in this city—I do not know her personally—which recites that she owns a certain building. Nearly a year ago she gave notice to the tenant that she wanted that building for her own personal use, to live in as her own house, but the tenant would not move out. She brought suit in the District court and got a verdict in the lower court. The tenant appealed to the upper court, and finally the law was held unconstitutional by the court of appeals in the District. At last, nearly a year having elapsed, she went to the Rent Commission, and the Rent Commission found that the notice which she gave nearly a year ago was not a legal notice under the act, and therefore dismissed the case. There is the case of an owner of property out of possession for nearly a year, which she desires to occupy.

That is one effect of the law. In addition to that, cases exist in the city where property is being badly misused; where there is misconduct and misbehavior in an apartment that is injuring and damaging the whole property. There is no method of dispossessing the tenants. They can not be gotten out. The Rent Commission under the law have no power to put them out.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield.

Mr. CARAWAY. Is there any reason why, if we have a law of that kind, it should not apply to business property also, because the cost that the merchant must charge for his goods is enhanced by the amount of rent he must pay, and the cost of living is enhanced as the result of that process?

Mr. FLETCHER. Undoubtedly that is true. The overhead is figured in. That is the way in which the retail merchant justifies his excessive charges. He says, "My rent is so high." Under the provisions of the bill we eliminate not only the business houses, but we eliminate hotels as well. In my judgment, if there is anything that needs looking after it is the hotels in the District—not only here, but perhaps elsewhere. I was under the necessity not long ago of spending a night in New York. I put up at a hotel and went to my room. I paid $7.50 to spend the night in a little old room with one window, no ventilation, stuffy, stale tobacco smoke that stifled me so I could scarcely sleep, and yet I paid $7.50 for that privilege.

I had two friends who had a room close by, and they paid $9.50 for a similar room. Here in Washington a friend not long ago got two rooms for himself and wife and paid $19 a day for the rooms. Think of it—$19 a day for the rooms alone. The idea of paying $16.50 for a place to sleep one night! Three dollars or five dollars would have been a reasonable charge for the accommodation; but $16.50 is the charge that was made.

We eliminate the hotels, and they can not be reached under the provisions of the bill. They are the very people who ought to be reached, and they are the people serving the public generally. There is a public use of those properties.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President—

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I wish to call the attention of the Senator to the fact that these great properties, which are built for the accommodation of those who rent rooms, the traveling public, and to some extent the residential public, are not subject to the restrictions of the law at all.

Mr. FLETCHER. Precisely.

Mr. POINDEXTER. But the innumerable small holders of property are subjected to its penalties and to its confiscation. I wondered why that was. What influence is it that is able to secure the enactment of this legislation for one class of people and relieve another class of people from its terms?

I had a case brought to my attention where a man owned a cottage and he was drafted and went to France and fought for his country. Meantime he rented his little home. When he came back and wanted to get his family together and begin to keep house in the home which he had earned by his thrift and savings the Ball rent act confronted him and he was unable to get possession of it, although the terms of the lease had long since expired.

Mr. FLETCHER. Precisely. Unquestionably there have been a great many hardships which have been occasioned by this legislation. We do not hear much of those, however. There are a good many people in the District of Columbia who would like to get accommodations of this kind which would be within what they call their means, but generally their remedy is to secure larger incomes or to get accommodations which are a little cheaper. There is not now, according to the testimony which is before us, a shortage of housing facilities in the District of Columbia. According to the testimony which was offered before the committee there were to rent in Washington at the time of the hearings—and I presume that the number has increased rather than diminished—354 apartments and 280 dwellings. The remedy is to provide more apartments and more dwellings than there are applications for. Then the landlords will have to come down on their rents.

If there are any landlords who are oppressing the people of the District, they ought to be punished; I do not know of any method of punishment that would be too severe, in my judgment, for a grasping Gradgrind; but, on the other hand, the remedy for that condition is not by this character of legislation. Such legislation as this discourages the building of more apartments and houses for rent. It therefore lessens the supply, whereas the demand remains practically the same under normal conditions. Of course, a perpetuation of that condition increases the price of rent.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the Senator yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. FLETCHER. I yield.

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] just made a statement which I do not think he would have made if he had been advised of the provisions of the Ball Rent Act. He cited a case which could not possibly happen under the Ball Rent Act, because under the provisions of that act the owner is given the right of possession if he desires to use the premises for his own occupancy.

Mr. FLETCHER. The act so provides.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I think the Senator from Wisconsin is probably correct in his suggestion in that I said that the man wanted the property to live in. In that detail, perhaps, I was mistaken, but it is correct to say that if he wanted to get possession of his house for any other purpose the Ball Rent Act would prevent him from doing so; for instance, if he wanted to get possession of it in order to sell it he could not do so.

Mr. LENROOT. He may have wanted to rent it at three times its rental value.

Mr. POINDEXTER. But he may also have wanted to sell it.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, there are cases where the owner of a house has wanted to get possession of it in order to occupy it himself, but there have been delays aggregating months and sometimes nearly a year, as in the instance I mentioned, all resulting from this legislation.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I say that in the case which went to the Supreme Court the complainant in that case pled that he wanted to get his property for his own use, but was unable to get it.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I had no idea of taking up so much time as I have; but I think this proposed legislation is bad in principle. Unquestionably conditions do not now exist which justify it or warrant it or which afford foundation for its validity under the Constitution. We are in precisely the same condition now with reference to extending the original act by the pending legislation as we should be if we were now starting at this point to enact the original Ball Rent Act. We are precisely in that situation when we undertake to extend its provisions, just the same as if there were now introduced for the first time the original Ball Rent Act and it were provided that it should expire seven months from now. I say that the act never would be passed; nobody would dream that the original Ball Rent Act would be justified or that it would be constitutional, in my judgment, if it were introduced to-day. That is just about the position which we are in with reference to the pending proposed amendment to the act.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I have received a letter from an attorney in the District of Columbia in reference to this matter in the nature of a petition which he asks me to present. I ask that the Secretary may be permitted to read the letter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Idaho asks unanimous consent that the paper which he now presents may be read. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read as requested.

The reading clerk read as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., August 11, 1921.

HON. WILLIAM E. BORAH,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: As a citizen of the District of Columbia, I feel it is my duty to call your attention to the following facts in regard to the proposed extension of the Ball law: First, I can not see why hotels should be exempt, for certainly if anyone is overcharging it is the hotel proprietors.

I noticed in yesterday's paper that Senator BALL remarked while the bill was under consideration in the Senate that "at the time the Ball bill was first enacted they had to have from 8 to 10 girls in a room, and now they are reduced to 2." This shows, among other things, that the emergency for the law does not exist, for this amounts to a reduction of 800 per cent, and I do not believe anyone feels that every girl in town ought to have a separate room. Moreover, it seems to me that there must be some unmistakable oversight in supposing that the Ball law ever helped or assisted the girls who had to live in such numbers in rooms. It is well known in Washington, or should be at least, that such tenants pay or rent by the week, and I do not know of any case of the kind ever reaching the Rent Commission. In fact, the bill seems to be predicated wholly upon cases where there is a lease or sublease, which would imply something more than a weekly hiring. Moreover, such tenants have little means or time for such proceedings, and the amount involved is usually so small that this class of tenants whom the law should protect, if it should protect anyone, never attempt to make use of its provisions for the reasons aforesaid.

The worst feature or condition that now exists, and will continue to exist if the law is renewed, and I say this after careful investigation, is that it has practically stopped building in the District of Columbia intended to rent for residential purposes. The proof of this can readily be ascertained from the building inspector's office, for nothing but houses for sale are now being erected, excepting, of course, the several large hotels and office buildings that have been begun since it was supposed that such kind of property would be exempt from the amendment. I know of no apartment houses of any consequence that are now being erected or contemplated, and it is almost impossible to secure a loan for any such property. I do know of at least six prospects of the kind having been abandoned since the new agitation for the extension of this law.

This law has brought about a condition that is wrong in every principle. It permits people who own old houses, and those who erect new ones, to demand very high prices for the purchase of same. This is especially so in the houses that have been erected in the last year or so. It is common knowledge that the new-house speculator used to be satisfied with from $500 to a $1,000 profit on a medium-sized house, and I now am credibly informed that they do not consider anything less than three or four times that profit.

I would be willing to stake my reputation on the assertion that if the Ball law were wiped off the statute books there would be 1,000 houses put on the market the next day for rent that could not be had for rent while it existed. This situation is not because the people so much fear the Rent Commission but that the ordinary property owner, or any human being with sufficient intelligence to own property, naturally abhors anything that would likely bring them into litigation or contention with the tenant. Therefore rather than take any chances of the kind, they hold their property for sale, notwithstanding very tempting offers are made to induce them to rent. I am certain also that if this law was allowed to expire that the prices of houses would be reduced materially, because it would reduce the number of prospective purchasers at least 50 per cent.

Finally, I think if the law must be renewed, the commission could readily be reduced to one, for certainly a 1-man commission would eliminate consultation, and could accomplish more than three, and his decisions, in my opinion, would be as equally satisfactory, and besides be a saving of at least $10,000 per year.

Very truly, yours,

LEO SIMMONS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill having been read the third time, the question is, Shall it pass?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I can not believe that this measure is a constitutional exercise of the power of Congress, nor do I believe, if it were constitutional, that it is founded on wise public policy. I do not think it is a constitutional measure, because whatever may have been the character of the decision as to the original so-called Ball Rent Act, the decision was made during the time and in view of the circumstances which surrounded the war. There was not only in Washington but all over the country a great shortage in housing facilities, so much so that a committee of Congress, headed, I believe, by the distinguished junior Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER]—at least, he was a member of the committee—investigated that question and traveled in various portions of the country. They submitted a report, in which they stated that several billions of dollars were needed to be invested in property to afford adequate housing accommodations for the people of the country, and there was a proposal that Government funds be appropriated for that purpose.

Mr. President, the proposition now is to extend for seven months the provisions of the original Ball Act and to make certain amendments to it. I agree with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] that the holder of real property, as well as the holder of personal property, has not such an absolute right of unrestricted management and control of it under modern civilization as he used to have. Under the police power of a State and under the police power of Congress, so far as it confines itself to legislating for the District of Columbia, in the interest of the public safety, public health, or public morals, or the general welfare of the community Congress may do things that limit the use of the property of the private citizen. It may pass laws, without providing compensation for the citizen, to prevent his erecting a building of more than a certain height. If a man were permitted to erect a building 16 stories high, he might make nearly twice as much on his investment as he could by erecting an eight-story building. Nevertheless, he is prohibited from doing so in the interest of public safety.

Building lines may be established beyond which the owners of property may not occupy the property with a building. Many of the States have held that the establishment of a building line which deprives the owner of the use of his land compels the municipality so establishing it to compensate the man for the loss of his property, for it was a practical taking. We limit the interest which a person may exact upon a loan without its being usury; we regulate the business of pawnbrokers, auctioneers, and similar people in the communities.

I do not think it would be so unwise if some limitation were placed upon the amount of rents. I am not clear as to our authority to do it, but in this bill we are extending the provisions of an act under which, when two citizens have made a contract mutually satisfactory to themselves, and one of the parties, the lessor, desires to terminate the contract, the commission steps in and says: "No; the contract, although it is unsatisfactory to you, shall exist for seven months more. You shall be compelled to devote your premises to the use of the lessee upon the old terms, although the property may be much more valuable, and, although you may be offered a much higher price for it by a bona fide applicant."

An owner of property may have plans for its future improvement. He leases it for a year to a tenant. The tenant agrees to get out at the end of the year. This law steps in and says: "No; you may stay seven months more," and says to the owner, "You shall not eject a tenant, although he agreed to get out at the end of a year," although the owner may have made another contract with a third party that at the termination of the year he will sell the third party the property, or lease it to him for 10 years, or pull the building down. Congress is passing a law which says: "No; we will place those powers in the hands of a commission."

I do not believe that that is either constitutional or wise. Other cities have not been compelled to resort to any such doubtful measures. I do not think there is any present demand for it in the city of Washington. If there is a shortage of housing facilities in Washington so that rents are unduly high—and I have no doubt they are in many cases—the remedy for that is to let the high rents prevail for a short time, and capital will flow in to supply the demand and take advantage of the high rates.

Mr. President, you can not successfully stay or annihilate the law of supply and demand. Of course, during the war there was a great shortage. The shortage was in large part produced by the Government itself, for the Government commandeered all the materials and nobody could get lumber or iron or steel or other minerals or products, even brick or sand, for building purposes. The Government needed them all for war purposes in the construction of our great camps and cantonments; but it seems to me that now, nearly three years after the war, in the language of our President, we should return to normalcy. If the population of the District of Columbia has already been reduced 200,000 from its war population, it seems to me that the thing to do is for the Government to take its hands off of the housing question in Washington and let people build all the new houses they want to build. Of course, capital is not going to build new houses if the Government is going to manage them for it, or is going to fix the rents, or the duration of the occupancy of the tenants. So that I think this bill is not only, if not unconstitutional, a stretching of the constitutional guaranties to the limit, but is of very doubtful, if not vicious, public policy.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum is suggested. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On this roll call 50 Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, a moment ago the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] disagreed with the statement that I made that the Ball Rent Act, as originally passed, was sustained by the Supreme Court of the United States because of the emergency of the war. To verify the statement which I made at that time, I want to quote briefly from the opinion of the court in the case of Block v. Hirsh, Forty-first

Supreme Court Reporter, reading from page 459. There the court, Mr. Justice Holmes writing the opinion, states:

The statute embodies a scheme or code which it is needless to set forth, but it should be stated that it ends with the declaration in section 122 that the provisions of Title II are made necessary by emergencies growing out of the war, resulting in rental conditions in the District dangerous to the public health and burdensome to public officers, employees, and accessories, and thereby embarrassing the Federal Government in the transaction of the public business. As emergency legislation the title is to end in two years unless sooner repealed.

But that is not all to indicate that the basis of the decision of the court was the existence of a state of war, for the court proceeds as follows:

No doubt it is true that a legislative declaration of facts that are material only as the ground for exacting a rule of law—for instance, that a certain use is a public one—may not be held conclusive by the courts.

Citing a number of cases.

But a declaration by a legislature concerning public conditions that by necessity and duty it must know is entitled at least to great respect. In this instance Congress stated a publicly notorious and almost world-wide fact. That the emergency declared by the statute did exist must be assumed, and the question is whether Congress was incompetent to meet it in the way in which it has been met by most of the civilized countries of the world.

Of course, there was no such emergency existing, "publicly notorious and almost world-wide fact," and which had "been met by most of the civilized countries of the world," except the war with Germany, in which the United States and its allies were at that time engaged.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, the Senator will admit, will he not, that if the condition existed from any other cause the decision would have been the same?

Mr. POINDEXTER. No; I do not admit that at all.

Mr. LENROOT. It was the condition, was it not?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I am stating the fact that the decision was based upon the existence of a state of war. What the decision may have been in the case of some other emergency no man can say.

Mr. LENROOT. It was the existence of a state of war that they held caused the condition?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Undoubtedly.

Mr. LENROOT. It was the condition which was the prior fact?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Undoubtedly; a condition caused by a state of war.

Mr. LENROOT. But does the Senator contend that if there had been any other cause than the war the decision would not have been as it was?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I do contend that there may have been a very material difference. I do not undertake to say what the decision of the court may have been, but when a nation is engaged in war which involves, perhaps, its independence or its existence the conditions which arise from that war, which affect its convenience, occupy a very different status from similar conditions which might exist in a time of peace, and all we can say in regard to the matter is that, in so far as the record goes, the court acted in the case involving the Ball Rent Act upon a set of conditions that were met by the Congress of the United States in a war measure.

Mr. LENROOT. I ask the Senator to point out one single line in that decision which rests the action of the court upon the war powers of Congress.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I have already pointed out that part of the opinion upon which I base my statement that the emergency which justified the enactment of the legislation was a state of war. It is true they do not refer to the war powers of Congress.

Mr. LENROOT. It was an emergency caused by the war, was it not?

Mr. POINDEXTER. That is true; undoubtedly it was an emergency caused by the war.

Now, Mr. President, I think pretty nearly all that is essential to be said to disclose the true nature of this legislation has already been said. I have no such interest in this case as makes it incumbent upon me to remain here day after day, in this period of the year, in order to oppose, by all possible means, the enactment of this bill into law, if that should be the pleasure of Congress. I have no personal interest in it whatever. There is no possible combination of circumstances that may concern me in any way, as the effect of this question, whether or not this law should be enacted, but if there were, rather than stand here and use whatever power or influence I might have as a Member of the Senate to enact a law by which one man's property should be taken out of his possession by the strong arm of the Government and delivered over to me for my enjoyment and my convenience, I would live in a tent, if that should be necessary, winter and summer, and put up with whatever inconveniences that might involve.

It is said, Mr. President, that a public emergency continues to exist, and that the same reasons for the enactment of this legislation exist to-day which existed when it was originally enacted in 1919. But what are the facts? That condition was the absence of living quarters for the employees of the Government who were brought here to do war work.

To-day a very different reason is urged in behalf of this act. There is no attempt to show that any such condition as that exists. It is stated, even by the proponents of the bill, that the reason why this bill should pass is that the rents which are being charged to people in certain instances are too high. That is not a public emergency. That is a matter which involves the private affairs of individual citizens, and there has not been presented a single word, either in the hearings or in the arguments upon this bill, to show that that condition in any way whatever affects the public business or involves the Government of the United States.

The Senator from Delaware says that when a condition of this kind exists the Government ought to come to the relief of its citizens. The trouble about this act is that in it the Government is not coming to their relief. It is not proposed by this bill that the Government or the public shall be taxed a single dollar, or shall put itself to the slightest inconvenience in order to reduce rents or to provide cheaper living quarters for anybody in the District of Columbia. On the contrary, it provides that the property of private citizens shall be commandeered to that use. It is a very different matter from the Government coming to the assistance of tenants in the District of Columbia. If the Government really proposes to relieve the situation as a public matter, and at public expense, it should appropriate money for that purpose, and provide living quarters at a reasonable rental for its employees. Then the theory and the policy which are advocated as a justification for this legislation would be supported by the facts in the case; not justified, perhaps, but the claim that is made of public relief would be verified by the provisions of the bill.

Mr. President, if it is proper for the Congress of the United States to enact legislation of this kind for the relief of Government employees in the District of Columbia, it is proper for it to enact legislation of this kind for the relief of Government employees throughout the United States. It may be said that Congress has no right to enact such legislation to take effect outside of the District of Columbia, but I doubt exceedingly whether the same principle and the same policy which would bring it to the assistance of its employees in the District would not enable it to come to the assistance of its employees throughout the country. The employees of the Government in the various States of the Union get the same rates of pay for the same kind of work in the same positions that they get in the District of Columbia. They have the same difficulties in providing homes in which to live that their colleagues have in the District of Columbia. So why differentiate? Why favor the employees who reside here and deny the same attention to those who by chance, doing the same kind of work, just as important in the functions of the Government, live in the various States of the Union?

Mr. BALL. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield.

Mr. BALL. I just wanted to ask the Senator if the District of Columbia was not acquired as the seat of government on account of the conflict of authority between the States in which the seat of government was located previous to that time and the Government authority?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Undoubtedly that entered into the decision to acquire a district in which the Federal authority should be supreme. That was one of the reasons. There were many other reasons.

Mr. BALL. That was the fundamental reason.

Mr. POINDEXTER. That was one of the chief reasons. That does not conflict in any way with the proposition which I state—that the Government has the same right to care for its employees outside of the District that it has to care for those here. I only mention that because of the argument of the advocates of this measure—that the employees of the Government can not obtain quarters to dwell in at reasonable rentals.

Mr. LENROOT. I would like to ask the Senator whether he recognizes the right of Congress to exercise a police power within the District?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I do.

Mr. LENROOT. Very well. Then, does the Senator think the Congress has any police power in the States?

Mr. POINDEXTER. No.

Mr. LENROOT. Is not that the distinction?

Mr. POINDEXTER. No; that is not the distinction at all, because I have limited the authority of the Congress to act in this matter outside of the District to the cases of Government employees. Congress has power to legislate with reference to its business and the conditions of its employees, and to provide quarters for its employees anywhere in the Union, and to take whatever steps may be necessary to that end. That is rather a casual view. I have not investigated the matter. But I am inclined to think it could be sustained in a court.

Mr. LENROOT. I would like to ask whether any regulation of property rights is not an exercise of police power?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Oh, no. The case I have cited would not be an exercise of the police power at all. It would be the administration of Government business.

Mr. LENROOT. Does the Senator say that the regulation of the use of buildings in a State would not be an exercise of the police power?

Mr. POINDEXTER. It would undoubtedly be if it were a general measure, applicable to all the people in the State; but if it was based upon the proposition of providing quarters for the Government employees, it would not be.

Mr. LENROOT. What would it be?

Mr. POINDEXTER. It would be the administration of Government business.

Mr. LENROOT. Under what authority in the Constitution?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Under the authority, both express and implied, for the Government to do the business of the Government as provided in the Constitution.

Mr. LENROOT. It seems to me the Senator goes very much further in his ideas of the breadth of the power conferred by the Constitution than I do, or than I have ever heard any other Senator suggest.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I do not suppose the question has ever been suggested before. I do not know that I have ever heard it suggested before, myself. But I am inclined to think my proposition is sound.

Mr. GOODING. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield.

Mr. GOODING. I would like to ask the Senator from Washington what he suggests to remedy the conditions which exist here in the District of Columbia? Being a member of the Committee on the District of Columbia, and listening to the different witnesses before that committee, it was shown that the living costs in the District, as far as food was concerned, have been decreased something like 32 per cent, but the rentals have been increased, and are still being increased, as I understand, in the face of the fact that on every street, every few houses, you see a sign in the window "for rent" or "for sale." I do not know what it may suggest to the Senator from Washington, but it suggests to me a combination to control the rents here in the District of Columbia. It has to be met in some way or other, and I do not know of any other remedy than this. Congress is the guardian of the people who live here in the District, and it is the business of Congress, under the Constitution, as I understand, to protect the people of this District. I do not know how we are to continue to exist—how we can meet conditions—unless we can bring the country back to a normal condition, and conditions are not normal in the District of Columbia.

Mr. POINDEXTER. This is not normal legislation.

Mr. GOODING. I think it is. I think it is essential.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I know the Senator does.

Mr. GOODING. I think we have to extend it, possibly, because if we can not reach the selfishness that exists in the District of Columbia right here under our very eyes we will not reach it anywhere. I think this is the place to commence. I do not know how we can hope to get freight rates reduced or do anything in this country unless the different lines of industry in the country are willing to come back and be fair and just to the American people and to the Government itself.

I do not know how we shall reach such conditions here except through Congress. Those conditions exist. The owners of tenement houses here admit that there is going to be a still further increase, with the tendency upward and upward. I do not think there is any blacklist among those owning tenement houses, but there is a red list on which the people who have been renting tenement houses are placed who are not satisfactory to landlords and they may have some trouble when the law is repealed or when it goes out of existence. We have a condition that we have got to meet in some way or other, and I do not know of any other way to meet it than through the Ball Act.

I am sure the commissioners have been very fair. They have raised quite a number of rentals here in the city, and very properly, too—when they were low they increased them. We need something to meet the unreasonable citizen who exists in every community, in the District of Columbia as well as everywhere else, who is not ready to play fair with the country and the Government.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I think the Senator has made quite a contribution to the discussion, and I agree entirely with him that wherever it is within the constitutional power of Congress economic abuses should be suppressed. However, this is not the beginning of the attempt to suppress combinations or oppressive restraints of trade, as they may be called, or extortionate prices. On the contrary, for more than three decades Congress has been legislating for the purpose of removing the abuses of which the Senator from Idaho speaks, not only in the District of Columbia but in every State and Territory of the Union.

In 1887 we passed a law to regulate interstate commerce; then we passed the Sherman antitrust law, the Clayton antitrust law; we established the Federal Trade Commission; and we have passed innumerable laws for the purpose of meeting and removing the very abuses referred to by the Senator from Idaho; but in the whole course of this legislation, from the beginning of its consideration down to the present time until the Ball Rent Act was introduced, no one has ever had the hardihood to suggest that, as a means of removing them, the Government should seize the property of individual citizens and turn it over to other individual citizens.

Mr. GOODING. I do not understand that that is the purpose of the bill at all.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The Senator understands this, does he not—

Mr. GOODING. I understand that it is necessary to regulate these abuses, and that the Government has been a failure in that respect. I understand that very well. The very abuses that have destroyed many civilized countries of the world, as is well known, will destroy this one unless they are controlled.

Mr. POINDEXTER. That is exactly where the Senator has the proposition reversed. The thing that has destroyed many countries and that has led to anarchy and chaos and destruction in Russia, for instance, has been the invasion of the rights of the individual citizen. The Senator is misled.

Mr. GOODING. Oh, Mr. President—

Mr. POINDEXTER. Just let me answer the question which the Senator asks. The Senator has said that this is the sort of legislation for the purpose of remedying the abuses which have led to the destruction of civilization. It is very often overlooked that the great world revolutions which have resulted, step by step, in establishing the priceless liberties of the Anglo-Saxon people have been revolutions out of which were written the charters of liberty guaranteeing and preserving the rights of private property. The great Magna Charta of England—

Mr. GOODING. Mr. President, I should like to say—

Mr. POINDEXTER. Just one moment, and then I will yield to the Senator. The charter of liberties of 1689, the immortal Bill of Rights, written by George Mason and Patrick Henry of Virginia, followed by the constitution of that State, and later on by the Constitution of the Federal Union, all the results of revolutionary movements, embodied in their principal provisions the protection and guaranty of the rights of property of the individual citizen. But here is a measure proposed to relieve the abuses to which the Senator has referred, which reverses that policy. Instead of guarding the rights of the individual, the Senator proposes, in order to remedy temporary economic ills, to violate the fundamental principles of the great charters of liberty to which I have referred.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I promised first to yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. GOODING. I hope the Senator will not place me in the class of citizens who want to take away anybody's liberty or anybody's rights at any time or at any place. I merely wish to correct a condition that is existent in the country and that can not continue. There is a selfishness in it that can not be tolerated. I am not talking about personal liberties or personal rights.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Well, Mr. President, I am.

Mr. GOODING. I know that we have a commission down here that has considered a great number of these matters and that the landlords have been given fair consideration in all the claims that have been passed on.

Mr. POINDEXTER. But the commission has not jurisdiction to give them fair consideration, because the law requires the commission to allow the tenant to remain in the property after the term of his lease has expired. A man may desire to recover his property and possess it and enjoy it in that pursuit of happiness of which the right to accumulate and own and enjoy private property is the chief element. That is destroyed by this legislation and taken away from the consideration of the commission which is established to carry out its purpose.

We can not deal with these difficulties merely by pointing out the evils and saying that the Government must have the power to remove them and consequently that any kind of legislation, however it may violate the constitutional provisions, must be enacted.

Mr. GOODING. Will the Senator tell us how we can regulate them and cure them to meet the situation as it exists?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I shall point out to the Senator the remedy that has been undertaken already in the various pieces of legislation to which I have referred—the interstate commerce act, the Sherman antitrust law, the Clayton antitrust law, the Federal Trade Commission act, and others dealing with economic abuses which in their fundamental character are similar to this alleged combination or conspiracy for extortion by real-estate profiteers which the Senator refers to here in the District. The Senator may feel that some such condition exists. It never was thought in the consideration of any of the acts to which I have referred that it was necessary even for the Government to fix prices, except for public service, much less that the Government could take the property of one and give it to another who had no claims upon it whatever. All these laws contain provisions dealing with these abuses which the Senator might study and in which he may find some plan to apply here if such abuses actually exist as the Senator indicates.

I now yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LENROOT. I should like to ask the Senator whether, in the case of railroad property—and he has mentioned that—the Government does not regulate the price that the owner of the railroad property may receive for the use of it.

Mr. POINDEXTER. No; there is no such law in regard to railroad property as this act in relation to real estate in the District. The law does not undertake to say what rental one company shall pay for the use of the road of another.

Mr. LENROOT. I am taking the Senator's own statement. He drew a parallel between the railroad property and the rights of citizens.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Oh, no; I did not.

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator said we have not dealt with them in the same way. I am now asking the Senator whether the Government does not fix the price which the owners of railroad property may receive for the use of their property?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Of course, there are a great many things to be said about that. In the first place, I wish to put the Senator right as to what I said. I did not make any comparison between railroad property and strictly private property of citizens at all. I did call attention to the interstate commerce act as a means of remedying abuses similar in their fundamental character to those which the Senator from Idaho was referring.

There is a great difference between a railroad and the private home of the citizen. There is an attempt made by this legislation to put them on the same basis, otherwise the legislation could not be defended by any court. You have, in the first place, to attach a public character to the dwelling house before the authority to legislate in regard to that can be sustained. That is the point to which I object. I draw the line as to the power of the Government to intrude its public functions and to impose its public administration at the door of the home of the private citizen. As to the railroad, the Senator from Wisconsin as well as anybody else knows that it is a public service corporation and subject to regulation as such.

Mr. LENROOT. The right of the Government to regulate the railroads is because the railroad is clothed with a public interest, is it not, by reason of the services it performs?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Yes.

Mr. LENROOT. Has not the Supreme Court held in this very case that the condition is such that the renting out of buildings is clothed with a public interest and it rests upon exactly the same ground as the regulation of the railroads?

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, the Senator draws the line—

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. Mr. President—

Mr. POINDEXTER. Just one moment, and then I shall be glad to yield to both Senators.

Before I pass from it, I wish to answer, first, the question of the Senator from Wisconsin, who in his usual clever and penetrating manner is reaching into some of the very essential principles involved in this whole question.

In the first place, our whole contention in opposition to the bill is that the state of facts which the Senator from Wisconsin assumes to exist does not exist. Our whole contention is based upon the proposition of fact that there is no such condition existing in the city of Washington to-day, and the Supreme Court has never held that it exists to-day, nor is there any condition which attaches a public character to private dwelling houses in the District of Columbia.

Mr. LENROOT. On the other hand, we grant that if that state of fact does not exist, we have not this power and this legislation would not stand. So there is no difference between us on that proposition; but granting the state of fact does exist, the Senator must then admit that it occupies the same relationship as the railroad occupies with reference to the power of regulation.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I admit that the result would be the same, but based on different grounds. In the first place, there is an express provision in the Constitution of the United States giving Congress exclusive control over commerce. There is no such provision in the Constitution giving it control over the rents of private houses.

Mr. LENROOT. But there is a particular provision giving Congress exclusive power of legislation over the District of Columbia.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Yes; but that does not mean that we can violate constitutional provisions, that does not mean that we can do anything we please.

I may say that I think there are but few communities in the United States where it would have been possible for a legislative body, controlled by the people upon whom the burdens of the legislation were to fall, to go to the extent that Congress has gone in this legislation in dealing with a people who are politically submerged, a people who have so long been denied any participation in the Government which deals with their property and their lives that they have lost their initiative, that Congress works its will upon them practically without consulting their wishes.

Mr. LENROOT. The New York Legislature enacted the same kind of legislation for the State of New York and that was sustained at the very time this decision was handed down. Other States have enacted similar legislation.

Mr. POINDEXTER. There are very few. As I have said, there are very few instances where it was tolerated; and New York comes within the exception I mentioned, as the act was imposed upon the city of New York by the State legislature without the city's consent.

Mr. GOODING. What is the Senator's remedy to meet it? There is a condition that must be met, and there is no doubt about that.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I think conditions are entirely normal. There are no doubt rental abuses here from time to time, as there are in many other places.

Mr. GOODING. But here is the way we can aid. Prices of building materials have decreased very greatly, and yet the rents are going up all the time, and still there are plenty of vacant houses.

Mr. POINDEXTER. That is an astonishing result.

Mr. GOODING. It is.

Mr. POINDEXTER. As long as this law is on the statute books, I am surprised at such a result.

Mr. GOODING. They have been working at these abuses, but they have not yet reached them.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Ever since 1919 this law has been on the statute books, and yet conditions, the Senator says, are getting worse and worse.

Mr. GOODING. We are not meeting them.

Mr. POINDEXTER. What is the use of continuing the act, then?

Mr. GOODING. Still there is a commission to which people may appeal and perhaps obtain justice.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Yes; there is a commission at work at $5,000 a year apiece, and the bill now before us proposes to establish an attorney at $5,000 a year, and there is a secretary at $3,000 a year. I think that is one of the chief motives back of this bill.

Mr. GOODING. Regardless of what it costs, the people in the District of Columbia have a right to be protected.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Does the Senator from Idaho mean to say that in order to protect the people in the District of Columbia he desires indiscriminately to invade private rights and private property?

Mr. GOODING. Not at all. However, I own property in my State which very properly is being regulated there by the State through the public utility commission and property elsewhere is being regulated. I can not see any difference at all between the two cases. So here when abuses exist the Government should step in and give the people relief.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Would the Senator from Idaho agree to a law being enacted by Congress as to selling sheep—I heard the Senator say the other day that he was practically out of the sheep business now, but he was once a large sheep raiser and woolgrower—providing that if he were a member of a combination that had put up the prices of mutton and wool too high, and because of that fact the people could not get cheap meat and cheap wool, therefore the Congress would take away from him his ranch—

Mr. GOODING. I may say—

Mr. POINDEXTER. Let me finish asking the question—on which he raised the sheep and turn it over to one of his neighbors there on such terms as a commission might fix?

Mr. GOODING. I do not understand that this proposed law, if enacted, will do that at all.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Yes, it will; that is exactly what it proposes to do as to dwelling houses and apartments.

Mr. GOODING. If I engage in a conspiracy to raise the price of any kind of property in this country through a combination and organization to that end, I think I should be regulated, I do not care whether it is as to the growing of sheep or doing anything else. So far as the matter is concerned relative to the condition which now exists in the District of Columbia, there are empty dwellings and vacant apartments, and yet rents are not being reduced except where the commission reduces them.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Would the Senator favor the extension of the same principle in order to regulate sheep ranches?

Mr. GOODING. If there is a monopoly in the sheep business, I am in favor of regulating it; I am in favor of regulating monopoly wherever it is found.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I do not think the Senator from Idaho would advocate a law such as that to which I have referred; I think he would oppose it. I think if a combination in restraint of trade should result injuriously to the public interests that the Senator from Idaho and all others would support some measure for removing and breaking up any such combination as that, and probably for penalizing the people who participate in it; but this proposed law has no relation at all to that question. There is not anything said in it about a combination; there is nothing said in it about conspiracy to raise rentals. It applies to everybody in the District of Columbia, regardless of who he may be or the extent of his property or the character of the dwelling house; how small it may be; how helpless the individual may be; regardless of whether he belongs to a combination or is acting alone.

It is very well to talk about combinations and conspiracies, but that is not what we are proposing to legislate for in this bill. This proposed law is not confined to that. If it were, it would be upon a different basis, although even then it would be going further than any legislation that has ever been enacted to restrain combinations or extortions, for there has never been a statute enacted that proposed to take property employed by a combination from one individual and give it to another.

Mr. BALL. Mr. President—

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield to the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. BALL. I hope the Senator from Washington is aware of the fact that this proposed law does not take the home from an individual or from any of his family, nor does it in any way control any house that is used as a home. The owner of a house may secure possession for his own use. This proposed legislation is intended to control only property that is used as rental property; in other words, property that is used for investment purposes.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I know that is what the language says, but it does not work that way in all cases, because Hirsh, who made the complaint which was decided by the Supreme Court, alleged that he wanted the house in which to dwell, for his own personal use, but he was not able to get it. There is a great deal of discretion vested in the commission.

Mr. BALL. When an owner wants the property for dwelling purposes, the commission will always grant it; but I should like to call the attention of the Senator to the fact that the case to which he refers did not relate to a dwelling house, but to a business property.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Getting away from imaginary cases, which do not at all fit the statute in accordance with the existing conditions, the objection to this proposed act is that it is simply a piece of communistic legislation. It is in line with that tendency which has manifested itself in recent years throughout the world, that the remedy for economic ills is the reversal of the principles upon which this Government was founded, merging the individual in the common mass, and seizing his property and converting it to the purposes of the Government, which in this case is to turn it over to some other individual.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President—

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I think the difficulty under which the able Senator from Washington labors is in overlooking the principle which was determined by our Supreme Court years ago in what are known as the Elevator and Warehouse cases. The elevators and warehouses in Chicago insisted years ago that they were immune from public control; that their business was of a private character, and that they ought to be left to do as they had a mind to; but those cases went to the Supreme Court and Chief Justice Waite in his opinion—and he deduced that opinion from the early principles of the common law—stated that wherever an individual devoted his property to a public interest and a public use he was subject to public control.

As the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BALL] has just stated, the pending measure does not apply to a man's residence or the place where he lives.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Yes.

Mr. NELSON. No; but where a man in a big city proceeds to erect a group of tenement or apartment houses in order to rent them to the public, and he devotes the property which he builds to the public use, why should not that public use be regulated as in the Elevator and Warehouse cases to which I have referred?

There is another law which is in force in the District of Columbia to which I desire to call the Senator's attention. It was a surprise to me, but it is a law and it has been held valid in this District. Ordinarily, in every other part of the country, if A and B own adjoining lots and B wishes to build, he can not build a party wall without the consent of the adjoining owner. In this District there is an old law by which if A wishes to build on his lot he has a right to build a party wall and to take one-half the land for that wall from B's lot which adjoins his. That is the law of the District of Columbia to-day. I never knew that until some years ago, but that law has been sustained by the courts.

There is one exception: For instance, if a man, simply for the purpose of erecting a bay window or something similar, desires to build only a portion or a segment of a party wall over the line, in that case he is not entitled to take the adjoining owner's land without his consent for half of the party wall, but he may build a party wall along the whole line without the consent of the adjoining owner. I know of no similar law that exists anywhere else in this country, and yet that law has been held valid here in the District of Columbia.

I cite that as an illustration of the length the courts have gone in upholding the power of Congress with respect to legislation in the District of Columbia. When men erect rows of buildings here for the purpose of renting them to the public, they devote them to a public use, and such structures ought to be subject to public control. That is my view. I think the Senator has not looked at this question from that angle. If he should, I think he would probably change his mind.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I have looked at it from that angle; but the trouble with the proposition of the Senator from Minnesota is that the rent law is not confined to buildings in a row; it applies to buildings in angles and buildings in all kinds of situations. I do not think that the Senator from Minnesota has paid particular attention to the debate, or he may have misinterpreted the statement of the Senator from Delaware that the bill does not apply to dwelling houses. It is true that there is a provision in the bill to the effect that if an owner wants to recover his house from a tenant for the purpose of occupying it himself he may do so, but it is not true that the bill does not apply to dwelling houses.

The fact of the case is that the owner of a dwelling house which stands by itself entirely separate and apart from others, irrespective of houses in rows, or general contractors, or people who are in the business of building houses for renting, irrespective of party walls and everything of that kind, the owner of an ordinary frame cottage, if for any purpose at all he has allowed it to go out of his hands into the possession of a lessee can not get it back under the Ball Act until that lessee gets ready to give it back to him. I am told in many instances there are egregious abuses, such as damage to property, disorderly conduct, criminal conduct carried on in houses by lessees, and, notwithstanding the protests of the owners, they are unable to recover them or to put a stop to the abuses. That is the case here.

It is not such an important matter nationally, so far as the material situation is concerned. As a matter of fact, the Nation pays very little attention to the population of the District of Columbia anyhow. Congress pays attention to it, because it is compelled to do so; it pays entirely too much attention to it; I mean that it is required to pay too much attention to it; that too much of the time of Congress, which should be occupied in legislating for a great empire such as the United States, is taken up in acting as a city council. There ought to be some other arrangement by which such questions as whether an awning extends too far over a street or whether a sidewalk shall be 12 feet wide or 14 feet wide should be decided somewhere else instead of in the Congress of the United States. But in the enactment of the pending bill, while it is not important in a national sense, so far as the immediate economic situation involved is concerned, it is of the most profound importance in the principle which it involves, for it undermines the Constitution of the United States, which throws the guaranty of sacredness around the private property of a citizen, by assuming an imaginary public use or a public interest which, as a matter of fact, does not exist. It invades his home, destroys his rights, takes his property away from him, not for a public use but for the benefit of some other private citizen. That is why the proposal to enact the pending bill is important.

Mr. President, if it is necessary again to state the law, the essential feature of it is that, after the expiration of his lease, it allows a tenant who has leased property to continue indefinitely in its possession and to withhold it from its owner. That is not a question of regulation of rent or of the breaking up of a combination formed to charge extortionate rentals; that is a seizure of private property, and it has not the virtue of being seized for a public use, but it is the seizure of private property for a private use. With all due respect to the majority of the Supreme Court, which rendered the decision in the Hirsh case, making all due allowance for the fact that the decision was rendered upon a measure which was enacted during the Great War and is not applicable to a time of peace, the property is seized not for a public use, however much it may be called a public use, but is seized purely for the convenience and for the benefit of private citizens.

Mr. President, in all of the agitation and propaganda of recent years to meet the abuses to which several Senators, and especially the Senator from Idaho, have referred, the tendency seems to have developed toward the view that the path of progress lies along the line of an attack upon property. The arguments of a great many propagandists for these new measures for the seizure of private property by the Government, for the limitation of the rights of the citizen, for the invasion of his liberties, and for the destruction of his property, are based upon the proposition that they tend toward a greater freedom. Chief Justice White very well remarked, in his dissenting opinion in this case, that the great problem is what we are going to do with this "new freedom."

Why, Mr. President, so far from an attack upon private property as a means of remedying economic abuses being the path of progress, the establishment of private property was the corner stone upon which the liberties of this Nation were founded. I want to read, for the benefit of some Senators who advocate the seizure of private property to remedy a temporary economic abuse, the first paragraph of the bill of rights of Virginia, framed in that great renaissance which followed the severance of her relations with Great Britain and the assumption of the powers of a free and independent colony. After Patrick Henry had announced the principle that no government had an inherent power to enact laws for the oppression and injury of its citizens, that its powers were limited to laws which should be for their benefit, and when he and George Mason collaborated in that remarkable convention of Virginia, this is the first thing which they wrote in the great charter of the liberties which they had acquired in that immortal movement for the freeing of a people:

That all men are by nature equally free and independent and have certain inherent rights, of which, when they enter into a state of society, they can not by any compact deprive or divest their posterity, namely, the enjoyment of life and liberty, with the means of acquiring and possessing property and pursuing and obtaining happiness and safety.

So that the right of private property is placed first among all the elements of liberty. Of what use would life be if a man who was engaged in the struggle of existence was not protected in the fruits of his labor? It is not a question of wealth. It is not a question of curbing the great combinations which abuse and oppress the public. It is a question of the elemental principle that the man who has acquired under the law a certain amount of property, it may be only a day's wages, has back of him the entire power of a great Nation guaranteeing his enjoyment of it. This bill invades that sacred right, and I do not think it can be denied.

I want to read some extracts upon that point from the remarks of Chief Justice White with reference to this case.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President—

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield to the Senator from New York. Mr. CALDER. I hesitate to interrupt the Senator just at this point, but the Finance Committee, of which I am a member, meets in 10 minutes, and if the Senator will permit me just to make a statement in connection with this legislation I shall appreciate it very much.

I am in accord with the Senator's views in the matter. In the State of New York we have passed very drastic rent laws affecting the city of New York. Those laws were perhaps necessary because of the oppression of tenants by some landlords, but they have defeated the very object sought to be attained. The purpose was to keep down rents, to prevent excessive rents being charged. They have prevented the building of houses for the occupancy for tenants who were oppressed. The result has been that instead of helping relieve the situation they have put it off further in the future.

To-day in New York City, of course, as in other cities of the country, the situation regarding tenantry has been somewhat relieved, but not because of the building of houses. It has been relieved because of the general business depression. Families that had their own separate homes have doubled up. Where formerly one family lived, now three families live. But these rent laws, drastic as they were, passed for the benefit of the tenants of New York City, have prevented very materially the building of homes; and I am strongly of the opinion that if we pass this law it will do more than anything else we can do to deter people here in the District from building apartments and building dwellings and solving this problem finally through orderly processes.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, will the Senator from Washington permit me to ask a question of my colleague?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Is it not a fact that in New York the situation in which no new apartments and tenements were being put up became such that in a desperate effort to encourage the building of apartment houses and tenement houses and other facilities, while this restriction was placed upon the enterprise of men who would otherwise build them, a law was passed relieving from taxation for 10 years new buildings constructed after the passage of the act which I am just going to mention—a confession of desperation, and an exact example of what I might call class legislation in an effort to undo the injury which the first law had inflicted?

Mr. CALDER. My colleague is correct. First, the Legislature of New York State passed a bill, as he indicates, restricting the increase of rents and giving the district courts in the several cities of the first class in the State the right to pass upon the sufficiency of the act; and then, because of the condition that brought about, we passed another bill at Albany giving to the man who will build houses a tax exemption for 10 years on the new buildings constructed. The man who will build a 1-family house has this exemption, and the man who builds a 50-family house. That exemption extends until April 1, 1922; and it has brought about a temporary revival of building.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I suppose they build them hoping that this rent law will be repealed, and they will still get the benefit of the tax exemption.

Mr. CALDER. As I understand, the rent law runs for two years more—

Mr. POINDEXTER. Until 1922?

Mr. CALDER. Until 1922, while the tax exemption extends for 10 years on all houses begun before April 1, 1922.

I thank the Senator.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, the same identical situation has resulted from the enactment of this law in the District of Columbia. We are confronted here with the curious spectacle that the advocates of this legislation, after it has been in force ever since 1919, come in and say that there is a deplorable condition existing in the city of Washington with reference to rentals, that they are too high, that people can not obtain houses, and tell harrowing tales about the suffering of families because of the inability to obtain places in which to live; and it never seems to have occurred to them that the reason why that condition exists so long after the war and after so many people have left the city, when we ought to have returned to normal conditions, is the existence of this very law.

Mr. GOODING. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CARAWAY in the chair). Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. GOODING. Does not the Senator understand that in this country there is not much competition in any line anywhere; that there are combinations in all lines of business, everywhere, in every State of the Union? Out in my own State I know that the drug stores are in a combination, and the same condition exists all over the country. We are not living in the days of 1776, by any means.

Mr. POINDEXTER. No.

Mr. GOODING. We are living in an age when everything is organized. Organization exists everywhere, in restraint of trade and everything else, so far as that is concerned. Those are the conditions that you have to meet, and you have to meet them in the District of Columbia. There is no difference here—a little more of it here, in my opinion, if anything, so far as combinations are concerned.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I am not in favor of meeting them by the Ball Rent Act.

Mr. GOODING. I think that is the only way you can meet them.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I heard the Senator say that, and I agree with him as to the existence of abuses everywhere, of one kind or another; but the mere pointing out of economic ills and economic abuses is no argument in favor of this law. I am talking about this law. I do not dispute with the Senator the existence of abuses. They always have existed. You can not pick up a page of history in any period of the world without finding there an account of the miseries of mankind. They always have existed and they always will. This idea that you can make everybody happy and everybody prosperous by passing laws interfering with private property has long ago been exploded and disproved by the experience of mankind.

That is what the Russians thought. They tried the principle of looting private property, merging it all in what they called the public interest, and the consequence is that Russia has been destroyed. It will not be restored in 150 years, if it ever will be, to the position it occupied before the reign of the communists.

Mr. GOODING. It was the selfishness of the ruling classes in Russia that destroyed Russia. It produced anarchy. Selfishness and greed always breed anarchy, and together they destroy civilizations, and that is what is the matter with Russia today. It was the selfishness of the ruling classes there. They did not interfere very much with property rights. They interfered with the interests of the common people.

Mr. POINDEXTER. They did not? They not only interfered with property rights, but they interfered with family rights.

Mr. GOODING. They have since the bolshevists came into control.

Mr. POINDEXTER. They have taken wives from their husbands, and they have taken children from their parents; and I noticed the other day that one result of this beautiful principle of communism is that some officer of the soviet government—I think his name was Tchitcherin—in great glee was getting a good deal of comfort and satisfaction out of the starvation of 20,000,000 of his fellow citizens in consideration of the fact that they could not support their children, and would have to turn them over to the soviet government. That has been one of the results of the kind of alleged remedy by the destruction of private rights toward which this bill leads. The last condition is far worse than the first.

I know all about meeting this kind of argument in the discussion of a question of this kind. I have heard it on all hands, when in some great measure of government people propose to tear down the essential principles upon which the Government is founded, because they point out that wheat is selling low and flour high. That is not the question. The question is whether the remedy is not worse than the disease.

Mr. GOODING. Not at all.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I think it is. The Senator was just saying a while ago that the conditions here in the District of Columbia in the way of rentals are very bad.

Mr. GOODING. I think they have been serious, and are still serious, and I do not think they can be remedied otherwise than by control.

Mr. POINDEXTER. You can not remedy them by the nationalization of private property any more than you can make a prosperous and happy state by the nationalization of children.

Mr. GOODING. I do not hold that the Ball Act tends to do things of that kind. It merely prevents these people who would take exorbitant rents from doing so, and compels them to be fair and reasonable in their rentals; that is all.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I do not want to be rude to the Senator—something I occasionally suffer myself—but I must say that the Senator has decidedly a different conception of the Ball Act from that which I have, and it would be based upon a much sounder ground if it did not go any further than that which the Senator from Idaho claims. It would be bad and vicious, in my opinion, then, in the absence of a great public emergency, if it only had the effect of regulating rents.

But that is not the chief objection to this bill. The chief objection to it goes further than that, and is based on the ground that it takes away from a man a house which he does not want to rent at all for any purpose, and gives it to another man. That is not a regulation of rents; that is a seizure of private property. That is allowing one man to occupy a house when its owner wants to use it himself for some other purpose.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, a railroad company owned by the stockholders of the railroad can withhold a railroad car because it does not want to rent it to a person who desires to rent it.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The Senator says it can?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes; and the Senator must admit that if the property referred to here is clothed with a public interest his argument falls to the ground.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The Senator and I went over that a while ago, and I thought we had settled that. He assumes it is clothed with a public interest, and my whole argument is that it is an invasion of private property.

Mr. LENROOT. If it is not clothed with a public interest, no one disagrees with the argument the Senator makes.

Mr. POINDEXTER. That is fortunate; I am glad to hear that.

Mr. LENROOT. I have not heard anyone in this debate disagree with the Senator, if it is not clothed with a public interest.

Mr. SHORTTRIDGE. Does the Senator from Wisconsin contend, as a matter of law, that the use and control or dominion over a private residence can be impressed with a public use, and that, being thus impressed, Congress can control the matter? Is that the contention?

Mr. LENROOT. No; not at all. My contention has been and is that if there is a letting of property within the District of Columbia, under the circumstances which have existed, that letting of property is clothed with a public interest, and is therefore subject to regulation.

Mr. SHORTTRIDGE. That would apply to a private residence?

Mr. LENROOT. If it is offered for rent, certainly.

Mr. SHORTTRIDGE. Owned by one man, who owns one cottage of three rooms?

Mr. LENROOT. The Supreme Court has so held in this decision.

Mr. SHORTTRIDGE. We disagree, of course.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I disagree with the Senator from Wisconsin, too.

Mr. LENROOT. We can not disagree upon that proposition.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Oh, yes; I disagree with the Senator.

Mr. LENROOT. Because the Ball Act was held constitutional upon that express ground.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I disagree with the fundamental proposition that under the conditions existing here in the District of Columbia to-day, Congress, by a mere ipse dixit, can attach a public character to a private dwelling house.

Mr. LENROOT. I do not contend that for a moment.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I contend that is what this bill does.

Mr. LENROOT. In answer to the Senator from California, I state that if the facts upon which the constitutionality of this act is based were to-day as they were at the time of the decision of the Supreme Court, then the letting of these buildings was clothed with a public use.

Mr. SHORTTRIDGE. I do not agree with that conclusion, with great respect for the learning of the Senator. I take the position—and if I wished to elaborate, I think I could maintain it—

Mr. POINDEXTER. I wish the Senator would elaborate on it.

Mr. SHORTTRIDGE (continuing). That that very act, namely, the Ball Act, was upheld by the Supreme Court upon the theory, whether expressed or not, that the legislation was the exercise of a war power.

Mr. LENROOT. Oh, no; I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I am stating what I conceive to be the philosophy of that decision.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I agree with the Senator.

Mr. LENROOT. I would like to have the Senator from California point out one single line in the decision of the Supreme Court which sustains the contention he now makes.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. In reply to the Senator, and I repeat myself, whether it is so stated in the opinion or not, the power of Congress to pass that law sprang out of its war power under the Constitution. It was in aid of the successful carrying on of the war, even as those acts giving to the Secretary of War the power to do away with the selling of liquor within a certain district around Army posts, or the doing away with houses of ill fame within a certain district, were upheld upon that theory; and that is the philosophy of the decision of the case involving the Ball Rent Act.

Mr. LENROOT. I am sure, if the Senator has carefully read the decision he can not come to that conclusion. Let me read the paragraph which is the heart of that decision:

The general proposition to be maintained is that circumstances have clothed the letting of buildings in the District of Columbia with a public interest so great as to justify regulation by law.

That is the heart of this decision. It has nothing to do with the war power. It does not rest upon the war power. All in the world the war had to do with this decision was that the Supreme Court took judicial notice of the existence of the war, which was declared in the Ball Act to be the cause of the emergency, and therefore it did not inquire further, and assumed that these conditions did follow the war; but it was the condition here in the District of Columbia which clothed this matter with a public interest, and the war with Germany had nothing to do with it so far as any exercise of any war power was concerned. Such power as we had was exercised under the authority given us in the Constitution over the District of Columbia, under the police power. At the same time that decision was handed down, as the Senator knows, a like decision was handed down sustaining like legislation in the State of New York.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, the Senator from Wisconsin, as an experienced lawyer, knows that every decision of a court is to be interpreted under the circumstances under which it was rendered, and he can not deny that the circumstances existing at the time of the original enactment of the Ball Act were created by the war and that the Supreme Court so found; and consequently that the decision must be interpreted in that light and rests upon that ground. What the court would do under other circumstances or conditions, we do not know. We have to take it for what it is worth; in other words, to take the case which was before the court and not some other case.

Mr. LENROOT. I want to ask the Senator, in order to get his view clearly in mind, to assume that exactly the same conditions were created by some other cause than the War with Germany; and assume that was admitted—

Mr. POINDEXTER. It could not be.

Mr. LENROOT. Does the Senator think the decision would have been any different?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Yes; I do. I am satisfied it would have been different, even if such a condition were possible. But it would be impossible to have such a condition which existed at that time, except in time of war. We could not possibly have it, because existence of the war and the concentration of the powers and resources of the Government upon winning it were the central facts in that case, and if you remove them you remove the essential circumstance upon which, in my opinion—and even under those circumstances by a majority of only one—that court sustained the exercise of congressional power. Without that vital element, I am satisfied there would not have been a majority of one in the court sustaining such an action as that in time of peace, whatever the conditions might have been.

Mr. LENROOT. Let me ask the Senator to assume that one individual owned all the houses and apartments in Washington and proposed to increase rentals 500 per cent. Does the Senator think that legislation of this character would be sustained if that were admitted?

Mr. POINDEXTER. If there were a combination?

Mr. LENROOT. If one man owned it all.

Mr. POINDEXTER. That is a mighty far-fetched hypothetical case.

Mr. LENROOT. No; it goes to the question of power.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Undoubtedly Congress would have no power to take property from one and give it all to another private citizen. But, to come back to the same principle to which I referred in discussing the matter with the Senator from Idaho [Mr. Gooding], we have undertaken to deal with monopolies, extortions, and combinations in restraint of trade by other means entirely.

Mr. LENROOT. Yes; but we have not succeeded, and our power is not limited, in fact. The Senator knows that in this very decision one of the grounds upon which this act was sustained was the tendency to monopolize "in comparatively few hands," using the language of the Supreme Court, this matter of the rental of buildings.

Mr. POINDEXTER. And that tendency to monopolize in comparatively few hands, assuming that it existed, was important, and justified the action of Congress, in the opinion of the majority of the court, because we were engaged in war. Conditions in time of peace would have been very different and would have been dealt with in a very different way.

Mr. LENROOT. Does the Senator think, if the same monopoly existed, we would be powerless in time of peace to enact such legislation?

Mr. POINDEXTER. No; I never said that at all. If we cared to go to the extent of taking the property of the monopoly and giving it to others, possibly Congress would have the power to do so. But this act is not confined to alleged monopolists. The hypothesis which the Senator makes is so far from the actual situation in the District of Columbia that it is scarcely worth while to deal with it. What I am contending now is that a mere ipse dixit of Congress that such a condition existed would have no effect at all.

Mr. LENROOT. I agree with the Senator.

Mr. POINDEXTER. And that the enactment of this law without a condition which would justify it would be invalid.

Mr. LENROOT. I again agree with the Senator.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Notwithstanding the fact that Congress may assume that the condition exists.

Mr. LENROOT. I agree with the Senator on both statements.

Mr. POINDEXTER. That is all that is necessary for the purpose of the discussion of this case. I still insist upon the further proposition that there never should be any power—and I agree with Chief Justice White and his associates in the dissenting opinion—that as a remedy for that condition private property can not be seized and bestowed upon another person, and I do not believe that element of the case was considered by the Supreme Court. I do not find any reference to it in the decision. I doubt very much whether it was called to their attention. Of course, it is immaterial whether it was or not, but in discussing the principles of it that is very interesting. They dealt with the legislation as an act for the regulation of rentals. If you pass a law saying that no man shall rent a house or an apartment for more than a certain amount, to be fixed by a commission, that would be a very different law from this act.

Mr. LENROOT. Does not the Senator think it is safer in the enactment of legislation to follow the decision of the majority of the Supreme Court rather than to follow dissenting opinions?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Yes, I certainly do; and that is why I am calling attention to the fact that the majority of the Supreme Court have never held—

Mr. LENROOT. Were wrong?

Mr. POINDEXTER. No; I was not going to say that. I have been assuming all through this argument that the majority opinion was right. But the reasons advanced by the minority may be regarded by Congress in the establishment of a policy. That is all there is about that.

So far as following the majority of the court is concerned, there is not anything in the decision of the majority of the court in conflict with the position I am taking here. On the contrary, throughout I have insisted, and did a moment ago in argument with the Senator from Wisconsin, that the majority of the court acted upon a case arising out of war, and the objection which I have to this bill and to legislation of this kind is that it is an improper invasion of private rights in time of peace, a very different thing from the exercise of the war power.

For the purpose of determining whether or not it is good policy for Congress to enact this legislation, I might call attention to the argument of the Chief Justice in that case, not at all, as the Senator said, preferring the minority opinion to the majority opinion, but because it is cogent and pertinent for the consideration of Congress, as the opinion of any authority would be, in determining how it should exercise its discretion, assuming that the condition exists which is asserted by the proponents of this bill, and which I deny, but which we will assume for the purpose only of this argument. He said:

The statute in the present case is denominated "the rent law," and its purpose is to permit a lessee to continue in possession of leased premises after the expiration of his term against the demand of his landlord and in direct opposition to the covenants of the lease so long as he pays the rent and performs the conditions as fixed by the lease or as modified by a commission created by the statute.

That is where the Chief Justice showed the keenness of his discernment of the facts in the case at once. In his very first expression he goes to the very heart of the objections to this bill and perceives that it was not a law merely for the regulation of rentals, but it was a law which authorized the lessee to retain the possession of property after his contract had expired, although he had no right by contract or by law, except for this law, to continue in its possession.

Continuing the Chief Justice said:

This is contrary to every conception of leases that the world has ever entertained and of the reciprocal rights and obligations of lessor and lessee.

As already declared, the provisions of the Constitution seem so direct and definite as to need no reinforcing words and to leave no other inquiry than does the statute under review come within their prohibition. It is asserted that the statute has been made necessary by the conditions resulting from the "Imperial German war." The thought instantly comes that the country has had other wars with resulting embarrassments, yet they did not induce the relaxation of constitutional requirements nor the exercise of arbitrary power. Constitutional restraints were increased, not diminished. However, it may be admitted that the conditions presented a problem and induced an appeal for Government remedy. But we must bear in mind that the Constitution is, as we have shown, a restraint upon government, purposely provided and declared upon consideration of all the consequences of what it prohibits and permits, making the restraints upon government the rights of the governed.

Then, omitting a portion of the opinion, I continue the reading. After calling attention to the fact that the Chief Justice points out that it was the existence of the war upon which the decision of the majority was based, he said:

The facts of this litigation point the warning. Recurring to them, we may ask—Of what concern is it to the public health or the operations of the Federal Government as to who shall occupy a cellar and a room above it for business purposes in the city of Washington?—(the question in this case); and why is it the solicitude of the police power of the State of New York to keep from competition an apartment in the city of New York?—(the question in the other case). The answer is to supply homes to the homeless. It does not satisfy. If the statute keeps a tenant in, it keeps a tenant out; indeed, this is its assumption. Its only basis is that tenants are more numerous than landlords and that in some way this disproportion, it is assumed, makes a tyranny in the landlord, and an oppression to the tenant, notwithstanding the tenant is only required to perform a contract entered into, not under the statute, but before the statute, and that the condition is remedied by rent fixing—value adjustment—by the power of the Government. And this, it is the view of the opinion, has justification because "space in Washington is limited" and "housing is a necessary of life." A causative and remedial relation in the circumstances we are unable to see. We do see that the effect and evil of the statute is that it withdraws the dominion of property from its owner, superseding the contracts that he confidently made under the law then existing and subjecting them to the fiat of a subsequent law.

If such exercise of Government be legal, what exercise of Government is illegal? Houses are a necessary of life, but other things are as necessary. May they, too, be taken from the direction of their owners and disposed of by the Government? Who supplies them, and upon what inducement? And when supplied may those who get them under promise of return, and who had no hand or expense in their supply, dictate the terms of retention or use, and be bound by no agreement concerning them?

Then proceeding in a different part of the opinion he said:

What were the rights and obligations in the present case and what was the right of Hirsh to control his property? Hirsh is the purchaser of a lot in the city of Washington; Block is the lessee of the lot, and he agreed that at the end of his tenancy he would surrender the premises, and this and "each and every one of the covenants, conditions, and agreements" he promised to "keep and perform." Hirsh at the end of the term demanded possession. It was refused, and against this suit to recover possession there was pleaded the statute. The defense prevailed in the trial court: the statute was declared unconstitutional in the court of appeals. It is sustained by the decision just announced.

It is manifest, therefore, that by the statute the Government interposes with its power to annul the covenants of a contract between two of its citizens and to transfer the uses of the property of one and vest them in the other.

That is a very accurate statement of the operation of this statute.

The interposition of a commission is but a detail in the power exerted—not extenuating it in any legal sense. Indeed, intensifies its illegality; takes away the right to a jury trial from any dispute of fact.

If such power exist, what is its limit and what its consequences? And by consequences we do not mean who shall have a cellar in the city of Washington or who shall have an apartment in a million-dollar apartment house in the city of New York, but the broader consequences of unrestrained power and its exertion against property, having example in the present case, and likely to be applied in other cases. This is of grave concern. The security of property, next to personal security against the exertions of Government, is of the essence of liberty. They are joined in protection, as we have shown, and both the National Government (fifth amendment) and the States (fourteenth amendment) are forbidden to deprive any person "of life, liberty, or property without due process of law," and the emphasis of the fifth amendment is that private property can not be "taken for public use without just compensation."

He might have added that it could not be taken for private use with or without compensation.

And in recognition of the purpose to protect property and the rights of its owner from governmental aggression, the third amendment provides, "No soldier shall in time of peace be quartered in any house without the consent of the owner, nor in time of war but in a manner to be prescribed by law."

There can be no conception of property aside from its control and use, and upon its use depends its value.

Reading further from the views of Chief Justice White:

There is not a contention made in this case that this court has not pronounced untenable. An emergency is asserted as a justification of the statute and the impairment of the contract of the lease. A like contention was rejected in Ex parte Milligan (4 Wall., 2). It is there declared (p. 120) "that the principles of constitutional liberty would be in peril, unless established by unrepeatable law." And it was said that "the Constitution of the United States is a law for rulers and people equally in war and in peace and covers with the shield of its protection all classes of men at all times and under all circumstances. No doctrine, involving more pernicious consequences, was ever invented by the wit of man than that any of its provisions can be suspended during any of the great exigencies of government."

I wish to call that to the attention of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] who has so ably advocated that view of the Constitution.

Turning a moment from the remarks of the Chief Justice, commenting, as he does, upon the invasion of private property, I wish to call attention to the rather curious circumstance that despotism and socialism go hand in hand—curious because great multitudes of people seek further freedom or new freedom, as they call it, proposing communistic or socialistic legislation, the invasion of private property, the overthrow of constitutional guaranty, as a means of progress. It is quite enlightening to call attention to the fact that in the greatest military despotism that has ever been developed, carefully built up through a period of 40 years, in the Imperial German Government before the war, there went hand in hand military autocracy and widespread State socialism.

This is not the way toward that happiness of the people which was followed by our fathers, or to remedy economic ills in order to bring about a desirable condition in the District of Columbia or in any State. Strike down the Constitution, and greater ills inevitably result than any of those we are trying to remove.

Then during the war when one of our allies made a treacherous peace, betraying the people of the United States, selling out to the German Government and making a false treaty at Brest Litovsk, and during the period when that sort of thing and the doctrines of bolshevism were being encouraged in this country, eulogies were delivered upon those men who had betrayed their allies and left us in the midst of the war, and made this peace with our enemies. They established their government upon the basis of communism in the name of prosperity and the comfort of the people. What was the result? The bloodiest despotism that the world has ever seen. There is no compatibility between socialism and liberty. They can not exist together.

Mr. GOODING. Mr. President, does the Senator compare with the Ball Act those acts of tyranny that existed in Russia for hundreds of years? Is that the construction he places upon it?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Exactly. It was one of the worst tyrannies—

Mr. GOODING. I can not discuss the question with the Senator at all if that is the way he looks at it. I think it is trying to protect the rights of the people here, one of the great acts of a great Government that does not work any hardship on the landlords.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I have not any particular desire to get into a controversy with the Senator from Idaho. I respect his opinions, and if he desires to debate the question, I am very glad to debate it with him in a friendly way.

He referred to the act of a great Government. Did they not have a great government during all these periods of Russian autocracy to which he has referred, one of the greatest governments—so far as power over its people was concerned—the world has ever seen, and yet one of the causes of its downfall was its absolute disregard of the rights of its citizens.

Mr. GOODING. Surely the Senator does not compare the tyranny of Russia with this great Government of ours, with all its freedom and its liberty. I wish to say to the Senator that the people who are paying half or more than half of their earnings for rent will not have much respect for the Constitution if the selfishness of this country is going to hide behind it all the time.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Does not the Senator pay any attention to the rights that he has to his house?

Mr. GOODING. Absolutely.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Does not the Senator think the people who live in the District of Columbia have just as much right to their houses as he has to his?

Mr. GOODING. They have a right to be protected in their rights, of course, and we are trying to protect them in their rights.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The Senator believes we have the right and the liberty to take a house away from one man and give it to another. Can the Senator point out anything under the rule of the czars worse than that?

Mr. GOODING. The Senator can not find a single act on the part of the commission which bordered on tyranny. A spirit of fairness has been exhibited all the way through, as the Senator will find if he will read the hearings and see what the commission accomplished.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The commissioners are very patriotic public servants, I know; I can readily understand their anxiety to continue in office seven months longer at $5,000 a year and get an attorney at $5,000, and have a secretary at $3,000 a year; but I am not condemning the commission. I have no doubt that they are very highly respectable and patriotic citizens and conscientious public officials. The commission, however, has no authority to set aside the provisions of the law, and it provides that if a tenant is occupying a piece of property he can continue to occupy it after his lease has expired if he pays the rental which is fixed by the commission.

Mr. BALL. And complies with the other conditions of the lease.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Yes; and if he complies with the other conditions of the lease after the lease shall have expired.

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me to prefer a request for unanimous consent?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield to the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. BALL. I send to the desk and ask to have read a request for unanimous consent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the request.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. The Senator from Delaware [Mr. BALL] proposes the following unanimous-consent agreement:

It is agreed by unanimous consent that after the hour of 2 o'clock p. m. on Monday, August 15, 1921, no Senator shall speak more than once or longer than 10 minutes upon the bill (S. 2131) to extend for the period of seven months the provisions of Title II of the food control and the District of Columbia rents act, approved October 22, 1919, and for other purposes.

Mr. POINDEXTER. If the Senator will substitute Tuesday for Monday in his request I shall not object to it.

Mr. LENROOT. I suggest to the Senator that he change it to 3 o'clock on Monday.
